MR. EDITOR: Nehemiah says (xlii, 10, 11:) "And I perceived that the portions of the Levites had not been given them; for the Levites and the singers that did the work were fled every one to his field. Then contended I with the rulers and said, Why is the house of God forsaken?" In every enterprise, on land or sea or air, laborers are necessary, and the laborer must be paid, for the "laborer is worthy of his hire." You see giant cities, under the carpenter's hand, rise to heaven; ocean steamers, under the sailor's, plow the billows; magnetic messages flashing from pole to pole under the skillful hand of the telegraph operator—you have seen all this, and your have seen them paid their just wages too; but just suppose; for a moment, that you stop their hard-earned wages or dole them out a scanty pittance, and I tell you your cities will soon be a wilderness, the ocean will soon be shipless, and your telegraph a bare line of decaying wood; and the workmen fleeing from such unpaid fields would cross mountains, prairies and deserts in search of wages. Turning their backs on civilization, they would hunt with the Bushman for his prey, or the Indian for a portion of his buffalo or bear. Professing to live in a land of civilization, refinement and ease, where the iron horse thunders, where the telegraph stretches, where the school dots the hill and the church towers to heaven; where almost every one professes some faith in God, and very few are avowed infidels, have we not considered, have we not read: "Take heed that thou forsake not the Levite so long as thou shalt live upon the earth."—Deuteronomy xii, 19.

Hezekiah commanded the people to give the portion of the priests and the Levites, that they might be encouraged in the law of the Lord.—Second Chronicles xxxi, 4.

Jesus said: "The workman is worthy of his meat."—Matthew x, 10. Paul said (First Corinthians ix, 11, 13, 14:) "If we have sown unto you spiritual things, is it a great thing if we reap your carnal things? Do ye not know that they which wait at the altar are partakers with the altar? Even so hath God ordained that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel." (See verses 4-9.) Galatians vi, 6: "Let him that is taught in the word communicate to him that teacheth in all good things."

I have thus been particular in quoting these passages of Scripture in order to convince church-members that it is as much their duty to pay the minister they employ as it is his duty to preach; that they commit as great a sin in failing to pay him as he does in failing to feed them with the word of God; that if they will not pay him, it is his right and duty to labor at tent-making, farming, merchandising, the practice of medicine or any other pursuit by which he may gain an honorable living for himself and family. I have seen the church of God moving onward and forward like some beautiful vessel over the dark blue waters—the shouts of the redeemed have ascended to heaven, and the long-lost prodigal has returned to his father's bosom; the man of God, with a joyous heart and contented mind, has directed the church like an earthly pilot, when lo! I see brekers ahead, in miserable covetousness saying: "Ministers should not preach for money." Stinginess: "I am not able to give anything." Meanness: "We can't pay him what we agreed." Oh, how the noble vessel staggers and falls as these miserable breakers beat in her sides! Oh, how patiently, tearfully, prayerfully the man of God struggles against destruction! But alas! sometimes in vain. The vessel strikes. Stinginess prevails over godliness, the church is a miserable wreck, and the minister, with a heavy heart, an empty pocket and a poverty-stricken family, looks for bread elsewhere.

Who would not rather a thousand times proclaim the gospel from the seven hills of Rome, unthanked though he was; to the red man, like John Elliot, though threatened for his message; or even cross the ocean, and, amidst desert sands and burning heat, declare the goodness of God to the Arabs, and have wild dates for his food—the best the poor Arab could give him—and heaven, a glorious heaven, at last for his home, than to have no thanks and no reward from a church.

Launched at Last.

Have you ever walked through a picture gallery and fixed your eye upon one particular picture, and tried to think of all that went on before it came to hang up there so still and quiet, as if it had always been there? Did you not make a picture to yourself, in your own mind, of how the artist first thought of his subject? Then he sketched it; then he painted it, bit by bit, over and over again, hour after hour, week after week.

Then did you think of his doubts as to what people would think of it? whether they would understand what he meant to say by it? whether he should ever see it where he wished to see it? till at length, after wakeful nights and laboring days, the picture hung indeed on the exhibition-walls. It was launched at last.

Have you ever watched a ship being built? Have you seen timber after timber, and plank after plank, laid one upon the other? How exactly each must fit into its neighbor! How careful the master must be that there are no flaws! How slowly the work grows, as month by month passes away! But it is done now; the water is let in; and, with one plunge into its native element, the noble ship is launched at last.

Well, I doubt whether painter or ship-builder had half the anxious thoughts of Tom Cheesman over his boat; and, now that it was fairly launched at last upon the make-believe sea of his mother's washing-tub, the triumph of either of them could hardly have been greater than his. How long it had taken him! How eagerly he had worked at it in his play-hours, scooping it out with his knife—all himself! What consultations he and Jem had had together as to the best place for the launch! The matter was so difficult to decide, it had nearly ended in a quarrel. The pond in the field was so shallow, Tom had serious doubts whether she (as he always called his boat) would ever get afloat at all; or, if she did, whether she might not be stranded directly. There was the water-butt; but it was so high to clamber up to it, the ceremony would be rather wanting in effect. But mother's washing-tub seemed a bright idea. It was not often used on a Saturday; and, that being the children's holiday, things would fit in nicely.

So the washing-tub, instead of clothes and soap-suds, was filled with clear spring-water, and had the privilege of representing the ocean. The sisters were called together as spectators; and the bellows were reached down from the peg in the corner to supply the breeze to fill the sails.

And was there ever a more honored washing-tub, or a happier company, or a more successful ship-launch?

Ah! it puts me in mind of how we are all of us launched, not on a still and quiet pool, but on a wide and stormy ocean. If you only knew how stormy, you would tremble to think how your weak vessel is ever to get to the other side; for there is a shore where, strange to say, there is no more sea to toss and roar, and never a storm to ruffle the clear bright summer air.—The Life-Boat.

"WE SHALL EAT THE FRUIT."—A blacksmith had in his possession, but under mortgage, a house and piece of land. Like many others, he was at one time fond of the social glass, but was happily induced by a friend to join the temperance society. About three months after he observed his wife one morning busily employed planting rose-bushes and fruit-trees.

"Mary," said he, "I have owned this cot for five years, and yet I have never known you before to care to improve and ornament it in this manner."

"Indeed," replied the smiling wife, "I had no heart to do it until you gave up the drink. I had often thought of it before, but I was persuaded that, should I do it, some strangers would pluck the roses and eat the fruit. Now, with God's blessing, this cot will be ours, and we and our children may expect to enjoy the produce. We shall pluck the roses and eat the fruit."

A SCOTCH LAW LORD was seated one day on the hillside of Boually with a Scotch shepherd, and, observing the sheep reposing in what he thought the coldest situation, he observed to him: "John, if I were a sheep I would lie on the other side of the hill." The shepherd answered: "Ay, my loard, but if ye had been a sheep ye wad have had mair sense."

THE value of life is only realized in the knowledge and service of God.

OBITUARIES.

DIED, at her residence in Clarke county, Alabama, on the fifteenth of March, 1873, Sister MARGARET I. MCVEY, daughter of John and Nancy Steward, whose parental roof she had only left about twelve months before to become the companion of Matthew Y. McVey.

When about fifteen or sixteen years of age she professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South, which she ever adorned afterward by her well-ordered walk and godly conversation. Notwithstanding her illness was long and painful, she surely bore it with Christian-like fortitude and patience. She made her home lovely by her amiable disposition. Therefore she expressed a desire that her life might be prolonged, yet was ever ready to submit to the will of God, often saying she was not afraid to die. With this submissive will she fell asleep in the arms of Jesus. Then weep not, husband, mother, brother and sisters, as those who have no hope. Imitate her examples, so that when you shall have crossed the stormy waters of Jordan you may meet her where parting shall be no more forever.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

The following preamble and resolutions were passed by the first Quarterly Conference of Lind Grove circuit, April 5, 1873. The names of Bros. R. J. KNOX and W. J. CHESHIRE being called—they having been removed from the conference by death—Rev. T. H. McClendon was appointed a committee of one to draft a suitable preamble and resolutions expressive of the sense of the conference.

WHEREAS, God's ways are not as our ways, nor his thoughts as our thoughts, and as he is mysterious to us in the mode of his existence, so is he in the administration of his providences; and while we believe "the steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord," yet his death is sometimes so sudden as to render the whole inscrutable; and as it has pleased him to remove from our midst by death (January, 1873) Bro. R. J. Knox and (March 20, 1873) Bro. W. J. Cheshire, who were members of this body; therefore,

Resolved, That while we bow with humble submission to the will of almighty God, yet are our hearts smitten and we deeply deplore our loss, while we rejoice to believe that God has said to them: "It is enough; come up higher."

Resolved, That by the death of Bros. Knox and Cheshire our church and this Quarterly Conference have sustained a great loss; yet are we glad to cherish their memory and devotedness to Christ as the greatest legacy they could have bequeathed to us.

Resolved, That the families and relatives of the deceased have our heartfelt sympathies in the great loss which they have sustained and the deep affliction they suffer, praying that the blessings of God may rest upon and his grace sustain them.

Resolved, That a copy of the above be furnished the families of the deceased, and one also sent to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

JOEL T. DAVES, P. E.
L. N. RENWICK, Sec.

HENRY D. HOLMES, Sr., was born in Franklin county, North Carolina, August 6, 1801, and died, at his residence in Autauga county, Alabama, March 4, 1873.

Bro. Holmes removed from North Carolina, when about twenty-one years old, to Shelby county, Alabama. He lived there six or seven years, and then removed to Autauga county, where he spent the remainder of his life. In 1829 he was united in marriage with Miss Sarah W. Taylor, who from that time to the close of his earthly pilgrimage did all in her power to smooth the rough places in his pathway, and is now left to pursue her journey alone. The fruits of this marriage were ten children, five of whom preceded their father to the spirit-land, and, we trust, to heaven. Bro. Holmes became a member of the Methodist Church in 1831, and professed religion about two years afterward. In his religious character and conduct he was not as decided, positive and demonstrative as many are, and as perhaps he ought to have been. He did not take as active a part in church affairs as his abilities qualified him to take; and, while he admitted the duty of holding family prayer, he never discharged that duty. We wish he had taken a higher stand, and had come out more fully on the side of God and religion. He preferred, however, to move along a more quiet and unobtrusive path. He did "justly" in his dealings with his fellow-men, and "loved mercy" toward the unfortunate. His house was ever open to both friends and strangers. He often entertained travelers without charge. He was perhaps too generous for his own pecuniary interests. His house was the preacher's home. He was not free from infirmities, and perhaps faults; but over these we would throw the mantle of charity, and "let him that is without sin cast the first stone." When he came down to the river's brink, and had to bid adieu to earth and time, he left a dying testimony which enables his friends to cherish the hope that he has gone to the home of God's people, and that if they are faithful they shall be permitted to sing with him the "new song." W. A. MONTGOMERY.

DIED, at the residence of her son-in-law, Christian Miller, Esq., in Wilkinson county, Mississippi, Mrs. PAMELIA TABOR, relict of William Tabor, in her seventy-fifth year.

Mother Tabor was a native of Georgia. Her maiden name was Newton. She moved in childhood with her parents to Mississippi. About the age of twenty she joined the Methodist Church, and I think about the same time was married to William Tabor, Esq., whose name is familiar to the old Methodists of this region. She was a member of the church fifty-five years. She lived to see the children of her great grandchildren—"even to the fourth generation." Though death came stealthily by night, and without a noise, and before the watchers were aware, she was ready and waiting to go and be with the Lord, and to "be like him." She was of a meek and quiet spirit, and set a godly example before her family, who "rise up and call her blessed." She knew the power of love, and failed not generally to exercise it. During her wifehood she saw that she reverenced her husband, while she was the good angel that assisted him under temptations to be patient and to keep the faith. She had an uncommonly even temper. Her kind look was the severest rebuke to undue passion, and her soft answer would invariably turn away wrath.

The shock of corn was gathered ripe in its season. Most of her associates in the church had preceded her to the better land; a few only are waiting still. How delightful it must be for these scarred and war-worn heroes and heroines—these veterans of the cross—to reunite above and recount, amidst hallelujahs and praises, the battles of the past! How instructive to see them die! What an exhibition of the truth and its power to save to see it clung to after a half century's trial! We have a long list of their names hung on memory's walls. They are a large share of our inheritance. We love to call over the constantly-lengthening roll so familiar once, about which there is now a hush of death. There is a savor of life in their recollection, and we can almost call them to mind as we shall see them, radiant with the Savior's glory and full of his praises, in heaven.

THOS. W. BROWN.

IN MEMORIAM.

SUSIE EMILY WOOLSEY, daughter of B. M. Woolsey, Esq., and Mrs. Luelinda Woolsey, was born in Dallas county, March 31, 1850, and was educated at the "Centenary," where she graduated June 27, 1866. She professed faith in Christ, and united with the Methodist Church September 19, 1869. She was married to S. W. John, Esq., April 27, 1870, and died, at her residence in Selma, March 8, 1873.

These few dates and simple facts—the brief summary of the earthly history of one who has become immortal—though so soon recorded, are linked with memories that can never die, and give the epitome of a career brief but beautiful, the prelude of a joyful forever "in the sweet by-and-by." The death of this lovely young woman brings home to us, with great force, the truth that life in its best estate is but vanity—that we have time here only to say: "Hail and farewell." "Time, like an ever-rolling stream, bears all its sons away." Less than three short years have passed since the deceased stood at the bridal altar, in the beauty and loveliness of dawning womanhood, admired and congratulated by a crowd of friends assembled on the occasion. Many who read this brief tribute will vividly recall the joyousness and greetings of the occasion. To the eye of even discerning and inquiring friendship and affection, that sought the highest earthly blessings for its object, none had a brighter future in prospect. Beloved by a wide circle of friends, esteemed by the whole community for her many virtues and lovely qualities, the cherished idol of the home circle, bestowing her virgin affections upon one equally esteemed, who fully reciprocated them—one every way worthy of her highest regards—settling in the midst of her friends and kindred with every prospect of never knowing care or want, life and the world seemed to have little more to offer to complete her happiness. To graces of person, charms of disposition and virtues of heart—those lovable elements and traits that make up a character and life that commend themselves to all, and attract everybody to them—grace added its beautifying work, the highest finish of man or womanhood: an unostentatious and sincere piety. But alas! these and a thousand other joys and virtues, added to the affectionate solicitude of a devoted husband, and the tender assiduities of a doting mother, could furnish no immunities from the approach of disease and death. Though so well fitted by nature and grace to adorn and shed sunshine through the domestic and social circles, and though the center of affection there, the insatiate archer stole insidiously upon her, and, despite the prayers and tears of those who would have detained her, this beautiful life, radiant with hope and so full of promise, has been brought to a close, or rather merged in a higher—the Father of mercies has called her home. But "at the evening-time" it was "light." The affectionate tenderness that hardly dared to breathe the word "death" in the presence of the sick was joyfully surprised to find that neither the word nor the idea had any terrors for the gentle sufferer. The faith she had embraced and professed, and the grace it brought, proved equal to the demands of the dying hour. With her mind bright and clear to the last, perfectly conscious that she could live but a short time, she called to her bedside the loved ones and calmly bade them adieu, pledging each one of them to meet her in heaven, and only regretting that it was not the Father's will that they might go with her. Thus, with so much to live for and so much to bind her here, earth-ties were severed without a struggle or a groan, and softly as the wavelet dies upon the shore her young life ebbed out, and gently as the softest music quits the string her spirit left for immortality.

Creation In Genesis and Geology.

BY REV. D. A. WHEDON, D. D.

The two records of God's work in creation, as found in Scripture and in nature, cannot contradict each other. In this belief Christian scholars have heartily accepted both, never doubting that when they shall come to be rightly read and interpreted their entire harmony will appear, while the rationalistic school generally pronounce the difficulties to be so many and so great that their reconciliation is impossible. Few persons of intelligence can now be found who believe that in six literal days of twenty-four hours each the whole work of creation was accomplished, from the first calling of matter into existence to the placing-time of man. That God could in six days, or in one day, or instantly, have made the world as we find it, is certainly possible, but the evidences that he did not are multiplied, and the notion that he formed by his that the several systems of rocks with their imbedded fossil remains of plants and animals that never lived, belongs to a past generation.

Various hypotheses have been suggested for reconciling the first chapter of Genesis with the ascertained facts of geology, of which that is probably the most widely accepted which finds a parallel between the two, reckoning the six days of the one as identical with the vast and indefinite periods of the other. They who hold the agreement to be ideal rather than literal are compelled to a very free interpretation of the words of Moses; and while they are content with the substantial assertion that God produced his works in a certain succession, they would seem to have overlooked the remarkable precision and definiteness of the narrative. There is an exact order of succession in the works of the several days, and the days are carefully numbered, each having its appropriate work begun and finished, with no overlapping of one upon another.

But how do our geologists of the literal school succeed in their task at harmony? The first difficulty is to find the six great geologic periods, and it would be more easy to find a dozen than six. The great changes by which the earth became ultimately prepared for the abode of man were doubtless for the most part effected slowly, so that in defining the six periods we are obliged to sometimes divide them at ideal points rather than by lines of convulsion and widespread ruin. Moses' "days," on the other hand, are sharply defined. But, secondly, when they have arbitrarily distributed their periods, there is as yet a failure to make the stages of creative progress, as traced in the rocks, tally with the order given in Genesis. For instance, Moses tells us that plant life belongs to the third day, and animal life to the fifth and sixth; but Prof. Dana's scheme introduces both in the third period, as do also those of Profs. Hitchcock and Winchell, the last gentleman finding the Protozoan in the Laurentian rocks.

In the third period Prof. Dana finds life "introduced under its simplest forms;" and Prof. Winchell says that in it "sea-weeds appeared," and Prof. Hitchcock follows with the lowest orders of vegetation. But Moses expressly assigns to the third day the highest orders of land vegetation; "grass and herb-yielding seed, and the tree yielding fruit, whose seed is in itself." There is a wide difference between fruit-trees on dry land and marine plants. Moses puts the appearance of the sun and moon on the fourth day, a matter that Prof. Winchell alone of the three finds a place for, and he is compelled to it by Scripture, while Prof. Hitchcock substitutes for them the amphibians and fishes. According to Moses, animal life does not appear at all until the fifth day, to which birds and fishes belong, and land animals not until the sixth, the same day with man; but in the geological strata fishes flourish in the period preceding that of the bird-tracks and even of plants, animals and plants are called into being cotemporaneously, and "the animal and vegetable kingdoms go on in parallel progression through the rocky cycles; and their relative order of appearance is, if anything, rather the reverse of that given by Moses, while as little coincidence appears in the order of land and water products." These discrepancies are important, and show that our latest science has failed to bring itself into harmony with the account in Genesis.

Is there not, after all, a mistake in supposing that the Mosaic record was intended to present the same series of events which the geologist finds in the revelations of the rocks? May they not be accounts of different periods and different creations, and both be absolutely, literally true? Dr. Chalmers was the first to suggest that the six days' creation belongs to the present order of things, leaving ample space between the first and second verses for all the phenomena of geology, even though they filled the entire hundred millions of years which Dr. Thompson fixes as the longest allowable period since the original creation. And now, after the lapse of near seventy years, in which our scientific men have done their best to establish the identity of the geologic periods with the six days, and have not succeeded, it begins to look as though we shall be driven to full back upon the Restitution theory. It will then appear that there is a great similarity in the outlines of God's successive creations, indicating a uniformity in the divine plan from the beginning.

It is doubtful if Moses intended to outline the various geologic era from the birth of chaos to the creation of man. It would hardly have been consistent with his purpose to pause so long upon ages that had so little to do with his apparent design. His purpose was to record the law of God for his people, and Genesis is the simple introduction to his work. He would show that the God who claimed sovereignty over Israel was the God who originally brought the universe into being, who created the present races of vegetable and animal life, who delivered his law to Adam, and who had maintained his relations of supremacy over the world until the revelation from Sinai. Would it not be exceedingly consistent for him, after having asserted that God was the original Creator, to leap over all the revolutions preceding the last great cataclysm, and come at once to that which is most directly connected with human history? Again, the moral argument is of some weight. The fact that "in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day," is made a reason for our working six days and keeping sacred the seventh. There is a beauty and force in it if they be definite days; but who has not felt a sort of breaking down in the argument when it is made to mean that because God worked during six long, indefinite periods, probably of unequal length, and rested in the seventh, which is yet in progress, and equally indefinite, therefore a definite and exact one-seventh of our time is to be set apart as holy?

The first verse of Genesis, on this theory, asserts the bringing into existence of the whole universe. All that follows relates to our earth. Let geology tell us, if it can, what occurred between this verse and the second. There is ample room for its chaos, its strata, its creations, its successions of life and death, and its fossils. By some great catastrophe the earth was then once more thrown into fearful disorder; "and the earth had become a waste and a void, and darkness was upon the face of the deep; and the Spirit of God was brooding upon the face of the water."—Murphy. Thus it would have appeared to a spectator, when God took in hand the work of reconstruction as described in the third and following verses. On the first day he brought light into that dense darkness; on the second he reduced the turbid waters to order and established the expanse between the lifted clouds and the earth; on the third he brought the water on the earth into limits, made the dry land appear, and created grass, herbs and trees in full growth; on the fourth the sun and moon, which the chaos of the catastrophe had hidden, are made again to appear; on the fifth, fish and birds are created; and on the sixth, first, the land animals, and finally man. These are six days of twenty-four hours. The narrative is thus simple, clear and intelligible. It connects the vegetable and animal kingdoms with man. It does not conflict with the known facts of science, and after the second verse deals only with the present great geologic period.—New York Christian Advocate.

Are Missions a Failure?

There is one objection to missions which we are constantly compelled to: Why do they not succeed faster? Why the slow results from such vast expenditure of men and means? The very inquiry contains a logical fallacy. It is assumed that the results are meager. The assumption is a "begging the question." We are a frequent attendant at missionary services, and we must confess that too many of the sermons and addresses which we hear contain admissions that seriously compromise the popular support of our preachers in foreign fields. We hear it said that all evangelizing agencies succeed slowly at the outset; that our missionaries must have time; that their difficulties are very great, and that they can be overcome only by many long years of incessant toil.

The truth is, missions are successful. They may be tested by all the ordinary criteria, and it will be found that they do not suffer by comparison with any moral or purely secular enterprises. With the progress of mechanical science, political knowledge and esthetic culture, the missions of Protestantism have advanced with rapid strides, and are so securely planted in heathen countries that, if all support were withdrawn, they would in many cases be continued by the native ministry and membership alone. But to the facts. Missions to foreign and pagan lands were commenced at the beginning of the eighteenth century, and little Denmark, then much larger than now, deserves the credit of being the organizer of the first one. One century and three quarters, therefore, cover all the time that Protestant missionaries have been laboring for the evangelization of the pagan world. As to what has been done during this period, and particularly during the last few years, we will listen to the carefully-prepared statement of Rev. George Hood, who, in the Home and Abroad, gives a rapid survey of the entire field.

"The foreign field," he says, "for the past ten years has yielded more converts, in proportion to the labor expended, than the home field. Not much less than 300,000 Christian converts [illegible] 1,151,721, have renounced heathenism, and testify to the eminent success of Christian missions. In more than 300 islands of the Pacific, in Northern Turkey, in Persia, in Hindostan, in Burmah, in China, in Madagascar, South Africa, Liberia and Sierra Leone, a great multitude have been won to Christ. The largest church in the world, numbering 4,500 members, is in Hilo, on the island of Hawaii, not yet fifty years removed from the most debased savagelsm. Over 90,000 Fijians gather regularly for Sabbath worship who, within a score of years, feasted on human flesh. In 1860 Madagascar had only a few hundred scattered and persecuted converts. Now the Queen and her prime minister, with more than 200,000 of her subjects, are adherents to Christianity. The Island is Christian. Fifty years ago there was not a native Christian in the Friendly Islands. Now 30,000 regularly meet for worship, and $15,000 are yearly contributed to religious objects. On the western coast of Africa 'are found over 100 organized churches and some 15,000 converts. In Sierra Leone 50,000 civilized Africans worship God every Sabbath.' Two thousand miles of coast have been wrested from the slave-trade, and the church and school-house substituted for the slave-pen. In China, so recently opened to the gospel, missions have been established in forty walled cities and 360 villages, making a total of 400 stations and out-stations which constitute centers of Christian light and knowledge to regions adjacent. Over 400 native preachers have been raised up, who are constantly employed in preaching the gospel to their countrymen. About 10,000 converts have been received into the churches, of whom some have already gone home to be with Jesus, while some 7,000 are at present communicants."

This brief revital of the success of missions in heathen countries might be amplified to a great extent. The field is enlarging all the time, and calls are made for increased benefactions. Let there be no discouragement. Now that the hand is to the plow, let there be no looking back. By the end of this century, we fully believe, there will be triumphs far surpassing our most flattering anticipations. The revival spirit in some of the distant stations has already become intense, and we have reason to hope that it will pervade them all, and in time overspread the earth, reacting most wholesomely upon the countries and churches that now sustain this work.—New York Christian Advocate.

The Stuff that Dreams are Made of.

We find in an old medical journal an interesting compilation of accounts of remarkable dreams. Not all, nor nearly all dreams are produced by impressions made upon the mind during sleep, but this is a frequent exciting cause. A story is told of an officer on board a transport, whose companions could produce in him any kind of dream by whispering in his ear. They often amused themselves in this manner. Once they conducted him through the whole process of a quarrel which ended in a duel. When the parties were supposed to have met, a pistol was put in his hand, and he fired it off. The report awoke him. At another time they found him asleep on a locker, and made him believe that he must swim for his life. They then pretended that a shark was pursuing him, and he must dive. In attempting this he fell off the locker and woke up.

A physician, who was sleeping in a room that smelt strongly of cheese and was swarming with rats, dreamed that he was imprisoned for a political offense, in a huge cheese, that the cheese was attacked by an army of rats, and that the rats had begun to gnaw at him.

A young woman, who had the habit of sucking her thumb while asleep, tried to break herself by covering the thumb with aloes before she went to bed; when she awoke the aloes were all sucked off. She had dreamed that she was crossing the ocean in a steamer made of wormwood, with plates, dishes, chairs and everything of wormwood, and that there was a bitter smell all over the ship. There was so strong a bitter taste in her mouth that on her arrival at Havre she asked for a glass of water; but the attendant brought her an infusion of wormwood, which she gulped down. On her requesting a Paris physician to extract the wormwood from her body, he told her that the only remedy was oxgall, which he gave her by the pound. The bitter taste of the remedy was as bad as that of the wormwood; and to get rid of it she applied to the Pope, who told her that she must make a pilgrimage to the plain where the pillar of salt stood which was formerly Lot's wife, and must eat a piece of salt as large as her thumb. She reached the object of her journey, and then deliberated as to what part of the figure she should break off. The result was that, as she had a bad habit of sucking her thumb, she should break off and suck that part of the statue. On putting the broken fragment into her mouth she awoke and found that she was sucking her own thumb.

A Mr. Maury caused a series of experiments to be performed on himself when asleep, which afforded very satisfactory results.

First experiment: He caused himself to be tickled with a feather, on the lips and inside of the nostrils. He dreamed that he was subjected to a horrible punishment. A mask of pitch was applied to his face, and then torn roughly off, taking with it the skin of his lips, nose and face.

Second experiment: A pair of tweezers was held at a little distance from his ear, and struck with a pair of scissors. He dreamed that he heard the ringing of bells. This was soon converted into the tocsin, and this suggested the days of June, 1848.

Third experiment: A bottle of eau de Cologne was held to his nose. He dreamed that he was in a perfumer's shop. This excited visions of the East; and he dreamed that he was in Cairo, in the shop of Jean Marie Farina. Many [illegible] adventures occurred to him there, the details of which were forgotten.

Fourth experiment: A burning lucifer-match was held close to his nostrils. He dreamed that he was at sea (the wind was blowing in through the windows,) and that the magazine of the vessel blew up.

Fifth experiment: He was slightly pinched on the nape of the neck. He dreamed that a blister was applied. And this recalled the recollection of a physician who had treated him in his infancy.

Sixth experiment: A piece of red-hot iron was held close enough to him to communicate a slight sensation of heat. He dreamed that robbers had got into the house, and were forcing the inmates, by putting their feet to the fire, to reveal where their money was. The idea of the robber suggested that of Madam d'Abrantes, who, he supposed, had taken him for her secretary, and in whose memoirs he had read some account of bandits.—Methodist.

The Uses of the Spectroscope.

A very interesting series of papers has lately been published in Nature, on the "Spectroscope and its Applications." From them the lay reader may gain a clear understanding of the construction of the instrument and the methods of using it, and a marvelous revelation of what has been accomplished by its aid. The delicacy and accuracy of the spectroscope are truly wonderful. It will detect substances the existence of which was unsuspected under any other method of analysis, and which exist in an almost inconceivable degree of minuteness. Thus, if there is the eighteen-millionth part of a grain of sodium in any mixture to be examined, the spectroscope will find it. Sodium is almost invariably found in any flame burning in air, for every particle of dust is impregnated with it, in the form of salt. This is not to be wondered at, as two-thirds of the earth's surface is covered by sea, which contains a considerable amount of sodium salts, and the fine spray, which is continually caused by the dashing of the waves, evaporates and leaves minute specks of salt which, are carried over the whole land, and make themselves visible in our spectroscopes.

Lithium is a substance which was supposed to be very rare until this instrument told of its general diffusion. It is detected if the six-millionth part of a grain of it is present. Chemists formerly knew it to exist in only four minerals. It is now found almost everywhere—in the ashes of cigars, of milk, of blood, grapes, sugar, etc. The spectroscope will detect these substances not only when they exist in simple combinations, but also in any degree of complexity. It will find lithium when it is mixed with ten thousand times its bulk of sodium compounds.

The spectroscope has shown us several metals the existence of which was quite unknown before. With it Bunsen, in 1860, found cesium in the waters of a German mineral spring. Rubidium, thallium and indium were discovered in a similar way. Thallium is so named from the Greek word for a twig, on account of the beautiful green color of its single spectrum line.

The most important practical application which has yet been made of spectrum analysis is in the Bessemer process for making steel, in which the instant at which the process is finished is determined by observation of the spectrum lines, thus:

"Steel is only cast iron minus some carbon. It is clear, therefore, that the process depends upon getting rid of the carbon. How, then, can the spectroscope aid us in determining the time at which the carbon is got rid of? Nothing is more easy. The heat from the incandescent iron is so intense that the vapor of the different substances mixed with it is visible above the retort in which the metal is placed, and we get, so to speak, an atmosphere of incandescent vapor surrounding the cast iron. When we examine these incandescent vapors by means of a spectroscope it is found that the spectrum changes very considerably at different times during the combustion of this cast iron. Now it so happens that the process of conversion is such a delicate one that a mistake of ten seconds either way spoils the whole five tons which are being operated upon. You will see in a moment, therefore, that this is a case in which any rule-of-thumb or very rough method might now and then lead to a mistake; but when the spectrum of these incandescent vapors thrown out by the cast iron is examined very carefully by means of a spectroscope, it is found that at the first the spectrum of carbon is quite visible, but at the right moment, which has been found by practice, that spectrum disappears, the combustion having been sufficient. All we have to do now, to insure the charge being properly turned out, is, therefore, by means of the spectroscope, simply to watch certain lines in the spectrum, and when they show signs of disappearance say 'Now,' and the thing is done without any possibility of error."—Methodist.

NOT SUITED.—A Presbyterian minister was going out of church and there was a shower of rain falling outside, and the people were therefore detained at the doors, and did not pass out as rapidly as usual, and he said to a distinguished Baptist, who was walking out with him: "What is the reason of this delay?"

"I think," answered the other, "there is a shower outside."

"Ah!" answered the doctor, "there are quite a number of your persuasion here; they ought not to be afraid of the water."

"No," said the brother; "it is not the water, but the sprinkling that they are afraid of."

"Ah!" said the Presbyterian, "I know they are afraid of that; and yet it comes from heaven."

Religious Intelligence.

THE Baptists of Louisville, Kentucky, have organized a committee of women to labor for the evangelization of the German population of that city.

REV. DR. H. H. JESSUP, of the Syrian mission, [illegible] reports twenty-eight Sunday schools in that mission, comprising 893 scholars.

THE Colonial Church Chronicle says: "A missionary in Utah states that of the Mormons he found fifty-seven per cent. had belonged to the Church of England, eleven to the Methodists, and eight to Presbyterianism; only six per cent. had Mormon parents.

THREE MISSIONARIES and three teachers are connected with the Presbyterian Chinese mission in San Francisco. The mission also employs one Chinese preacher and one Chinese assistant teacher. During the past year four have been added to the church.

OVER $2,500 were contributed to the treasury of the Home Missionary Society last year from the Women's One Cent Societies of the New Hampshire churches. Some $6,000 have already been raised from this source, the interest of which goes to aid needy congregations in the State.

THE Methodist Recorder understands that the Wesleyan Missionary Society have had a prosperous and successful year. Although exact items cannot yet be furnished, it is ascertained that the income is the largest ever realized in one year from ordinary sources; the debt is cleared off, and the treasurers will have a balance in hand.

SINCE the great fire, Chicago's Swedish population has increased so rapidly that its church accommodation (Lutheran) proves wholly inadequate. Both ministers and meeting-houses are needed, and the question of supply is not readily solved. The three or four churches that have been rebuilt are flourishing, one of them having more than 1,200 communicants.

THE Old Testament revisers have finished their second revision of the Pentateuch. The Rev. Dr. Angus, one of the committee, said, in a recent speech, that at the present rates of progress the New Testament would be finished in seven years, and the Old Testament in twelve years. The New Testament revisers were at work at last advices upon the second chapter of the Acts.

FATHER HYACINTHE, in his second discourse at Geneva, attacked the modern practice of confession, which admitted the priest into the family, where the husband should be supreme. He instanced Belgium as an example of its abuse, where, through the influence of the confessional, the elections were determined by the priests. These sentiments were loudly applauded by his crowded audience.

THE statistics of the Wesleyan Methodist Society in Germany for 1872, as published in Der Methodisten Herald, are as follows: Number of halls and preaching places, 165; increase during the year, 9. Preachers, assistants and agents, 19; increase, 2. Local preachers and exhorters, 58; increase, 14. Sunday schools, 18; increase, 9. Sunday school teachers, 65; increase, 33. Sunday school scholars, 854; increase, 352. Full members, 1,895; increase, 88. Members on trial, 49; increase, 6. Hearers, 6,278; increase, 347.

THE Governor of Hang Chau, having discovered that the daughters of wealthy citizens were led into sin by nuns of the Buddhist faith in that city, determined to put a stop to the evil, and announced his intention to the Governor of the province of Che Kiang. The result has been that the Buddhist nunneries throughout the province are to be suppressed. The younger nuns are to be expelled, and no young girls taken hereafter to be trained as nuns. Older nuns left homeless may remain; but their worship is to cease, and the buildings hitherto occupied by the nuns are to be opened to beggars and cripples.

PROGRESS OF THE BIBLE REVISION. Prof. Day, of Yale College, a member of the American committee for the revision of the Bible, writes that they are working quietly but very steadily. The members meet in New York two days on the last week of every month for united study and consultation. The company on the Old Testament and that on the New meet in separate rooms. The British committee, who have already finished the first revision of the Pentateuch and the three first Gospels, furnish each member of the American companies with a printed copy of their work as fast as it progresses, and when the judgment of the American revisers on any further changes which they may propose shall be received in England, a provisional result will be reached, subject only to the final decision of the united body in London at the close.

AT A MEETING of the central committee of the North German Old Catholics, held at Cologne, March 2, the chairman stated that the Emperor of Germany had expressed his thanks for the transmission of the report of the proceedings of the Old Catholic congress. The publication of the German Mercury as the organ of the Old Catholics is to be continued. The election of bishops, one for the north and another for the south of Germany, and the drawing up of synodal statutes, is to be prepared by the commission elected by the congress. Old Catholicism (a German correspondent writes) is quietly and steadily progressing all through Germany, even among the Westphalian nobility. North Germany counts already 100 congregations. It was resolved to enter into communication with the Armenian patriarch and bishops and the Swiss Old Catholics. The judicial committee of the German council of State has been charged with the preparation of a special measure directed against the Jesuits and all societies affiliated to their body throughout the empire; and it is understood that jurisconsults of special reputation in ecclesiastical matters have been summoned to assist the members in drawing up the scheme.

THE Cronstadt Gazette notices the spreading of the Russian orthodox creed in Japan. A former bronze, Paul Survate, is one of its most active apostles. In Hakodadi there is a Russian church in which divine service is held in Japanese. The Bishop of Kamtschatka received during the present year [illegible] five Japanese into the communion of the church, and 500 persons demanded baptism. As the law promulgated 200 years ago, which forbids the embracing of Christianity, is not yet abolished, the government of Japan has taken measures against the neophytes, imprisoned all catechists, and dismissed all officials who had become Christians. In Nipon, which is situated in the (to Europeans) inaccessible district of Sendai, 120 Christians were brought before the courts. Notwithstanding these persecutions, the spread of Christianity, especially of the Russian communion, is continuously increasing in Japan. To the energetic efforts of the Russian consul at Hakodadi it is due that the Japanese government has restored to liberty the imprisoned Christians, and will henceforth take no action against the Japanese converted by the Russian mission.

THE ANNUAL STATISTICS.—The Congregational Quarterly publishes the statistics of the denomination, showing its strength and condition at the beginning of the present year. There is a total of 3,366 Congregational churches, of which 3,263 are within the limits of the United States, eighty-three in Canada, five in New Brunswick, nine in Nova Scotia and six in Jamaica. The total number of ministers is reported as being 3,201 in the United States; of these 2,252 appeared to be engaged in pastoral work. The net increase of churches from last year is sixty-one; there being a total of new churches formed of 128, while the names of sixty-seven have been dropped, largely, it is presumed, by the change of centers of population. The total reported number of church-members is 318,916, a net increase from last year of 6,862. The total number reported in Sabbath schools is 371,100, a net increase of 2,145. The total reported amount of benevolent contributions is $1,305,872.58, a net increase of $155,889.98; but only 2,426 churches have reported their contributions. It is the opinion of the compiler of these statistics that there are a few more than 400 Congregational ministers who are without charge, and available for the pastorate. On the other hand, we have 642 churches actually vacant, and 134 more supplied by licentiates and ministers of other denominations.

MADAGASCAR.—Never did Christianity achieve a more glorious triumph than in Madagascar. The people there seemed to take Christianity as it it was the only religion suited to their circumstances. They have passed through terrible persecutions—the bloodiest in history—but they came out of them triumphantly. The following, from the last Chronicle of the London Missionary Society, will show briefly the progress of the good work there: "The Christians preached even in their prisons; but all the sufferers preached more eloquently by their lives, their holiness, by that patient language which never cursed their persecutors, but blessed them. The whole population of the central provinces and of many secluded districts were silently taught the power of Christianity; as the years went by, knowledge grew, convictions ripened. When the new King mounted the throne, those most advanced at once professed their faith. Every subsequent year made a large increase in their number. When the great revival came, at the illness of the late Queen, the people crowded to the churches. And when at length the idols were burned, all hesitation was flung aside; city and country, nobles and commons, poured like a mighty stream into the churches, asking to be taught this new faith. During the year 1870 78,752 persons were added to our congregations; during last year 63,000 others followed them. In 1870 the members were 20,051; at the close of 1871 they were 38,000."—Christian Intelligencer.

REV. MR. BENOLIEL, of Cadiz, in a communication to Evangelical Christendom, modifies the statement made in a recent number of that periodical that his schools and church are in a flourishing condition. That they have been very successful heretofore is evident from the fact that in July last 347 boys and girls were in attendance at the evangelical schools under Mr. Benoliel's charge, while the attendance at the three weekly evening services of his church was rarely less than 300. Owing to various disturbing causes, but especially to the treachery of an ex-priest, who for a season was employed as an evangelist by those who were ignorant of his true character, not only the work of Mr. Benoliel, but that of Senor Hernandez, of the Edinburg Society, has been greatly hindered. In his letter Mr. Benoliel argues strongly in favor of the primitive apostolic fashion of itinerant evangelization in Spain. The towns which he enumerates as having been occupied with some measure of success as permanent mission stations are Madrid, Seville, Cordova, Malaga, Granada, Cadiz, Saragossa, Carthagena, Barcelona, Valladolid, Alicante, Jodar, Huelva, Mahon, Cannnas, La Seca, Gracia, Barceloneta, Vallehermosa, Linares and Santander. In some of these cities there are two or three or more congregations; but it, instead of being tied down to particular towns, the missionaries had spent the first few years of their missionary labors scattering the seeds of evangelical truth throughout Spain, and in setting apart lay helpers or acting pastors in every city or congregation, who should gather up the fruits of the missionary's sowing, according to Mr. Benoliel's belief, instead of twenty towns where evangelical churches now exist, there would be hundreds. This plan would make the most experienced and gifted preachers evangelists, instead of confining them to the congregations now under their charge, and would discover where the gospel would be most welcome with greater certainty, and would also train helpers most effectually.—Independent.

Grace to Conquer.

The promise of final blessedness is to him that overcometh. The conflict is taken for granted. A stout battle is to be waged with sin in us and out of us. In some form the enemy is likely to assail the soul until its final deliverance from earth. A common misconception exists in reference to the direct effects of spiritual help. To suppose that it does away with the necessity of further effort is a most serious error. The young convert may be surprised to find that the appetites must still be held under control, and that in the regenerated heart the tempers are still strong and treacherous, and must be kept under constant watch. Here is a man who has unfortunately a love of drink. It may be natural, or it may be the result of indulgence. The demon is planted in him somehow, and to repress and overcome it is the battle of his life. Conversion will help him, beyond measure, as nothing else can. New and powerful motives will be supplied, the highest sources of true happiness will be opened, and the will, hitherto almost impotent, will be strengthened and braced. The affections also will be enlisted, and fixed on Christ and heavenly objects.

But the taste and craving for the dreadful stimulant is not taken away. God helps to will and to do, but there must be a fight for liberty and salvation. Grace does not take the baneful appetite away, as a surgeon would cut out a cancer that is eating the flesh, but it comes to aid the endeavor, and to sustain us in resisting and in opposing the terrible temptation. In time the appetite subsides or is comparatively quiescent, and long abstinence, in connection with increasing knowledge and experience in religion, places the former inebriate in a state of comparative peace and safety. In reference to other fleshly lusts, or easily-besetting sins of temper and passion, grace does not release us from a fierce and often prolonged struggle. Although pardoned and born of the Spirit, there is to be a crucifixion of the flesh, with its affections and lusts. Self-denial is demanded after conversion, and anguish and intense suffering may be required before the victory is gained. God helps the earnest soul effectually if he is willing to be helped in self-renunciation, and in the sharp pains of crucifixion. Some people conceive of grace as an irresistible tide, which rises and sweeps away these evil tendencies and appetites, while the hitherto troubled heart only submits passively to the divine and blissful sway. They appear to think of God's help as a sort of anæsthetic, under the operation of which the evil propensities are rooted out without pain; and that conversion is a spell—a mysterious ether—from which they awake to find that the offending limb has been lost by an easy and painless amputation.

Certainly Paul did not so regard the matter when he speaks of being crucified unto the world, and when he expressly says: "Mortify, therefore, your members which are upon the earth; fornication, uncleanness, inordinate affection, evil concupiscence, and covetousness which is idolatry." The bad temper will not disappear mysteriously and suddenly without any effort or vigilance, neither will the bodily appetites and the inordinate affections yield without a struggle. Religion is able to right our perverse nature, and grace is adequate to save, but not without a fight. Let those who are oppressed by the appetites, or are under the foul dominion of covetousness or envy, or any other base passion, cry unto God for help, and he will help them, and help them effectually, but only as they are ready to undergo inward crucifixion and to be made perfect through suffering. "Let him deny himself and take up his cross" is a part of Christ's direction to him who would be his disciple. If the slave of the flesh, the victim of vice, groans under the body of death, and comes to Christ for help, he may surely believe with the heart unto righteousness, and thank God "through Jesus Christ our Lord." But the deliverance from bondage and from this vile slavery will not come as by some mystic and magical art. Will he cut off the offending hand or pluck out the offending eye? There be those who are burdened with these uncleannesses of the flesh and of the spirit, and they are praying to be cleansed. But they love softness, and are not willing to endure hardness. They are waiting for these propensities to > "Fold their tents like the Arabs,

> And as silently steal away."

The battle must be fought, and the grace to conquer is given when men gird up their loins, and are content to suffer and to die daily, that their strength may be made perfect in weakness. If God, by a single stroke, should take away the drunkard's burning thirst, reformation would be an easy thing indeed. But this he does not do. Help him he will, but the grace which aids must be received by the struggling spirit. The thing prayed for, be it deliverance from any vice or from any infirmity of temper, cannot be obtained in a passive way. If a believer wants patience, it will hardly come for the asking, unless he is at the same time ready to submit to provocation, and to suffer that he may be patient. The victory that overcomes the world is our faith, but this faith involves an effort of giving up and of self-renunciation. Every soul has this warfare to encounter and this battle to fight. The promise is to him that overcometh, to him who knows the meaning of crucified affections and lusts, and who is willing to be saved not in inglorious ease and self-indulgence, but by the grace which helps the heart to peace and victory after the severest conflicts.

Mexico in Louisville and Nashville.

BY BISHOP KEENER.

NASHVILLE, May 13, 1873.

MR. EDITOR: I inclose you the plan of episcopal visitations for 1873. After leaving Baltimore I came to Louisville, and on Sabbath evening addressed the three principal congregations, assembled in Walnut Street, on the Mexican mission, with the following result:

| Walnut Street | $125 00 |
| Walnut Street Sunday school | 100 00 |
| Broadway | 122 00 |
| Chestnut Street | 46 00 |
| Chestnut Street Sunday school | 86 00 |
| Cash | 18 75 |
| Shelby Street | 5 00 |
| J. Gill | 5 00 |
| R. B. Kent, paid | 5 00 |
| Total | $512 75 |

These amounts were subscribed, for the most part, payable in three or six months. A collection had been taken in the morning for church repairs, which greatly abridged the one for Mexico; but I expect to hear of liberal things being done in the Louisville Sabbath schools in behalf of this mission.

Arriving at Nashville, I caught a glimpse of the Publishing House. It is a grand building; the finest storeroom I ever saw—over two hundred feet long. It is the most imposing house in Nashville, and is as large, I believe, as that of the Methodist Episcopal Church in New York. All its appointments are eminently satisfactory—the Bishops' room, the rooms of the several editors and the missionary secretary. Much credit is due the agent for the completion of this vast house in the period of only twelve months. It is all that the church could ask or wish as an exponent of its publishing interests. The taste displayed in furnishing the Bishops' room and the office of the book-room is admirable.

Quite a number of the ministers of our church have been present during the past week—members of the book committee, the missionary committee and the Vanderbilt trustees. It is unfortunate that the Bishops' meeting occurs during the time of the annual exposition. The two are rather much for Nashville. The locating of the "Vanderbilt" resulted in the selection of a beautiful site in the west end of the city. On Friday night a mass meeting of citizens was called at McKendree, and was addressed by Bishops Marvin and Doggett, and Dr. Winfield, of Arkansas. The speaking was in the very best style of the platform, and some $10,000 were given toward paying for the ground on which the university is to be erected; making in all some $45,000. This has been increased since the meeting, and probably the entire sum ($65,000) will have been contributed before this is published.

On Saturday night a somewhat exhausted audience again assembled, and listened to [illegible] Mexican mission. The result was:

|---|---|
| McKendree church Sunday school | $50 00 |
| Miss Elliston | 50 00 |
| R. M. Woodward, $5; Mrs. Erwin, $10; J. W. Berry, $20 | 35 00 |
| W. C. Dibrell, $5; T. H. Woodward, $5 | 10 00 |
| | $125 00 |
| Dr. Hunter, of Little Rock Conference | 50 00 |
| Bishop Marvin, for a friend in Indiana | 100 00 |
| Dr. A. R. Winfield, of Little Rock Conference | 50 00 |
| Rev. G. A. Dannelly, of White River Conference | 50 00 |
| Judge Morgan, of Memphis | 100 00 |
| Cash collection | 20 35 |
| | $495 35 |
| There is also a cash item to be added, which Mr. W. Morrow, of Nashville, handed me in the street, unsolicited, for Mexico, of | 50 00 |
| Total | $545 35 |

On last night about one-third of a meeting was held at Tulip Street. Something was the matter: either the notice or the speaker did not draw. There was, however, an inspiring proportion of appreciative doctors of divinity and editors in the house, and that gave no little spice to the occasion. It was a beautiful moonlight night. The villas of this lovely "Auburn" were bathed in silver. But the collection added up only $177. The following are the items:

| North Edgefield, by Dr. Haygood | $100 00 |
| Cash from do. (F. A. Sorrell, $2; T. J. Atwell, $5) | 7 00 |
| Tulip Street Sunday school, pledged by the pastor | 50 00 |
| Bro. Morrow, for two Sabbath schools | 20 00 |
| Total | $177 00 |

The parties who have subscribed these amounts for Mexico, it is understood, will send the money to me direct, at 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

The Missionary Board appropriated some $21,000 for the Mexican mission. It fully indorses the steps already taken in this direction, as I believe the whole church does. I shall proceed at once to collect this sum, so far as I may be able, and call upon all the members and ministers of our church to aid me in the good work. I am glad to report very favorable omens of success. The secretary informed me of the receipt of $100 this morning, for the Mexican mission, from a gentleman residing in Indiana.

The Immovable Kingdom.

To the sincere lover of his kind there is much comfort in the thought that "the mountain of the Lord's house is established in the top of the mountains." Thus is the kingdom of the blessed Savior raised above all successful competition and rivalry, in the sight and hearing of all of every nation, kindred, tongue and people, and also beyond the reach of the most determined attack.

To whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life. The only name given among men whereby we can be saved. No man cometh to the Father but by me. Behold the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world. A wayfaring man, though a fool, shall not err therein. Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters. Come unto me, all ye ends of the earth, and be ye saved.

Why do the heathen rage and the people imagine a vain thing? The kings of the earth set themselves, and the rulers take counsel together.

Thy kingdom is an everlasting kingdom. The gates of hell shall not prevail against it. The prophet's "last days" are upon us—"the fullness of time," when "God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law." The dawn was ushered in eighteen hundred years ago. "The mountain of the Lord's house is established in the top of the mountains." Is established! There is a special thought of comfort just here—"established in the top of the mountains." Thus firmly settled, fixed, in the top of the mountains, beyond the reach of all successful attack. This truth is demonstrated in the strong efforts of eighteen centuries. From the date of the decree of a bloody and heartless tyrant, slaying helpless innocents from two years old and under, to the present moment, infidelity, hatred and enmity have exhausted their resources in attempts upon the kingdom of God and his Christ. It stands to-day as immovable as the everlasting hills. The arguments of cruel hatred—strange as cruel—are in substance the same to-day that they were in the days of Herod. Fire and sword have burned and flashed about the cradle and the cross, and to as little purpose. The heathen rage and the people imagine a vain thing.

It seems a little strange that infidelity will not learn lessons of wisdom from its own manifest weakness. Even when in swaddling clothes and bandages our blessed religion laughed to scorn the vain efforts of man to overthrow it. And if the skill of an infant was proof against the strong arm of an armored king, well may defloured, helpless humanity hesitate to attack the strong man in his castle. In the presence of eighteen hundred years of combined effort, and eighteen hundred years of disastrous failure, well may infidelity be assured of the helpless impotency of its rage now.

The question will arise, even occupying their own standpoint—a rejection of the testimony of God's word: [illegible] the religion of the Bible? Allowing it to be of human origin, and the benefits confined to this world, is there any good reason in seeking its overthrow? Can there be, has there been anything better offered to the world? Is there any other testimony so full of satisfaction to the desolate, stricken human heart? Does the religion of the Bible bring evil to individuals, States or governments? Is there anything essentially evil in it? Is it not a comfort to the soul of man? Is it not this very religion, the sublime teachings of him "who spake as never man spake," the only substratum of all of civil, social, domestic and intellectual prosperity? All of every age and tongue—the infidel himself the judge—bear testimony to the fact that godliness is the highest wisdom. None can object to the results of righteousness, limiting the view to this life. "Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people," is a truth as palpable to the skeptic as to the believer. Then if there is no harm, but all of good in it; if by it we have peace and prosperity, national and personal; if it hallows and softens the heart of man, restrains him from beastly appetites, and ennobles and exalts him in the scale of being; if it cheers the soul in seasons of affliction, sorrow and pain, and alone qualifies for the darkness of death and the gloom of the grave, why, why not at once yield to its rule and be sanctified by its precepts? ***

Prayer.

> "Prayer is the soul's sincere desire, > Uttered or unexpressed."

So sings the poet Montgomery, and a truer or more beautiful definition of prayer has not been given. The truth and beauty and force of this definition lie in the word "sincere." This word means, "being what it appears to be." The appearance corresponds exactly with the reality. The thing and the appearance of the thing are the same. A sincere desire, then, is a real desire. It is a desire that is really and truly a desire. It is not an imitation. It is not a copy. It is the thing itself. It is opposed to the feigned and the artificial. It is the true and the real. Hence we can see how appropriate is the poet's definition of prayer. It is nothing but the unfeigned, unaffected, inartificial, hearty, honest wish of the soul. When this wish is fostered and cherished, and kept in the soul, it is a silent prayer. When it is uttered, by means of language, it becomes a vocal prayer. In both cases, however, it is true prayer. The silent, unuttered wish does not look so much like true prayer as the expressed desire, because we have been so accustomed to regard prayer as an utterance of our wishes. It is evident that the wish must be the foundation of the utterance. Hence the silent, sincere desire is the beginning of the uttered, sincere prayer. Vocal prayer, then, is simply making known the sincere desire of the soul by means of language. It flows naturally and necessarily from the earnest, sincere wish of the heart. The honest, deep wish of the soul naturally seeks an outlet, and must necessarily find one. That outlet is language. The sincere desire naturally searches for its own fulfillment. It feels after an object to satisfy its longings. As that object cannot be found within the soul, the desire comes out on the wings of language, seeking outside of the soul for that object.

This, then, is the second phase of true prayer. It is desire on the wing, exploring and searching after its own fulfillment. A sincere desire is evidence of a void, an emptiness, a realized blank in the soul. True prayer is this sincere desire seeking for the object that alone can fill that void. When this object is found the void is filled. The desire is accomplished and ceases to exist; or, rather, it is transformed into humble gratitude because the object of its search has been found. In seeking for a realization of its wishes the soul of man naturally and instinctively turns to the Fountain whence all good flows. The desire of the heart utters itself in appropriate language to him who alone can fulfill it. In fitting words the attention of the Lord is sought to be drawn to the sincere desire of the heart. The fulfillment of that desire is left to his love and wisdom. The earnest wish of the soul is laid down at Jehovah's feet, and, feeling that "the Lord of all the earth will do right," the soul waits in calm patience for the answer. This is the philosophy of true prayer!

OUTIS.

THE Central Methodist of May 10 informs us that the senior editor, Rev. Zephaniah Meek, is very ill of inflammatory rheumatism. We sincerely hope that he may soon be restored to health.

Whither they Tend.

If the Catholic Register is to be credited, the work of converting Anglican churchmen into Roman Catholics is going forward briskly. Anglican Ritualists need but little to make them papists. High-Church Episcopacy is popery in the chrysalis. It is more than embryonic or germinant—it is nearly the complete thing. The Register says:

In England the work of conversion has continued during the past year with steady and not very slow steps. To name or even indicate individuals who have been received during the past twelve months would be foreign to our purpose. This much we may say (and say with truth, the fact being known to many Catholics in London,) that the number of converts in London alone has been upward of two thousand during the past year, and has during the last few weeks increased very much. Many, as we are informed, have joined us who are all but Catholics, and who have little need of instruction before they make up their minds to take the final, the long-deferred, but the all-needful step. From every ritualistic congregation in London there is a continual stream of converts drifting toward us, and the number would be increased had we priests sufficient to look after those who are hesitating as to this future step in the right direction. In various ports of the country different Anglican clergymen have been received into the church, to the number of some ten or a dozen, and at least as many ladies connected with the various Anglican sisterhoods have followed in the same direction. Out of every twenty Anglicans who joined the Catholic Church, not less than seventeen have been prepared for the step by the teaching they have heard from ritualistic pulpits, and by the practices they have got accustomed to in ritualistic churches. * * * Not only laymen, but Anglican clergymen, have been seen devoutly hearing mass at Catholic churches, rather than go to their own places of worship, where what they considered heresy was taught.

Evil Fruits.

Mr. Talmage, of Brooklyn, not long ago, at a fair, married several couples who were dressed in the costumes of the olden time. The marriages were bona fide, but much exception has been taken to the affair. We have had our surfeit of Talmage long since, but we still hoped that he might do good to somebody and in some directions. However, when a man sets up for a marvel, and counts chiefly on the sensational and the eccentric for success, there is no telling whither he will drift. That theatrical exhibition of a marriage service was certainly making light of holy things, and highly irreverent, if not sacrilegious, but not a whit more so than some of the sermons which Mr. Talmage preaches and publishes. We agree with the Central Christian Advocate in the following paragraph which we find in its columns:

Rev. Dr. Talmage's religious buffoonery has already begun to bear unwholesome fruit. In different parts of the country concerts, fairs and exhibitions in the costumes of two or three centuries ago are the sensation; advertised in the uncouth spelling of the period, and the names of the performers in the fictitious, grotesquely biblical style of the old Puritanic times. When a man of some genius or reputation makes a clown of himself, especially if his antics have a religious turn, there is no end to his imitators. So this diving, who has many admirers, becomes responsible for a great deal of harm through the ill example which in an excess of zeal he has given to the church. For it will do less harm to go to the theater and masquerade openly than to make our houses dedicated to the worship of God a means to satisfy the unquiet thirst for theatrical display which seems to consume some partially religious people.

OUT OF DEBT.—At a late meeting of the board of trustees of the New Orleans Methodist Depository building, 112 Camp street, we were much gratified to learn that the indebtedness which for some years has been hanging over the property was entirely canceled. For this fortunate result much is owing to the donation made by the Conference, last winter, of about $1,000, and which covered nearly one-third of the debt. Two thousand or thereabouts was raised by collections and subscriptions in our city congregations. The balance due to the Depository by the book and ADVOCATE publishers was met by those interests. We have now a very good property, well located, in good repair, and without encumbrance.

DISTRICT CONFERENCES.—We are glad to get items, briefly stated, from these meetings, exhibiting the condition of the church and the interest at the conferences; but it will be usually out of our power to publish reports of committees on the various interests represented. We hope the secretaries or other brethren will continue to send us the items of living interest, and most tersely and compactly expressed; but, as a rule, do not send us elaborate reports on finance, Sunday schools and temperance, as these reports from forty different District Conferences are about the same in matter and style, and not of much interest to the general reader.

A Fine Instrument.

The organ so highly commended below is kept on sale by R. J. Harp, 110 and 112 Camp street, New Orleans:

"There is nothing in which a person not experienced or an expert can be more readily led astray than in judging of the tone or quality of parlor organs. Heard at first within a limited space, it, by reason of its novelty and susceptibility to nice manipulations of effect, immediately captivates the inexperienced ear. Later, when the same ear has had the misfortune to hear a superior instrument, it discovers a thin rediness of tone and a monotony of shading that speedily grow, and day by day increase in distastefulness, until the unhappy thing is left untouched. We have known in our experience more than one instance of this. But a good parlor organ is as productive of pleasure in a house as it is possible to conceive that anything can be. We knew a gentleman who, having a fine taste for music, bought a George Woods & Co. organ from Mr. Sutro, the agent here, and who for three weeks never got down to business before eleven o'clock. He spoke of it as the most fascinating thing he had ever been in contact with, and said his family took more delight in it than he had thought it possible for anything of the sort to inspire. The permanent value in a refined and cultivated household of one of these instruments cannot be overestimated. And then on Sunday evening the tones of an organ have in them so much that is devotional, so much that is in harmony with the sacred spirit of the Sabbath, that it becomes an incentive to seek in befitting channels an occupation and a pleasure alike proper to the day and the observance of it. The George Woods organ is one that we can confidently recommend on account of its superior quality, the exquisite softness and delicacy of its tone, and the delicious effects which combinations of its stops enable one to produce.—Baltimore Bulletin.

Selma Items.

The Counselor is an excellent monthly journal, published by the Young Men's Christian Association of Selma, Alabama. In the April number we find the following among other items of interest:

The Young Men's Christian Association of Selma was organized April 11, 1870. The third anniversary was celebrated, not on the eleventh, but on Monday evening, April 21.

The membership met at the rooms, and at about eight o'clock proceeded in a body to the Presbyterian church, where was assembled a large audience of ladies and gentlemen, friends of the association.

The report showed that there had been a degree of activity in some branches of the association work, and was therefore encouraging.

Short addresses were delivered by the following members of the association: P. G. Wood, Judge W. M. Byrd and James W. Lapsley.

The choir of the church contributed very greatly to the enjoyment of the occasion by the excellence of the music. The voluntaries and anthems were beautifully rendered.

The church was tastefully decorated with flowers and evergreens—the work of some of the lady friends of the association.

Prayer meetings have been held in the Methodist church daily, at eight o'clock in the morning, since Tuesday, April 22. The attendance has been good—members of several of the city churches taking part in the exercises. The indications are favorable for a revival.

Daily services were held in the Methodist church in East Selma from the sixth to the twentieth of April—preaching at night and prayer meeting in the morning. The principal part of the labor was performed by the pastor, Rev. James W. Glenn, though he was aided by Rev. A. J. Briggs, Rev. S. M. Thames, Rev. P. R. McCrary and Rev. M. S. Andrews. About thirty persons professed conversion, and about as many joined the church.

The membership of the church is now about seventy, an increase of about fifty during the present year.

A MEETING was held in McKendree church, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, on Friday evening, May 9, in the interest of the Vanderbilt University. Bishop Pierce presided, and appropriate and excellent addresses were delivered by Bishops Marvin and Doggett and Dr. Winfield. At the close a subscription of $11,300 was taken to aid in the purchase of the site for the university, of which amount $4,000 was subscribed by Colonel Reynolds, of Giles county, Tennessee, and $250 by Judge Morgan, of Memphis—the rest by citizens of Nashville.

THE PHOTOGRAPH FAMILY RECORD, published by J. Hulo Powers & Co., Fraternity publishers, Cincinnati, will strike the attention of many and please their taste. It is a large colored engraving with scenes suited to a family record, and with places for the insertion of card photographs. Handsomely framed and filled up with the photographs, it will be an ornament and a gratification.

BISHOP KEENER reached home on Friday, the sixteenth instant, and expects to leave again for Texas some time during the present week. We shall expect occasional letters from him during his Texas tour.

PITY the distressed, and hold out a hand to help them; it may be your case, and as you mete to others God will mete to you again.

The Board of Missions.

The Board of Missions held its meeting in the mission-room at the Publishing House, May 8-10. The Bishops were in attendance a good part of the time. The business coming before the board was never discharged in a more thorough and satisfactory manner. The board took an advanced position, and is determined, by God's blessing, to maintain it. The movement in Mexico, so auspiciously begun by Bishop Keener, has given a great impulse to the cause. He has thrown his whole soul into the enterprise, and is determined to make special efforts to procure the means necessary to carry forward the undertaking. By reference to our missionary department it will be seen that this new departure finds favor in the eyes of the people, who are rallying to the support of the mission. On Saturday night the Bishop delivered an interesting address on Mexico at McKendree church, at the close of which some $500 was contributed toward the undertaking. We hope that everywhere special contributions will be made for this interest, so that when the Bishop in January next repeats his visit to Mexico he may carry cheering and encouraging accounts of sympathy and support to our brethren who have been and who may be assigned to that important field. Our readers will be much interested in the secretary's report of the proceedings of the board:

The Missionary Board held its annual meeting in its new room in the Southern Methodist Publishing House, commencing on Thursday morning, May 8. In addition to the resident members, we were favored with the presence of the Rev. Drs. N. H. Lee, J. Hamilton, W. M. Rush, W. G. E. Cunnyngham, and all the Bishops, except Bishop Early. The meeting was continued from day to day till Saturday evening, when the board finally adjourned. There was much business transacted, and all with the utmost harmony and good feeling. One spirit—aggressive—pervaded the whole board, and every member seemed to feel that the time had come for an advanced movement in our missionary work. New missions were projected and old fields enlarged; and all this stimulated by what is regarded as a spirit of increased liberality among the members and friends of our church, as well as an increase in their ability to meet the wants of the connection. Hence, on the first day it was resolved: "That it is the sense of this board that it needs one hundred thousand dollars for its work the ensuing year, and that we will proceed to raise that amount." This involves the collection of $250,000, inasmuch as sixty per cent. is under the control of the Annual Conference boards, and may be used, if needed, for domestic missions. In accordance with this resolution, the amount was distributed among the various Annual Conferences, and each Conference is expected to raise what is assessed. The following are the assessments:

Baltimore Conference, $12,000; Virginia, $15,000; Western Virginia, $2,000; North Carolina, $15,000; South Carolina, $9,000; North Georgia, $14,000; South Georgia, $11,500; Florida, $1,000; Alabama, $13,000; North Alabama, $10,000; Louisiana, $7,000; Mississippi, $8,000; North Mississippi, $10,000; Memphis; $13,500; Tennessee, $15,000; Holston, $8,000; Louisville, $13,000; Kentucky, $11,500; St. Louis, $6,000; West St. Louis, $7,000; Missouri, $8,000; Western, $1,000; Little Rock, $6,500; White River, $3,500; Arkansas, $3,000; Indian Mission, $1,000; Texas, $5,000; Trinity, $5,000; East Texas, $4,000; West Texas, $2,500; Northwest Texas, $4,000; Columbia, $800; Pacific, $2,500; Los Angeles, $800; Illinois, $1,200.

This surely is not impossible, nor the sum unreasonable, for a membership of more than six hundred thousand. Fifty cents each will more than meet this urgent demand of the church.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE ENSUING YEAR.

|---|---|---|
| China, from June 1, 1873, to June 1, 1874 | | $7,000 |
| Contingent | | 3,000 |
| Mexico | | 21,000 |
| Key West, a mission among the Cubans | | 500 |
| German work: In Virginia and Maryland | | 2,000 |
| Louisiana | | 1,000 |
| For German Sunday school paper, New Orleans | | 200 |
| For German tune-book | | 150 |
| German work in Texas | | 3,000 |
| Indian Mission Conference | | 13,000 |
| Columbia Conference | | 2,500 |
| Pacific | | 5,000 |
| Los Angeles | | 5,000 |
| Western Conference: | | |
| Montana | $2,000 | |
| Colorado | 2,000 | |
| Kansas | 4,000 | 8,000 |
| Western Virginia | | 500 |
| Florida | | 2,000 |
| Illinois | | 1,000 |
| Incidentals | | 1,000 |
| Total | | $79,650 |

This does not quite reach the $100,000 provided for in the first resolution; but there are other mission doors open which will be entered just so soon as the board can be assured that the means will be contributed for the support of those who will engage in the Master's work.

PREMIUM ESSAY.

The board resolved to offer a premium of $100 for the best essay setting forth the principles, facts and obligations of the church on missions; the work to contain not more than forty-eight pages 12mo. The premium to be paid by the treasurer of this board. The president, secretary and treasurer were appointed a committee to supervise the publication and circulation of said work. Bishops Keener and McTyeire and Dr. Summers were appointed a committee of adjudication to determine the merits of the manuscripts submitted. The manuscripts are to be forwarded to Dr. Summers, at the Southern Methodist Publishing House, by the first of October next.

RESOLUTIONS.

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed to memorialize the General Conference at its next session on behalf of this board, praying for such changes in our missionary system as shall require all collections for missions to be paid to the treasurer of the Parent Board, and giving all authority in the matter of appropriations, both for the domestic and foreign fields, to the Parent Board.

Resolved, That the Bishops be and hereby are requested to issue an earnest address upon the subject of missions, laying before the church the increased appropriations made by the board, the pressing necessity of meeting these appropriations, and urging upon the church the solemn duty of sustaining this advanced movement of the board.

Resolved, That in the opinion of this board no moneys contributed by our congregations directly to the support of their pastors is to be reported as missionary money, notwithstanding the appointment may be called a mission.

Resolved, That this board recommend the formation of Women's Foreign Missionary Societies by the ladies of the church throughout our bounds, under the direction of the Board of Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

Measures were adopted to organize missionary societies in the Sunday schools of the church. The board recommend the adoption of the following constitution of a Sunday school missionary society:

1. We, profoundly impressed with the duty of sending the gospel throughout the world, and of systematic giving in order to accomplish this end, do hereby organize this Sunday school into a missionary society, our collections to be made monthly. The dues from each child to be five cents per month, and from members of Bible classes, officers and teachers, ten cents.

2. The regular officers of the Sunday school shall control the business of the society; the only officer to be added being a missionary treasurer, whose duty it shall be to collect the dues and pay them out on the order of the superintendent of the school.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

The Meeting of the Bishops.

All the Bishops, except the venerable Bishop Early, were in attendance at the annual meeting in Nashville last week. Bishop Paine was in improved health, though still feeble; and we protest against his doing much work until he has regained his usual strength. We take occasion to state that his medical advisers, colleagues and others forbid his attendance at any District Conferences remote from his home. Bishop Pierce was annoyed with a cold, which, however, was a greater affliction to others than to himself, as they were deprived of the pleasure and profit of hearing him preach. However, his place at McKendree, on Sunday morning, was filled by his venerable father, who, though nearly a nonagenarian, preached over an hour to a vast assembly. He had been sick at Dr. Morgan's during the week, but he believes, with Mr. Wesley, that preaching is the most healthful exercise a man can take, and in his case health-restoring as well as health-preserving.

This grand specific will prevail,
When all the doctors' medicines fail.

His sermon last Sunday will not soon be forgotten. His counsels and warnings were given forth as from the lips of a dying patriarch; but we trust that he may live through another decade, that he may repeat them here and elsewhere for the greater edification of the church. Bishops Wightman and Kavanaugh preached to large and delighted audiences at Elm Street. Bishop Doggett cried for more than an hour at Tulip Street: "Behold the Lamb of God!" We were greatly edified by that gospel sermon, as we were by Bishop Marvin's at night in McKendree, on the Unjust Steward, which we wish him to repeat, and at suitable times expand, all over the connection. Bishop Marvin preached at Hobson's in the morning. Bishop Keener preached at Trinity and Claiborne's. These labors of our chief pastors, we trust, will result in great good.

The Bishops, in their annual review, are much encouraged, and they go forth to their last episcopal visitations for this quadriennium full of faith and hope and zeal. The churches approve of their faithful labors, and have shown their approval by paying them their salaries in full, and they will "follow with a glad mind and submit to their godly admonitions, and submit to their godly judgments."—Nashville Christian Advocate.

MORAVIAN.—"It is not generally known," says the New York Times, "that the Moravians have had a settlement on Staten Island, possibly for a century. The location is near New Dorp, four miles from the steamboat landing. More than sixty years ago there was a Moravian church at New Dorp, 'a simple wooden structure,' with the novelty of having the parsonage and the church under the same roof. The new church is about twenty-five years old, to which, at the time of its erection, was added, by Mr. Vanderbilt, large cemetery grounds, the donor at the same time erecting a family vault. We understand that Mr. Vanderbilt has recently decided to endow the church and society with the princely sum of $500,000, to be expended upon the erection and support of a young ladies' seminary, under the charge of the Moravians, and also for the carrying on of a large farm of some five hundred acres."

MILK AND RUM.—In a recent discourse Rev. Dr. Waugh, of the Methodist Episcopal Mission Conference, India, referred to the fact that the Hindoos and Mohammedans almost universally concede the depravity of the race. Among illustrative examples, he gave this from one of the chief men in Lucknow: "The sinfulness of man," said he, "is easy enough understood when we remember that in disposing of a good thing—for instance, milk—we have to carry it to men's doors; but when we wish to furnish that which is evil—that is, sell rum—we have but to open a shop, and they come to us. That is," continued the man, "we will make sacrifices to destroy ourselves, but none to help ourselves." The Hindoo mind, Dr. Waugh stated, was keen, alert, critical, incisive. Preaching to them required self-possession, good temper, and an ability to probe and answer the subtlest of objections.

NEW ORLEANS, JACKSON AND GREAT NORTHERN RAILROAD.—As this community is largely interested in the New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern railroad, it affords us pleasure to say that in our opinion the affairs of the road were never at any time under more competent and efficient management than at present. We have observed in our latest trips over the road the great improvement resulting from the thorough repairs which it has been undergoing for the past several years, at great expense to the company. Colonel E. D. Frost, the general manager, has for a number of years stood second to none in efficiency of railroad management, and is withal a courteous and refined gentleman. A more sober, urbane, genteel and attentive set of officers than those in the office of the Jackson Railroad Company (only three doors from us) we have not observed in any office. We make these statements, believing that they will be gratifying to those whose lives and property are intrusted to them, and as a means of encouragement to which, in our opinion, they are entitled. We are indebted to the politeness of Mr. A. D. Sheldon for a copy of the schedule, which appears elsewhere.

THE ATTENTION of our readers is directed to the advertisement of J. G. Bermel, manufacturer of human hair goods, No. 121 Canal street, who received gold and silver medals at the late Louisiana State Fair.

WE CALL the attention of our lady readers to the card of Messrs. Lewis & Hedrick, 103 Canal street, who have established a successful business in the manufacture of ladies' ready-made suits and underwear.

SEPTOLINE OIL COMPANY, No. 62 Camp and 15 Dauphine street.

A SUBSTITUTE FOR PLASTERING, OIL-CLOTH AND CARPETING.—This issue contains an advertisement of a hard, compact paper board, expressly prepared and designed for the above purposes. There is the plain and the ornamental. The former can be whitewashed or kalsomined, as one's taste may desire. The latter, being finished in a variety of colors and designs, serves the purpose of plastering and wall paper combined. Thus the rooms of a house can be finished in a very comfortable and tasty manner at a very small cost comparatively. The same company makes a paper board finished in designs suitable for oil-cloth and carpeting, as a covering for floors. This paper board was awarded the premium at our recent State Fair, and is destined, we think, to become a popular article for the purposes for which it is made.

SEE ADVERTISEMENT of Messrs. G. W. Terrell & Co., who are in want of a lady teacher of drawing and painting.

The Child's Corner.

WHAT THE SPARROW CHIRPS.

I am only a litt'e sparrow,
A bird of low degree;
My life is of little value,
But the dear Lord cares for me.

He gave me a coat of feathers;
It is very plain, I know,
With never a speck of crimson,
For it was not made for show.

But it keeps me warm in winter,
And it shields me from the rain.
Were it powdered with gold and purple
Perhaps it would make me vain.

By and by, when the spring time cometh,
I will build me a little nest,
With many a chirp of pleasure,
In the spot I like the best.

And He will give the wisdom
To build it of leaves most brown;
Warm and soft it must be for my birdie,
And so I will line it with down.

I have no barn or storehouse,
I neither sow nor reap;
God gives me a sparrow's portion,
With never a speck to keep.

I know there are many sparrows;
All over the world we are found;
But our heavenly Father knoweth
When one of us falls to the ground.

Though small, we are never forgotten;
Though weak, we are never afraid;
For we know the dear Lord keepeth
The life of the creatures he made.

I fly through the thickest forests,
I light on many a spray;
I have no chart or compass,
But I never lose my way.

And I fold my wings at twilight,
Wherever I happen to be,
For the Father is always watching,
And no harm will come to me.

I am only a little sparrow,
A bird of low degree,
But I know the Father loves me;
Have you less faith than me?

Short Sight and Long Sight.

I.

"Now, you know," said the mother, who understood a great many things, "I am forced to go on a journey, and to leave you for a little time; but you must all travel due west and keep each other company, and not let anything tempt you from the straight path, and then we shall all meet at last."

"I will not," said the eldest.

"Nor I," said the next.

"Nor I," said the next.

"Nor I," said they all, one by one.

At last they all cried out in chorus: "We will none of us be tempted."

"Very good," said the mother. "Now let us have some bread and milk for supper, before we part for a time."

So they did. Nothing is more innocent than bread and milk.

II.

The seven brothers started on their journey due west, as their mother had told them. They had not gone far when a damsel peeped forth from a side-path and beckoned the elder brother. He shook his head and turned away his eyes. But then she began to sing a very beautiful song, and at last the eldest brother plunged aside after the fair damsel. She ran like a deer, so that it seemed as if he would never catch her; and the last the six brothers saw of him was a mere dot of a figure flying in pursuit of the damsel.

III.

"I would never let a damsel get the better of me like that," said the next eldest brother; and he stepped out ahead in a very determined way. But just then he happened to catch sight of the white sail of a little boat that was nestling in a creek that lay at a little distance aside from the path. Now he was very fond of boating, and thought he would just run down the by-path for a little way and look at this vessel. When he got alongside of her he thought he must just get on board, to have a nice close look at her. So he did; but no sooner did he set foot on deck than a brisk wind sprang up, and just there the river took a sudden bend, and he was soon out of sight.

IV.

"What a fuss about a boat!" said the next eldest brother. "You will not catch me disobeying our mother and breaking up the company for a paltry boat. Hallo! whatever is that?"

It was a beautiful young pony, that stood grazing a little way down a side-path.

"I am so fond of horses, and it cannot hurt me to look," said he; and off he ran to have a look at the pony. But no sooner had he got quite close than the pretty creature seemed to say: "Come, mount me!" and he could not resist the temptation. The moment he was on the pony's back it went off with him at a gallop, and he was soon lost to sight.

V.

Thus it was. Each brother in succession felt sure that he would not be tempted from the straight path; and yet each brother went astray except the last, who went plodding straight on till he came to the end of the path that ran due west. There he found his mother waiting for him; with his six brothers all in a row, looking ashamed of themselves.

"Well, my darling," says the mother, "here you are. You have not let any pretty thing tempt you into a side-path!"

"Mother," cried all the other six in chorus, "you will find, if you look, that he is short-sighted, and could not see a pretty thing in a side-path!"

"You are very clever at explaining things," said the kind mother; "but perhaps you can explain how it is that you six, who left the straight path, have all found your way back to me, though you were all so far-sighted that you could see to do wrong?"

Then the six brothers held their tongues, and they kissed all around, with very loud smacks, and had bread and milk for supper, because that is so innocent.

Many things happen that we cannot explain.—Good Words.

A Long Tongue.

BY OLIVE THORNE.

Wouldn't you think yours was a long tongue if it was as long as your whole body? Well, odd as it seems, there is a little fellow, who lives in Africa, with just such a tongue, and you can't imagine how useful it is to him.

You see he is a dignified, slow-moving little fellow, and he lives on insects and such lively game. He could never catch them, and might starve to death, only that he can dart out his tongue, as quick as a flash, and as long as his body. The end of this droll weapon is sticky, and holds fast any unfortunate bug or fly it touches.

The little animal I speak of is a chameleon, and his tongue isn't the only droll thing about him. His eyes are very curious. To begin with, they are very large and round, and stick out like big beads on the side of his head. And the funniest thing is that he can turn them different ways, so as to see all around him. He can turn one up and the other down, or he can turn one forward and the other back, and thus see everywhere. It must be a very small bug which can escape these sharp eyes.

And that isn't all about them. These eyes are covered with eyelids all the time. To be sure, there is a hole in the middle, where the bright eye looks out, and he can contract or expand it, as he likes, but he can't uncover his eyes, as we can.

But his tongue and his eyes are not the only odd things about him—his feet are droll as the rest. He has five toes, just as you have, though they are more like a bird's claws than like your toes. They are all long and have claws on the ends, and then they are fastened together by skin in a curious way. Three of them are fastened into one sort of bundle, and the other two into another.

You can see how nicely this arrangement enables him to hold on to the branches of trees, where he lives. All four of his feet are fixed in the same way. And, as if four such hands and feet were not enough, his long, slim tail is as good as another foot. He can curl it around a branch, as a monkey can his, and hold on with it. Even when he walks on the ground—which he don't much like to do—he steadies himself with this useful tail.

Everything about this fellow is odd. His skin is not fastened tight to him, as it is to most animals. It is more like a loose bag, and he can swell it out into queer shapes, or rather into a shapeless mass, by filling it with air. And another oddity about the skin is that, by a peculiar arrangement of the coloring matter, he sometimes looks one color and sometimes another, according to the way the light strikes him. It is something like what you have seen in changeable silks.

Strange stories were told about this curious little fellow in old times. It was really believed that he had no regular color of his own, but that he took the color of the thing he was near, being green among the leaves and brown on the ground. That error was caused, of course, by the changes of color I spoke of.

Another error was the effect of his curious habit of blowing himself up like a bladder. It was said that he had no particular shape. In fact, he had no character of his own any way—neither color nor shape!

The wisest men of old times believed these stories, and it seems droll enough to read of it in serious, wise books. Even the name of the honest little fellow got to mean one who changes his opinions to suit everybody and has no fixed ideas of his own.

You see it has taken hundreds of years, and hundreds of men watching them, to find out about these curious little fellows; and you can learn it all in five minutes.

Henry and His Habit.

Henry Town is a good enough boy in some respects. He is amiable and truthful and pleasant in his manners, but in matters where he is required to take upon himself any burden of responsibility or trust he is a broken reed.

"Henry," says his sister, "will you be sure to put this letter in the postoffice for me?"

"Oh! certainly."

"Now, you won't forget it?"

"No, really I won't."

"It is to Uncle Thomas about meeting me in New York, and if he doesn't get it and come to the station for me I shall hardly know what to do."

"Oh! I'll be sure to put it in," and Henry takes the letter and goes off. He really intends to go to the postoffice the first thing, but on the way down he meets a companion, who has something to say about a sailing party, and Henry forgets the letter entirely, until about three hours after the mail. Then he drops it in, and thinks no more about it, only to answer, "Oh! yes," when asked if he has done his errand.

The consequence is that when his sister gets to New York, where she has never been before, there is no one to meet her. She has to find her way to the other side of Brooklyn alone, takes the wrong car, and only finds her friends at the end of a very troubled, distressed, anxious day. She is not well or strong, the fatigue and the worry make her ill for a week, and the whole pleasure of her visit is spoiled because Henry could not take the trouble to keep his mind on one subject long enough to post a letter.

I might multiply instances of the worry, disappointment and wear-and-tear of the tempers and feelings of others occasioned by Henry's habits, but one is enough.

Henry is always very sorry, and never means to do so again, but the trouble is he does not mean not to do so, and I fear he will never reform unless he takes to heart the lesson: "What thy hand finds to do, do with thy might."—Child's World.

"COME into my yard and see my new top spin," said Tommy to Willie.

"I shall do no such thing," answered Willie. "I never play Sundays. I am a man Sundays." And he marched off with his Sunday school books under his arm, with the air of one who had made up his mind.

"THE sluggard looks for prosperity without diligence; the practical atheist from diligence alone; the Christian from the blessing of God in the exercise of diligence.

The Laughing-Plant.

Palgrave's work on central and eastern Arabia furnishes something new for botanists. A plant is described under the name of laughing-plant, the seeds of which produce effects very much like laughing-gas, familiar to those who have attended Dr. Colton's exhibition of it at the Cooper Institute. It grows only in Arabia, attaining a height of only about six inches at Kaseem, while at Oman it rises to three or four feet, with wide-spreading branches, being woody and the leaves green. Its flowers, in tufts, are yellow. Two or three black seeds, much like French beans in size and shape, are produced in a soft woolly kind of capsule. They have a sweetish taste, with a slight flavor of opium. The odor from them is rather offensive, producing a sickening sensation. The essential property of this extraordinary plant is in the seed, which, pulverized and administered cautiously, soon begins to operate in a way to create astonishment. The person begins to laugh boisterously; then he dances, sings and cuts fantastic capers of a ludicrous character. Such extravagance of manner was never witnessed from any other dosing. It is uproariously funny for about an hour. It is a common amusement to charge food with the powder for an unsuspecting individual, for the harmless enjoyment of his capering antics. When the excitement subsides the exhausted exhibitor falls into a profound slumber. In another hour, on awaking, he is totally unconscious of what has occurred. It is a common expression that there is nothing new under the sun. Surely to men of science this is something new, demanding the careful investigation of such extraordinary properties of a vegetable growth that exercises such potent influence over the brain. But it is morally certain that this recently-discovered vegetable growth, so extraordinary in its potent influence on the human brain, is something new to science, demanding the attention of dispensatory-makers, as well as those professors of materia medica who are supposed to know all that is to be known of plants, from the cedars of Lebanon to the hyssop that springeth out of the wall. American Artisan.

EFFECT OF THOROUGH CULTURE ON WHEAT.—In 1869 I had a field of sixteen acres of like fertility. I expected to plant half the field in corn, but for some reason I did not. In the half that had been plowed for corn, after the ground had been broken, the weeds grew more rapidly. Consequently I broke it again on the twentieth of June. On the first of September following I plowed the entire field and sowed in wheat.

The result was as follows: The half which had only received a single plowing yielded per acre thirteen bushels and eighteen pounds; the half that received three breakings yielded per acre twenty-three bushels and forty pounds, which made a difference of more than ten bushels per acre! At $1 per bushel this would pay for the extra plowing and leave a net extra profit of $6 per acre besides.—Cincinnati Gazette.

LOSS OF FERTILIZERS BY LEACHING.—Prof. Voelcker reports as follows on experiments made during a course of years at Rothamsted on the loss of nitrogen and other fertilizing elements by drainage: It is found that, in whatever form [illegible] is applied to the soil, a considerable percentage is carried off in the drainage. Nitrate of soda especially is readily removed through the action of rains, and should therefore be applied late in the spring—in the middle of March, in England. Sulphate of ammonia and ammoniacal manures may be applied a fortnight earlier, at less risk of being washed away. Fresh farm-yard manure, on the other hand, should be applied in autumn. Potash and phosphoric acid, the most important mineral constituents of soils and manures, are almost wholly retained in the soil.—American Rural Home.

EATING THE BANANA.—There is a way we have of eating them in the East which is worth knowing, thus: Take a soup-plate, strip half a dozen bananas, and, with a silver fork, mash them up, adding sufficient sherry and sugar to make the whole of about the consistency of a thick soup. When so treated there is a flavor which may almost vie with that of the most delicious fruit in the world—the mangosteen. There is a great difference in bananas abroad; the best I remember eating were at Singapore. They were also particularly good at the Cape de Verd Isles; in China and Japan not so good, the slightly pink always preferred.—Screw Propeller.

SALT FOR PEAR-TREES.—The result of an experiment is thus reported by a horticulturist: "Last spring I put a shovelful of the refuse material from the salt works, which is composed, I believe, of salt, lime and ashes, around a four-year-old pear-tree. It has made a very thrifty growth, and the leaves are all free from blight or spot, and have a very glossy, healthy look; while others of the same lot, manured with barn-yard manure, have grown but little, and the foliage is spotted and dull. Now, if no ill effect may be attributed to the barn-yard manure, it would seem that the difference in these trees was owing to the salt."

KEEPING HAMS.—After your meat is well smoked procure some clean, dry ashes, and have some water handy; take down the hams, moisten them a little, so that the ashes will stick, put the ashes on them, and give them a good rubbing, and hang them up again. Any person trying this will find that the meat will keep sweet and nice, and will not be troubled with any insects on the hams. I have put mine up in this way for three seasons, and find that it does well.

SIN is self-destruction.

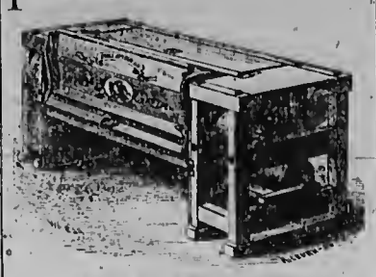
THE DUBOIS FLANGE COTTON GIN.

By the Flange the Cotton is kept in contact with the teeth on each side, until the fiber is taken from the seed, without allowing them to be taken up by the return motion of the coil, as in other Gins.



The Flange prevents hulls, stems, sticks and hard substances from being cut, consequently making a better sample cut of roughly-picked cotton than other Gins.

We have sold more from this point than any agency of any other Gin for the crop of 1872-73; consequently we can furnish more and better references, and they are warranted to come up to all that is said of them.

We keep constantly on hand all sizes, from 40 to 80 SAW STANDS, left or right. Price, $5 per Saw.

IMPROVED

EAGLE COTTON GINS.

The great popularity of the EAGLE COTTON GINS is established from the well-known fact that they are the most reliable, strongest and best built Cotton Gins ever made. The Eagle Cotton Gin runs lighter than any other gin, thus having a great advantage for planters who wish to run by horse power. All the numerous planters who use the Eagle Cotton Gin will certify to the fact that when their cotton is sent to market it always brings the highest market price, as no other gin can produce a finer or a better sample of cotton than the Eagle Cotton Gins. Over seventeen thousand of the Eagle Cotton Gins have been made and sold. During a period of twenty years the undersigned has had the agency of the Eagle Cotton Gin in New Orleans. He has never had a gin returned or rejected out of the immense number sold. The saw cylinders of all the Eagle Cotton Gins are twelve inches in diameter, which is two inches larger than most other kinds of gins, thus giving our forty-saw gin more teeth, and they are more than equal to the fifty-saw gins of other makers, who use only a ten-inch cylinder, and the same great advantage of the twelve-inch cylinder in larger-sized gins can be easily estimated. Planters who wish a reliable cotton gin, with an established reputation, can purchase an Eagle Cotton Gin with a certainty that they are not making an untried experiment, but will obtain a cotton gin which is indorsed by the oldest and largest planters in the country as the best in use. A large stock of the Eagle Cotton Gins are always kept on sale in New Orleans, ready for immediate shipment. Planters should be particular to state if they want right or left-hand motion gins.

New Orleans Markets.

From the New Orleans Price Current.

Apprehensions of damage have been excited by the accounts of unusual floods in the Red river and its tributaries.

The river is 2 feet 7 inches below high-water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the sixteenth instant:

On Saturday the favorable influence of a material advance in foreign exchange was neutralized by gloomy financial accounts from the Continent and the advance in the Bank of England rate to 6 per cent. The better qualities, however, from their light supply, maintained their previous position, but good ordinary and the lower grades were a good deal demoralized and unsaleable unless at liberal concessions. Average good ordinary sold at 15¼@15¾c., and in exceptional cases down to 14¾c., while strict commanded 16c. The figures indicated a falling off of ¼c. in all but low middling and the better qualities, which from their scarcity were comparatively steady at previous rates. The sales embraced 2,500 bales. On Monday the market opened with a fair inquiry, but the subsequent violence of the storm suspended operations until the afternoon, when a few buyers came at Saturday's decline, and the sales embraced 1,850 bales. On Tuesday the market opened with a moderate inquiry, and a limited business was done during the morning, partly at previous rates and partly at figures indicating a decline of ⅛@¼c., after which the movement was interrupted by a heavy rain-storm, and the entire business of the day summed up only 1,300 bales. Nothing transpired to indicate any change in middling and the better qualities, but low middling could be bought at concessions of ¼c., and good ordinary and the lower grades of ⅛@¼c. We have modified our quotations accordingly. We heard general complaints of the unsatisfactory character of the offerings.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 5,650 bales, against 8,700 for the corresponding time last week and 9,650 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 1,184,150 bales, against 830,998 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 710,718 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 240,900 to Great Britain, of 62,298 to France, and of 150,747 to other foreign ports. We quote:

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

NEW YORK, May 21.—The following is published by the survivors of the Polaris: The prevailing impression of the nineteen unfortunates when left on the ice was that Buddington had wilfully abandoned them. They also believe that Captain Hall was poisoned. They lived principally upon seals, occasionally indulging in roast dog. They attribute their wonderful preservation to the sagacity and perseverance of Captain L. N. Tyson.

The latter says that while the scientific results of the expedition amount to nothing, yet it is demonstrated that it is possible to penetrate farther in that mysterious region of sea and ice than Franklin, Hayes or any other explorer proceeded, and that it furnished the probable existence of a polar sea. On the tenth of October Captain Hall started on a sledge expedition north, to renew his vigorous efforts in the direction of the polar sea. The sleds, two in number, were drawn by Esquimaux dogs, purchased at Holsteinburg.

Captain Hall was accompanied by Joe, Hans Christian and Chester, the mate. The party was absent two weeks, and returned to Polaris bay on the twenty-fourth of October, 1871. No authentic information can be procured of the events that occurred on the two weeks' trip, but it appears that after his return to the ship Captain Hall was almost immediately taken sick.

Of Captain Hall's sickness and death John Heron, the steward, makes the following statement:

"Captain Hall had good health up to the time of returning from the sledge expedition. He was not sick when he came on board, but complained soon after, and said that the heat of the cabin affected him. He got water to wash and put on clean underclothing. I asked him what he would have; was anxious to get him something. He did not care about anything but a cup of coffee, and did not drink even that. I had no conversation with Captain Hall, except to ask him if he was better, or how he was, and such like. He was sick a fortnight and talked very little. He was perfectly delirious for the last four days. I think he was paralyzed. Heard no one say so, however; it is my own opinion.

"There was nothing sudden about his death. He was attended by Dr. Bessels and Mr. Norton, who did everything in their power to alleviate his sufferings, but without effect. His illness cast a gloom over the entire company, and was the first discouraging circumstance which had occurred in the expedition. His death made us all feel very sad."

Captain Tyson, speaking of Captain Hall's death, says:

"Hall was sick fifteen days. At first he was paralyzed and then delirious. He was insensible when he died. On the eighth of November he died, and was buried on the eleventh. His grave bore south southeast and about five hundred paces distant from the observatory in Polaris bay, which was in latitude eighty-one degrees thirty-eight minutes, longitude sixty-one degrees forty-four minutes, on the shore. We erected a board over his grave with an inscription cut, giving his name, age (fifty years,) date of death, and commander of the North Polar expedition.

"All hands, except the cook, attended his funeral. It was a dark, dismal, cold, windy and disagreeable day. The wind was mournfully howling, and the hearts of all were enveloped in the deepest sadness, and the sailors, whose faces had been bronzed by summer suns and frozen in arctic seas, wept aloud. Captain Hall was universally beloved, and his death, at a time when the enterprise promised so hopefully, was felt by his survivors to be an irretrievable loss. These thoughts were uppermost in the minds of all, and when the funeral returned to the ship there was a hushed silence attending the presence."

"Every day," Esquimaux Joe says, "some of the sledge party and those left on the Polaris used to quarrel. Captain Hall told me, when sick, that somebody gave him something bad. Buddington did not take care of him. His throat was swelled and he could not drink."

Joe further states that Buddington had been anticipating the breaking up of the ice for some time, and if he had wished to have Tyson and his companions on board he could easily have represented matters to them in such a light that they would not have ventured to have been absent at so critical a juncture; but no such intimation was given to the men on the ice. The vessel did not drift away so suddenly that the men on the ice could not have been rescued from their perilous position.

Tyson says: "I could have got aboard the vessel that night and been there now, but I would not leave the women and children. My duty was on the ice. I thought he (Buddington) would get back to us the next day, which he could have done."

Captain Tyson thinks the ill feeling of Buddington and a few others, who were his accomplices, had continued from the first, on account of Captain Hall's determination to go as far north as possible, and Buddington's determination, from fear or some other cause, that he should not. At Hall's death most of the others were in favor of continuing and pushing north, and Tyson says that Buddington several times expressed his determination to send them (Tyson and his party) "on the road to hell" as soon as an opportunity offered.

He characterizes Buddington as a great scoundrel, and declares that he purposely abandoned them. He gives Myers the character of being energetic, but thinks he was not sufficiently aware of the condition of affairs at the time of the separation, and the possibility of getting rescued, to be able to give any opinion upon it. The Germans, according to his account, ruled the ship after Hall's death, and there was neither law nor system on board, every one working entirely on his own account. Bissell and Bryant were anxious to get as far north as possible. Myers had worked hard and lost all his labor.

ATLANTA, May 21.—The gubernatorial convention to-day adopted a memorial to Congress urging its aid to the three great water lines from the West to the Atlantic. Addresses were delivered by Governors Woodson, of Missouri, and Brown, of Tennessee. The convention declined to accept the excursion tendered them. They adjourned sine die. A grand banquet will be given at the Kimball House to-night.

SAVANNAH, GA., May 21.—The Georgia semi-centennial Episcopal Church convention held a meeting to-day. Bishop Beckwith preached the opening sermon. Bishop Stevens, of Pennsylvania, and Bishop Howe, of South Carolina, were present. Bishop Stevens presented a resolution from the Pennsylvania diocese, tendering its congratulations, sympathy and hearty co-operation.

SAN ANTONIO, May 22.—Colonel McKenzie, commanding at Fort Clark, failing to stop raiders, crossed the Rio Grande and attacked the Kickapoos on Mexican soil—killed nineteen warriors, captured forty squaws and much plunder. There is much indignation across the Rio Grande on account of this incursion. McKenzie lost one killed and two fatally wounded.

WASHINGTON, May 23.—Official dispatches received here to-night from General Schofield say Colonel Davis reports that about half the Modocs, being whipped and hard pressed by Hasbrouck, have surrendered unconditionally. Davis says he will push the pursuit of Captain Jack and his party, and hopes to end the war soon.

PRAIRIE CITY, ILL., May 23.—A fearful tornado passed a mile and a half north of this place yesterday, about twenty minutes before six P. M., the extent of which is not yet known here, though it has been heard from ten to fifteen miles east and west. The storm traveled eastward, sweeping nearly everything with it half a mile in width, blowing down houses, barns, outhouses, fences and telegraph lines, killing and injuring several persons. A number of horses and cattle were killed and injured.

KEOTA, IOWA, May 23.—The most terrific storm ever known in this part of the State passed through here yesterday, about three P. M.

It started, as far as heard from, ten miles southwest, on Skunk bottom, traveling in a southeasterly direction to within two and a half miles of this city, sweeping everything before it.

BOSTON, May 24.—The board of trial of the Massachusetts Medical Society, which recently tried certain members of the society for practicing homeopathy on the ground that such practice violated their right to membership, rendered a decision to-day expelling seven physicians from membership in said society.

WASHINGTON, May 24.—A special says the Mexican minister anticipates no trouble between the two countries over the invasion into Mexico after the Kickapoos.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 25.—The British steamer Lord of the Isles, from Hong Kong, arrived this evening, and brought nine hundred Chinese passengers, including the crew of a wrecked junk found in the China sea, numbering nineteen. On May 15 she broke her crank-shaft, and lay to four days and a half. She came to this port working one engine. The steamer brought no China papers. Eighteen hundred Chinese arrived during the week.

NEW YORK, May 27.—Yellow fever patients are commencing to arrive at the quarantine station.

TOPEKA, KANSAS, May 27.—A dispatch from Emporia says the Neosho river has overflowed its banks, thereby causing extensive damage to the crops. Trains on the Missouri, Kansas and Texas railroad are delayed at the bridge across Big John creek, south of Council Grove.

The water is running around both ends of the bridge, destroying the embankment. Cottonwood valley is completely overflowed, and the railroad track is inundated. The bridge at Cedar Grove is gone. Damage immense.

FOREIGN.

CITY OF MEXICO, May 15.—Congress adjourns in a fortnight to September.

The act allowing religious manifestations outside of churches has been repealed.

Nothing done in the railroad matter.

The rebellion in the town of Juchitan, near Tehuantepec, resulted in thirty being killed and many wounded.

LONDON, May 22.—The Standard this morning publishes a dispatch from Shanghai, announcing that the palace of the Mikado of Japan, at Yeddo, was destroyed by fire on the fifth instant.

GENEVA, May 22.—Pere Hyacinthe, in a sermon, attacks the confessional and celibacy; urges the election of priests by the people and the use of the Bible in the national language.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 22.—The Shah of Persia reached this city to-day. He met with a brilliant reception at the railway station.

ROME, May 23.—Count Alexander Mazenl, poet and novelist, is dead. He was eighty-nine years of age.

PARIS, May 24.—The resignation of President Thiers and election of Marshal McMahon to succeed him causes immense excitement here. The streets have been crowded all the evening with people who were discussing the events of the day, but no disturbance is expected.

VERSAILLES, May 25.—The ministry have resigned. Thiers accepted their resignation, and resigned himself when McMahon was elected President. There were some cries around the hall, but no violence was manifested.

PARIS, May 25, Evening.—The change in the presidency has been accomplished without the slightest disturbance. Perfect order prevails throughout France. Troops have been confined to their barracks since yesterday morning, but all is quiet in Paris, and there are no signs of disorder in the departments. Radical journals to-day are calm in tone; they recommend prudence and wisdom on the part of the Republicans, and urge peace and strict adherence to law.

Gambetta has issued a manifesto calling on Republicans to respect the law.

Marshal McMahon has sent a communication to Buffet, president of the Assembly, acknowledging the receipt of an official notification of his election to the presidency, and accepting the office in the following words:

"I will obey the will of the Assembly, the depository of the national sovereignty. It is a heavy responsibility; but, with God's aid and the devotion of the army, I will continue the work of liberating the territory and restoring order, and I will maintain tranquillity and the principles on which it rests. To this I pledge my word as an honest man and soldier."

LONDON, May 25.—Advices from Montevideo, April 23, say yellow fever prevails to such extent that people are flying from that city, and business is suspended.

PARIS, May 26.—The Orleans princes were present in the Assembly when the question was taken on the acceptance of Thiers' resignation. They voted in the affirmative.

Thiers has informed the members of the Left Center that he will resume his seat in the Assembly tomorrow, and will take his place on their benches, accompanied by late Ministers Dufaure, Perier and Leon Say. The whole Left has decided upon a policy of constitutional opposition to the new government.

No disturbance in any portion of the country in consequence of the change in the government. Dispatches from all sections report tranquility. Only half of the troops are held in their barracks.

ROME, May 27.—The Pope in a speech yesterday declared that he had ever prayed for France, but would now pray with greater confidence. The election of Marshal McMahon, he said, was a guarantee of order and justice which had been threatened on all sides.

The Chamber of Deputies finally passed the bill abolishing religious corporations.

MISSION OF ROMAN CATHOLICS.—A correspondent writes to us: "It may be well to place before your readers the following testimony to the value of Roman Catholic missions. It is given, as the result of personal observation, by Rev. E. S. Ffoulkes, and it may serve to show the worthlessness of that commendation which Dr. Littledale wishes the Christian world to bestow upon the work done by the missionaries of the Romish Church. Mr. Ffoulkes says: 'During the Middle Ages, when the Romish Church was richest, it had no missions at all of any kind but one, the Franciscan to China. Roman Catholic missions to the heathen really date from the Reformation. Test them, as I have, on the spot by strict observation, and you will soon estimate them at their proper worth. Where, I ask, is the country converted to Christianity by Roman Catholic missionaries in which a native church exists? I never could find, never could read of any such.'"—London Record.

RESTITUTION.—Rev. Father Boland, of Malden, Massachusetts, formerly of Charlestown, has returned to the latter city the sum of $80 which he received through the confessional as restitution. It is not long since $80 was returned to the same city by the late Father Purcell, of Boston. No other institution but the Catholic confessional can induce conscience-stricken pilferers to make restoration.—Catholic paper.

True; for no other church tolerates thieves within its fold. Protestants prefer a religion that keeps people from stealing to one that experiments in securing the return of stolen goods.

J. H.

A LAWYER and a parson were talking about which way the wind was. The former said: "We go by the courthouse vane." "And we," replied the parson, "go by the church vane." "Well," said the lawyer, "in the matter of wind that is the best authority." And the parson went to cogitate.

WHEN we feel ourselves to be nothing, and are well-nigh ashamed of our noblest efforts, then are we strong if ever.

A Proclamation by the President.

WHEREAS, Under the pretense that William P. Kellogg, the present executive of Louisiana, and the officers associated with him in the State administration, were not duly elected, certain turbulent and disorderly persons have combined together with force and arms to resist the laws and constituted authorities of said State;

AND WHEREAS, It has been duly certified by the proper local authorities, and judicially determined by the inferior and Supreme Courts of said State that said officers are entitled to hold their offices respectively, and execute and discharge the functions thereof;

AND WHEREAS, Congress at its late session, upon a due consideration of the subject, tacitly recognized the said executive, and his associates then as now in office, by refusing to take any action with respect thereto;

AND WHEREAS, It is provided in the constitution of the United States that the United States shall protect every State in this Union, on application of the Legislature, or of the executive when the Legislature cannot be convened, against domestic violence;

AND WHEREAS, It is provided in the laws of the United States that in all cases of insurrection in any State, or of obstruction to the laws thereof, it shall be lawful for the President of the United States, on application of the Legislature of such State, or of the executive when the Legislature cannot be convened, to call forth the militia of any State or States, or to employ such part of the land and naval forces as shall be judged necessary for the purpose of suppressing such insurrection, or causing the laws to be duly executed;

AND WHEREAS, The Legislature of said State is not now in session, and cannot be convened in time to meet the present emergency, and the executive of said State, under section four of article four of the constitution of the United States, the laws passed in pursuance thereof, has therefore made application to me for such part of the military force of the United States as may be necessary and adequate to protect the State and the citizens thereof against domestic violence, and to enforce the due execution of the laws;

AND WHEREAS, It is required that whenever it may be necessary, in the judgment of the President, to use the military force for the purpose aforesaid, he shall forthwith, by proclamation, command such insurgents to disperse and retire peaceably to their respective homes within a limited time;

Now, therefore, I, Ulysses S. Grant, President of the United States, do hereby make proclamation and command said turbulent and disorderly persons to disperse and retire peaceably to their respective abodes within twenty days from this date, and hereafter to submit themselves to the laws and constituted authorities of said State; and I invoke the aid and co-operation of all good citizens thereof to uphold law and preserve the public peace.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington, this twenty-second day of May, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, and of the independence of the United States the ninety-seventh.

U. S. GRANT.

By the President:
J. C. BANCROFT DAVIS,
Acting Secretary of State.

From the Work.

FRANKLIN STATION, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: It affords me very great pleasure to inform you, and all others who may feel interested in my charge, that the Lord is graciously reviving the membership of this church. Quite a number have been converted, and sinners everywhere seem quite concerned.

Our District Conference has just closed here, the exercises of which seemed to give an impetus to all the interests of the church. There were sixteen additions to the membership. After continuous, persistent efforts we now feel that we are fully under way; and a spiritual momentum having been given to all of the machinery—to class meetings, weekly prayer meetings, Sunday schools and the finances—we expect to move grandly on, steadily plying the weapons of our warfare, till we witness the surrender of all the rebellious, and hear them sing: "I love Jesus. He is my Savior." God is with us; therefore our expectations are large. Brethren, pray for us.

Your brother in Christ,
AMOS W. WILLIAMS.

FRANKLIN, LA., May 20, 1873.

OCEAN SPRINGS, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: You are aware that my health was such, last fall, that my physician and friends concluded that my work was nearly done; but by a providential necessity this work (Ocean Springs,) just at the close of the Conference, was deprived of ministerial labor, and I consented to come. Although I could not see how it was possible that I could get here, God opened the way, and I have been here since the first of January. My health has improved beyond my most sanguine expectations. I am now better than I have been—for so long a time together—for twenty years. The affection of my throat does not trouble me now, and my cough has disappeared entirely, although preaching twice on Sunday, besides holding class meeting the same day and weekly prayer meeting. We have sacrament and church conference monthly. We have had no special revival, but a gradual improvement—good prayer meetings, class meetings, sacramental occasions, and a very interesting Sunday school. We have received into the church seven persons, and baptized two adults and two infants. We are trying to get the church in the proper tone of mind and spirit to receive the crowd of visitors who are said to come here for health, so that, if possible, the church at Ocean Springs may be a help to them, and not a curse, and that we may be ready to enter upon the exercises of our District Conference in the spirit of God. We are praying and expecting a good time on the sixth of June.

This is a kind, intelligent community. There are several first-class boarding-houses and hotels. There is but one organized Protestant church (Methodist,) but there are a number of persons of other churches. Some of our best helpers are Presbyterians. God bless them for their charity and fellowship. May we be a mutual help.

Mr. Editor, can you come over to our district meeting on the sixth of June? We should be glad to see you and the publisher of the ADVOCATE.

Yours in Christ Jesus,
J. NICHOLSON.

MERIDIAN DISTRICT CONFERENCE, MISSISSIPPI.—Mr. Editor: By resolution of the District Conference, at its recent session in this city, the secretary was instructed to furnish the ADVOCATE, for publication, the reports of the committees on finance and Sunday schools; also to furnish you a "suitable account of the proceedings and services of this conference occasion." I inclose the reports, which please publish. Hope they will prove interesting and valuable to the readers of the ADVOCATE. The latter report and resolutions were prepared by Chancellor Christian, the very efficient superintendent of the Sabbath school, whose whole heart (and he has a big Methodist one) is in the cause. The report on finance, submitted by Bro. D. G. W. Ellis, and adopted by the conference, shows a condition of affairs in the district that should not exist, and which, I hope, will not much longer, if the resolutions are observed and carried out by those having in hand the temporal affairs of the church. I lay down this proposition, and stand by it: that our failure to pay our preachers—and they ought to be the best-paid, instead of the poorest-paid of any other class—is not so much a want of education in that particular matter, nor of money, but of system. A systematic plan for collecting, and a little industry on the part of stewards, will secure the pastor's living, and he will be happy and more useful.

Well, I must get back to that resolution about the "proceedings and services of the conference." You see, Mr. Editor, I refer to that resolution as my authority for imposing this communication on you.

The conference met at nine A. M. on the twenty-fourth of April, and remained in session three days, Bishop Kavanaugh presiding. Wonderfully does the Bishop contribute to the interest and usefulness of the District Conference. With a fair discrimination, large experience and excellent judgment, he is ever ready with apt suggestions and useful advice as the various interests of the church come under review. Thanks to the committee on religious worship, the Bishop preached three successive days for us. His sermons were remarkable for lucid exposition of doctrine, graphic illustration and spiritual power. They will be long remembered, and the impressions made will surely ripen into practical, permanent good. Our people are improved in spirit, and we hope for yet greater good.

The attendance on the conference, both of preachers and laymen, was good, and much interest was manifested in the proceedings. The reports from the work discovered a great want, in most places, of system and promptness in the management of the temporal interests of the church, especially in providing for the preachers' support—which I have before referred to—and in securing titles to church property. Trustees of church property should be at least as particular about such matters as they are about their own private property.

Some good reports on the spiritual condition of the churches were made. Very properly the Methodist preachers and people make this the great concern of the church. There seems to be increased interest in the Sunday school cause in the district. Lack of teachers is a general complaint—efficient teachers, who will sacrifice ease to be regular, prompt and prepared. In many country places the want of comfortable houses is an obstacle to success, especially in the winter season. Our Sunday school literature is highly approved.

The Bible cause was brought before the conference by Mr. Thomas, superintendent of colporlage for the Southwestern Bible Society. Rev. Mr. Bardwell, of the Presbyterian church of this city, addressed the conference on the subject of the Bible cause in a short, pointed and eloquent talk, calling attention to the original doctrine of the Reformation, that the Bible is the only standard of faith and practice. Dr. Doremus, the general agent, came to confer with the conference about the Bible work in this portion of the field, but, having missed some railroad connection, did not arrive till Saturday evening, after the adjournment. The Bishop and all the preachers are cordial in their co-operation with the society.

East Mississippi Female College came in for its share of attention. This institution, which has sprung up in Meridian within the last two years, was seen to be in a flourishing condition, growing in favor with the people of this section, and increasing the number of its pupils. Prof. Rice has shown himself a first-class educator. Discarding popular clap-trap, and opposed in nature to superficiality, he labors to give his pupils not polish alone, but true mental culture as well. "Thoroughness" is his motto. He is seconded in his views and efforts by his accomplished assistants, Mrs. Rice, Misses Annie Williams and Edmonia Pendleton. The Mississippi Conference has reason to rejoice in its adoption of this as one of its own institutions of learning. It promises to be and is becoming the center of a large and useful influence in this portion of the work. The trustees intend, as soon as may be practicable, to enlarge the building.

Dr. C. R. Rencher, George McCormick, J. M. Floyd and S. B. Watts were elected as lay delegates to the next Annual Conference. Thomas P. Bell and John West, alternates.

Lauderdale Station was selected as the place for our next District Conference. Yours in Christ,

S. B. WATTS, Sec.

MERIDIAN, MISS., May 18, 1873.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON FINANCE.

Your committee, to whom was referred the subject of finance, beg leave to report the following preamble and resolutions:

WHEREAS, It appears from the reports from the different pastoral charges in this district that there is a want of system in collecting the amounts due the pastors; AND WHEREAS, We believe that this defect may be remedied by a well-digested plan, we, your committee, would recommend the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the board of stewards have a meeting as early as practicable after the Annual Conference, when they shall ascertain the amount necessary for the support of the pastor, which amount, except in case of stations, they shall divide fairly and equitably between the several churches.

Resolved, That the steward or stewards of the different churches proceed to assess each member of his or their church, without regard to age, sex or condition, and that he or they may, if necessary, call to his or their aid two or more judicious members of the church to assist him or them in making such assessment, and that the members be urged to pay the amounts assessed them quarterly or monthly.

Resolved, That after such assessment is made it shall be the duty of the steward or stewards to read or cause to be read out publicly, at his or their church, the name of each member, with the amount so assessed to him or her. If, after such assessment, there is a deficiency, or if any member shall refuse to pay the amount assessed him or her, the stewards shall proceed to raise the deficiency in any way that may seem practicable.

D. G. W. ELLIS, Chairman.

The Voice of History.

The London Quarterly, in reviewing a recent publication, has the following deliberate statement in regard to the teachings of history in connection with the Romish Church:

"The last remark we have to make is one which constantly presses itself on the historian's mind, but which political leaders and writers in our country seem as if they could not possibly realize or lay to heart. It is forced upon our attention in nearly every page of this volume. It is this: that the Catholics, wherever they are numerous and powerful in a Protestant nation, compel, as it were by a law of their being, that nation to treat them with stern repression and control. The very essence and primary doctrine of the Romish Church involve undying and unwalvable pretensions, which are incompatible with the freedom or equal rights of the rest of the community. The experiment has been tried many times and in many countries, and always with the same result. Even in this age it is still the crux of the strong empire of Germany, of the new kingdom of Italy, of the critically-placed and much-menaced state of Belgium. Catholicism, if it be true to itself and to its mission, cannot allow State, mixed or secular, to educate its flocks; cannot permit free voting to a Catholic electorate; cannot tolerate that its votaries should prefer the welfare of their country to the interests of their church—the good of Ireland to the sway of Rome; cannot allow the congregations of the faithful to think or act for themselves in matters of the greatest importance to human progress; cannot, wherever and whenever the opportunity is afforded it, abstain from claiming, working for and grasping that supremacy and paramount influence and control which it conscientiously believes to be its inalienable and universal due. By the force of circumstances, by the inexorable logic of its claims, it must be the latestine foe or the disturbing element of every State in which it does not bear sway; and from the position which the Romish Church has always held, and recently avowed with more decision and nakedness than usual, of direct enmity to the chief agencies and achievements of modern civilization and progress, it must now stand out in the estimate of all Protestants, patriots and thinkers, of the hostis humani generis (the enemy of the human race) it has been for so many centuries."

MAY TIME.

BY PERDITA.

Green earth, green trees and blooming flow'rs,
Have you come once more to men?
Once more, sweet, smilt April show'rs,
That I thought could ne'er have been?
Oh, glad young world! oh, joyous spring!
What happy thoughts your blossoms bring!

Earth grows so fair, so sweet, serene,
Now in this morn of the year,
And down among her glades of green
The same wild songs are ringing clear,
While high above and over all
The happy sunbeams glimge and fall!

Again the old-time splendor fills
The woods and fields with enr'rald light;
Again the sweet wild songster thrills
A thousand leaves, in sudden flight;
And kindly thoughts like blossoms spring;
We are so glad we too would sing,

And thank our Father for this gift
Of spring-time blossoms sweet and white,
From winter's cold and snows now shrift
By the kiss of the glad, warm light.
Awake, my snow-bound soul! and sing,
And e'en thine incense-off'ring bring!

Lo! sunlight shines on the widespread plains,
Where morning-glories wreathe the cord;
And golden arrows gild the lanes,
Where linger yet the dews of morn.
Take all these fair gifts and be glad;
God never meant us to be sad.

At least this is the child's glad creed,
(Would that we all would learn it thus!)
Whose young heart is content to feed
On trust—which is the best for us.
How much God's love each blossom shows—
Each golden beam, each wind that blows!

Our hearts grow tender in the spring,
Like all the soft-green things we see,
And, if put tuned aright, could sing
As well, sweet birdie wild, as thee!
There is no life so lost or old
But hath its spring, to warm the cold.

Only look for it far below,
As in the early, bleak March days
We find sweet crocus-bells 'neath snow,
Frost-pale, but sweet always.
And so, beneath the heart's deep snows,
Some precious bud of good still grows.

And so, 'neath sorrows deep and great,
And heavy crosses, hard to bear,
Some great result oft doth but wait
To spring to light, with fruitage fair.
This doth God's boundless mercy show—
That out of sorrows blessings grow.

Education by the State.—No. III.

BY W. A. M'CARTY, D. D.

There is no reason for teaching a school by the State, that will not apply with greater force to preaching a religion by the State. If the State must educate because occupying the place of a parent, then it ought to discharge all parental duties. If it would be good for the State that he should have mental training, it would be better that he should have religious training. If it would be good for the child that he should have mental culture, it would be infinitely better that he should have religion. It is religious culture, mingled with mental culture, that we need—must have—to make good citizens. We have proved that mere mental culture cannot make good citizens.

We now propose to show that State schools cannot make the pupils religious. Romanists and infidels oppose reading the Bible in State schools. This opposition is natural, unavoidable. I would not like to have the Douay version or the Age of Reason read to my children. But is not our good old English Bible better than the Douay version? It is. With all its defects, it is the best version extant. But the question is: Shall we force people to pay taxes to have their children taught contrary to their views? Emerson says: "The man is yet to be born who can look on both sides of a question." We "look on both sides," and thus prove Emerson in the wrong. Wherever Romanists and Protestants are mixed there is no chance to teach religion. The school fund may be divided among denominations, as has been in New York, and as is proposed in Georgia. But the mingling of schools, politics and religion, on the hustings and at the ballot-box, would be bad for all the interests involved—worst of all for religion. But even where all are Protestants, religion cannot be taught. Baptists watch Presbyterians and Methodists and Episcopalians, so that if one of these should become so earnest as to have the students converted the cry would be raised: "The school is becoming sectarian." What is true of the Baptists, in this respect, is true of the others. If there should be a revival in one of the churches the teachers would fear even to let the students attend, or, at all events, to strive to have them converted. Because of these mutual jealousies there can be no religion taught in a State school. Was there ever a revival in a State school? I suppose not, unless the State school was also denominational, or else the revival was promoted by outside influences.—Most religious men in State schools become so afraid of being charged with sectarianism that they fear to exert any direct, effective religious influence. State schools cannot so press religion as to have the student converted. Unless you do this, all the so-called religious instruction will be harmful rather than beneficial. Herbert Spencer could see that the emotional nature needed culture, and that State schools could not reach that: "Only by repeatedly awaking the appropriate emotions can character be changed. Mere ideas received by the intellect, meeting no response from within—having no roots there—are quite inoperative upon conduct. * * * But from all legislative attempts at emotional education may Heaven defend us!" Religion is not merely history and doctrine; it is also life and power. Scripture is medicine for the soul. It is not a quack remedy, that will do no harm if it does no good. It is a heroic remedy. It will cure or kill. The letter killeth, but the Spirit maketh alive. It is the Spirit-pervaded word that quickeneth into life. It is a schoolmaster to lead us to Christ. Not leading us to Christ, it increases our responsibility and condemnation. In this it is not peculiar. Death is also one of God's schoolmasters. But the soldier or the surgeon who becomes familiar with it may be hardened by it. "Experience keeps a school"—sometimes a "dear" one—for "the world, well known, will make us saints or devils long before we die." Those instructed in, and those who were teachers of the law received not the great Teacher. So general and notorious was this that he cried: "The publicans and harlots enter into the kingdom before you." You may read the Bible in the State schools, but you must also, by earnest personal effort, bring them to the truth as it is in Jesus—must have them converted. Dead Scripture is as dead as dead science, or dead philosophy, or any other dead thing. It is not the new light in Christian ethics, so much as the new power in conversion and sanctification, that turns the world upside down. If you would reform society you must have something more than science or philosophy or doctrine. You must have a new nature, inwrought by the Spirit. Short of this there is not salt enough in all your teachings to save society from moral putrefaction. But of all things this is the very thing State schools cannot accomplish.

Finally, we hold that the State cannot educate. Society is an organism, not a mechanism. Men are not ground out, are not woven together to form society; they grow as individuals, and into societies. But this being conceded, it may nevertheless be supposed that legislative hot-house forcing may hasten the growth. It may, indeed, at first increase the bulk, but inevitably to the damage of the hardiness of the plant and the diminution of the flavor of the fruit. Nature develops by inward life-power, not by outward forcing. The "boy-gardener" grew impatient because his flowers did not open so soon as he wished. He "pulled open the calyx." He had flowers a little sooner, but they would have been better flowers had he left them to open of themselves.

The State education theory proceeds upon the hypothesis that the organism is all head—that there are no members. God has established the relation of parent and child. The State proposes to thrust herself between them by assuming the highest, most difficult and delicate parental responsibility. Whoso violates God's order will do mischief. It is not difficult to see some of the mischief that will be done in this instance. The State need not educate the rich man's child. Why should the State put into operation so much costly machinery to do for a man what he can do for himself? It is the poor man then, if any, that needs State intervention. The objections here may not be so patent, but if we look steadily we perceive them come out distinctly and swell like mountains. Industry, frugality and self-denial are qualities of such importance that they need to be tempted out and developed by all the inducements that God and man can set before us. Now God has established the parental relation, in part, to encourage these virtues. But the State comes in, and assumes the parental responsibility by granting him an insurance policy for the education of the child; thus taking away one of the strongest motives for the cultivation of these essential virtues. At the same time it takes from the child the gratitude that would have sprung up in his heart for the parental labor, frugality and self-denial that bought his education. So we perceive that the best the State can do is to educate individuals by uneducating families. It can give a smattering of reading, writing and arithmetic, at the cost of weakening the character of parents and children—in removing the strongest inducements to industry, frugality, self-denial and gratitude. God's plan is to purify, strengthen and ennoble the family. The tendency of State education is to weaken the family relation. We have seen that its corrollary is communism. We now see that it comes from the same infidel spirit that originated free love and its comate errors. It is the ungodly idea fighting against the godly. It is man's wisdom erecting itself above the wisdom of God. No one comprehends this better than Henry Ward Beecher; hence in his address on compulsory education he "cries havoc, and lets slip the dogs of war" against the Christian churches—in effect against the Christian religion.

AUBURN, ALA., May 16, 1873.

Work for the General Conference.

MR. EDITOR: Among the many things to be brought before and accomplished by our approaching General Conference, I think the following should have prominence:

First. The status of the Sunday school superintendents should be fixed. I know it has been thought of and discussed, and attempts made to settle it, but as yet nothing has been done. The only light we have on the subject now is found in Bishop McTyeire's Manual of the Discipline. He says (page 60:) "No specific rule has been laid down for the election of this church officer, but analogy and the reason of things indicate that the election should be under the control of the pastor and the Quarterly Conference." "Analogy and the reason of things" is not law. Law is what the church needs now—a specific rule. The matter as it now stands, to say the least of it, is unsatisfactory, if not prejudicial, in a high degree to our interests. The Discipline says: "Each Quarterly Conference shall be deemed a board of managers, having supervision of all Sunday schools and Sunday school societies within the limits." And yet the superintendent of any given school may not only not be a member of our church, but in no sense whatever be in harmony with its doctrines, government and general economy. An enemy of the church may work his way (not much work, either, for it is an open way) right into the very heart of the church, through the popular election of forty or fifty children to the superintendency of the Sunday school, for the express purpose of alienating our children, and clogging church operations in that direction. Enough upon this point. I do not intend arguing these points now.

Again, if the superintendent is a member of the church, he is by virtue of his office a member of the Quarterly Conference. To be a member of the Quarterly Conference, of course he is amenable to it for his official life. How can one be responsible, in any sense, to a body from which he does not derive his official being? And suppose that he, by common consent or usage, is held responsible in this irregular, illegitimate way—what good is to come of it? He may be grossly negligent and officially dishonest, and in answer to question 2, Quarterly Conference proceedings, be dismissed; the same vote that elevated him in the beginning might on the next Sabbath re-elect him, virtually placing a Sabbath school, in this particular at least, above the mature wisdom of a Quarterly Conference.

Again, as a member of the church, knowing his strength and irresponsibility, except to the school over which he presides, he may and sometimes does exercise his influence, get in the way of the pastor, and hinder the gospel of Christ. I have known a superintendent to deprive a congregation of the love-feast service, for an entire season, by refusing the church on Sabbath morning, the only hour in which it could have been held. Now, sir, that brother ought to have held his office by the nomination of the pastor and election of the Quarterly Conference, his resignation moved by the pastor, and accepted by the conference. In time it may be he would have learned that Methodism is "union all over."

The status of this church officer should by all means be settled. We have the power, and the interest of all demands immediate action. To be at sea, on as important a matter as this, is not wisdom, not prudent. But enough on this point at present.

Second. I think the licensing power (to preach,) and granting recommendations of local preachers for deacon's or elder's orders, as well as recommendations to be admitted into the traveling connection, ought to be relegated to the District Conferences. The reasons for this change are so many and so obvious that, even if I had the space, I lack the inclination to argue the point. Let the same rule now governing the Quarterly Conferences in these matters be transferred to the District Conferences, with perhaps this exception: the examinations to be in the hands of a competent committee, carefully selected.

Again, I think all Quarterly Conference records should be inspected by a District Conference committee for correction, improvement, etc. Or, in other words, the same rule prevailing now in the General Conference relative to Annual Conference minutes should prevail in our District Conferences relative to Quarterly Conference proceedings. This would have a fine influence over all concerned in the matter, and tend to carefulness in the selection of secretaries, and healthful reformation in the item of recording.

And yet again, I think if it is the duty of the recording steward to record Quarterly Conference minutes, the Discipline ought to say so. Among the duties of Quarterly Conferences, it says very plainly that one is "to see that all its proceedings be faithfully recorded, by a secretary chosen for the purpose, in a book to be kept by the recording steward." The law in this makes the recording steward the custodian only of conference records. Yet we have high authority declaring that it is the duty of this church officer to record the minutes. And so it would seem from his designation, etc., but the plain letter of the law is against it. ***

Biographical.

DANIEL PRATT, of Prattville, Alabama, died in Prattville, May 13, 1873, at half-past four A. M. He was born in Temple, New Hampshire, July 20, 1799, of highly respectable parentage, remarkable for their industry, love of order and piety. His early educational advantages were circumscribed, having gone only ten months to school, and that at intervals between the planting and reaping seasons. At the age of sixteen he went as an apprentice to the carpenter's trade. In 1819, at the expiration of his apprenticeship, he made up his mind to come South, and landed in Savannah, Georgia. Shortly after his arrival there the yellow fever broke out. He changed his location to Milledgeville, Georgia, the seat of government. When he landed in Savannah he had a chest of tools and $25. He had, however, what was better than money—strong arms and a willing mind. In the vicinity of Milledgeville he put up several fine houses, and gained quite a reputation for faithful work and prompt attention to business. From thence he moved to Macon, Georgia, which was then being built up. In 1831 he moved to Clinton, Georgia, though while near Macon he formed the acquaintance of Miss Esther Ticknor, to whom he was married—a lady worthy of his hand and heart—and who still survives him. At Clinton he contracted with Mr. Samuel Griswold to superintend his gin-shop for five years, at $500 per annum. At the expiration of one year Mr. Griswold was so much pleased with his services that he proposed a copartnership. In 1833 he moved to Autauga county, and fitted up a temporary shop at General Elmon's, in which he put together a few gins, the materials for which he wagoned. Having fitted up these gins, he found ready sale and prompt pay. He then leased a water privilege of Colonel McNell, near Washington, on the Autanga creek, for five years. Here he put up a shop and operated successfully until the expiration of his lease. Not being able to procure a further lease on living terms, he proposed to Mrs. Pratt that, if she wished, they would go back to their native State and settle themselves permanently. She, knowing his mind, and likely preferring the South herself, preferred remaining in the South to assist him in carrying out his plan of building up a manufacturing village for the purpose of diversifying labor and giving employment to as many as his means would admit. In order to accomplish this he bought of Joseph May one thousand acres of land, three miles above McNell's mills, on the same creek, valuable for its water privilege and pine timber. Here he permanently established himself, and was eminently successful in business. In 1846 he commenced a cotton factory, the original capital of which was $110,000. This is still in operation, giving employment to about one hundred and eighty operatives, from whose labor more than five hundred men, women and children get their support.

Such success in business could not have been attained without superior business qualities and qualifications. These he possessed to a high degree. For the benefit of the young I will mention some of the most prominent traits of his character.

He was raised to business, and consequently was a competent judge of how business should be done. He was untiring in his industry. He knew no such word as fail. His habits of economy and frugality were of the right kind; not of that sort that stooped to pick up dimes when dollars could be reached. He never thought it good economy to put up work out of poor material because that material was cheap. Money was no object when material for building was wanted. He worked for posterity as well as for himself. This trait in his character is fully demonstrated in all the buildings which he superintended in Prattville. He possessed a well-balanced mind, was cautious in all his plans, and never undertook an enterprise without first counting up the cost; hence his judgment was seldom at fault. He rarely ever divulged his plans until they were fully matured and ready to commence operations. He had full reliance on his own judgment; so much so that he never consulted with others as to the propriety of undertaking this or that job. He was always ready to back his judgment by his money and labor. Notwithstanding he relied so confidently on his own judgment, he seldom or never volunteered advice to others unasked; and then, if given, it was with great caution.

Order and arrangement were largely developed in him, having a place for everything and everything in its place. Although seemingly in a hurry in prosecuting his business, he never got things tangled up. System was observed through all his operations. In putting up a building his workmen never had to wait for material, this being furnished in due time and at the proper place; nor did his mason have to wait for his carpenter, nor the carpenter for the mason. All went on harmoniously. He possessed the art, too, of managing his help to a very high degree, never familiarizing himself with them during the hours of business, unless on matters pertaining to business; yet as guests in his parlor or at his table he treated them as honored guests, thereby dignifying labor by honoring the laborer. He was always punctual to pay off the laborer as per contract. This enabled him always to procure good workmen of good character. His manner was courteous to all, yet he never let himself down to undue familiarity with any man. He was slow to make acquaintances in a crowd of strangers, yet his bearing was such as to leave him accessible to all who approached him in a becoming manner.

He was decidedly a religious man, possessing the power as well as the form of godliness, carrying his religious principles into all his business operations and intercourse with others; hence the unbounded confidence which others had in his integrity. In religious as well as temporal matters he believed in work. While others were resolving to work he was at work; hence the secret of his having accomplished so much during his life-time. He did much for the church of his choice—the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Some years before his death he donated a block of buildings, which cost him $20,000, to this church—the upper rooms for a church and Sabbath school, library and preacher's study, and the lower rooms for stores; the rent of which he assigned to support the pastorate of the church. He was not only liberal to his own church, but contributed liberally to other churches in his village. He gave largely to the building of a fine academy in his village, also liberally to the building of a fine courthouse. He also gave a building and lot to the colored people, which cost $1,500, furnished with pulpit and seats, the upper story for a church and Sabbath school room, and the lower for a day school. He was not only liberal to his own village, but assisted in building churches and aided enterprises of learning in various portions of the South. His liberality was not of a spasmodic kind. Whenever and wherever he met an object he gave assistance; it flowed in a constant stream. His bookkeeper once remarked to me that he could not keep a cash account for Mr. Pratt as he wished, showing for what use his money was expended—a great deal went that Mr. Pratt did not see proper to tell him for what purpose it was spent. It is truly astonishing how much he gave away. Could he himself have seen a correct aggregate of the amount it would no doubt have astonished him; but he acted on the scriptural rule of not letting his left hand know what his right did.

He joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1832, and was ever afterward a consistent and orderly member. His promptness in his religious duties was as remarkable as his promptness in secular affairs—never so busy but that he could find time to attend to his religious duties during the week. He seemed to possess the happy faculty of dropping his secular matters suddenly at the sound of the bell, and concentrating his thoughts, feelings and affections on his devotional exercises. He was passionately fond of church music. It seemed to exert a happy influence upon him in his devotional exercises. He looked with much interest on the Sabbath school, and as long as his health would admit he instructed a class. He loved the young people of his village, and used all his influence to get them to attend Sabbath school and church, knowing and feeling that they were the hope of the church.

During his last illness much of the time his sufferings were intense, so that his friends could not converse with him as satisfactorily as they wished. Enough, however, was elicited from him to satisfy them that all was well. He died as he had lived, firmly trusting in God through the Lord Jesus Christ. He had arranged his secular affairs to his notion several months before he was stricken down, even to finishing up the vault which was to contain his earthly remains. S. MIMS.

Faithfulness in Little Things.

We suppose that every man who is capable of cherishing high and holy purposes has now and then been afflicted with the overwhelming conviction that by far the most of his time is frittered away in trifling occupations. We resolve to consecrate ourselves to the accomplishment of some grand end, and so we find ourselves constantly engaged in trivial affairs. We frame high ideals of what we ought to be and to do, but we never reach them. Ten thousand cares press upon us, dividing our time and distracting our energies, and leaving us but limited opportunities to engage in any single work. Of late we have thought much of this subject, and we are free to confess that many of our former opinions have undergone quite a revolution. For, after all, character is better developed and the end of our existence is better accomplished by our attending to whatever comes upon us than by our neglecting these things to pursue some imaginary good of our own. God has circumstanced us so as we are, and not otherwise, and while he has endowed us with a self-determining capacity which makes it possible to select this or that particular work, he has, nevertheless, imposed many daily duties upon us from which we dare not attempt to escape. It is by performing these that we prepare ourselves for greater responsibilities. He that is faithful in little things will be faithful in great things. All the fretful cares of our existence have in view our perfection as immortal beings. If properly used they produce this result. Let us not despise the day of small things, but rather accept the situation, and make the best out of it we can. Our ministerial brethren have much to encounter at this point. They are often perplexed by the multiplicity of their duties. Mothers also feel this fact most forcibly. Who has so many trivial duties as they? And yet who dares to say that there is any grander life in this world than theirs? Instead of vainly trying to accomplish great things, let us all faithfully attend to our little duties, and our life will become great, if not before men, yet before God.—Pacific Methodist.

Obituaries.

DIED, near Vienna, Louisiana, April 16, 1873, B. W. WILSON. He was born in Missouri, July 5, 1813; removed to Arkansas at ten years of age, and was married to Mrs. Nancy Burnham in 1836. Bro. Wilson's parents were primitive Baptists, and his early training was not favorable to the Methodist Church. But he said that, laying aside prejudice and reading the Scriptures for the sake of truth, he became a Methodist in doctrine, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South. He made the Bible his constant companion through life. He was an official member—steward and class-leader—most of the time during his religious life of twenty years. He died in great peace, which is the certain result of a life of constant piety.

S. S. SCOTT.

MRS. SARAH E. MARTIN died in New Orleans, May 1, at the age of fifty-three years. For about forty years Sister Martin had been a member of the Methodist Church, first in Maryland, her native State, and for the last sixteen years resident in New Orleans. Her declining health deprived her of the public services of the church for the last three years of her life; but her sick-chamber was a sanctuary. Sister Martin was indeed an exemplary and lovely Christian. A widow for fifteen years, with five children, she answered to Paul's description in First Timothy v, 5: "Now she that is a widow indeed, and desolate, trusteth in God, and continueth in supplications and prayers night and day." She lived to see all her children members of the church, and she could not have left them at a happier period to do without a mother's care. These she esteemed to be distinguished mercies, and enjoying, besides, the most blessed faith, the strongest assurance and perfect peace, it only remained for her to depart, praising God, as she did with her latest breath, shouting: "Hallelujah! Hallelujah! I go to see that lovely face of the Man of Sorrows, and acquainted with grief!" W. V. TUDOR.

DIED, at the residence of E. J. Ellis, Esq., in Jefferson City, March 5, 1873, ELLEN OLIVIA, youngest daughter of Hon. E. P. and Mrs. E. Ellis, of Amite City, Louisiana.

The subject of this notice, while on a visit to her brother, was seized with that terrible disease, meningitis, and was a great sufferer for six weeks, with an occasional relaxation of the severer symptoms, during which hopes were entertained of her recovery. While these hopes, however, were clouded and finally blasted by the renewed progress of the disease, the intervals of ease and consciousness were improved by the patient sufferer in communion with God, and affording to her near relatives, who were summoned to her bedside, assurances of her spiritual safety.

For some time before her affliction she was an earnest seeker of religion, and had formed the resolution to continue seeking until the Lord should bless her. She was impressed with the thought that she would die young, and experienced a change in her mind with regard to the vanities and pleasures of the world. As her preceptor, the writer can say that he never had a pupil more willing to comply with all the requirements of the school-room, or one more loved by her associates for her equable temper, gentle manners and kindness of heart.

Loved and petted in her household, she was always the same obedient and loving daughter and sister, and needed only regeneration to perfect her moral and social character, as far as such perfection can be attained in this life. Doubtless to lend her to the attainment of this inestimable treasure was the purpose of Infinite Wisdom in her affliction. Surely, then, we may bow in humble resignation, and relinquish to our Father's keeping the saved spirit of our Ollie. T. P.

DIED, at the residence of his son-in-law (the writer,) in Newbern, Alabama, on the twenty-eighth of April, 1873, EDMUND GOFF. He lacked three days of being seventy-nine years old. He was born in North Carolina. His parents moved to Georgia while he was young. They then moved to Jackson county, Mississippi. He embraced religion and joined the Methodist Church when a young man. His walk was ever the walk of the Christian. He was united in matrimony, about 1824, to Miss Lucretia Wells, who was truly a helpmate and a friend to the preachers, and who preceded him to the glory-land seven years. His house was a home for Methodist preachers. He broke up housekeeping and moved to my house in 1866. His health was feeble for years. He was taken with a dumb chill on the seventeenth of March, from which he never recovered. He has left a good report in this community. They all believe that one more has been added to the family above. He told me he was resigned to the will of God. He survived all of his family but his youngest daughter, the wife of the writer. May she have grace to sustain her. J. W. MCCANN.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

WHEREAS, It hath pleased the great Shepherd to take to himself one of the members of his flock within the bounds of Homer circuit—Bro. MARSHALL S. KINNAIREW—known to us all as a devout Christian; therefore, be it

Resolved, By the Quarterly Conference of Homer circuit, Louisiana Conference, convened at Tullp, on this the tenth day of May, 1873, that while we realize the heavy loss that the church, community and bereaved family have sustained in the death of our beloved brother, we feel that our loss is more than compensated by his eternal gain.

Resolved, That while we deeply sympathize with his feeble wife and greatly-afflicted children, we bow submissively to the will of God.

Resolved, That we will endeavor to follow his example by living consistently with our religious profession, die in Christian triumph, and wear a crown of glory.

Resolved, That a copy of the above preamble and resolutions be furnished the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication, and that the bereaved family also be furnished with a copy of the same.

THOS. J. UPTON, Sec.

DIED, at his father's residence, Clarke county, Alabama, on the fifteenth of December, 1872, GEORGE DAVIDSON, son of Samuel P. and Judith C. Davidson, aged twenty years.

The subject of this memoir was raised in Clarke county, and from youth up to manhood had noble traits of character. He was convicted and converted under the ministry of that good man, George T. Ellis. He joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South during a revival at Tallahatta church, in the fall of 1870. After his connection with the church of his choice he lived a consistent member, and was fully prepared for death when "Jesus bid him come up higher." During his protracted illness, while kind hands administered to all his earthly wants, we watched him, with the heetic glow upon his cheek, fade like the golden tint from the rainbow or the dews of morn. He was the stay of an aged father and the pride of a fond mother. He was a kind and affectionate son and a devoted brother. He was loved by all who knew him. In his death the church has suffered an irreparable loss, and Clarke county one of her most promising young men.

He talked calmly of death as he neared the last river. He said he would like to live if it was his Master's will, but committed all things into the care of him who numbers the very hairs of our heads, and without whose cognizance the sparrow cannot fall to the ground. When he was passing through the dark valley and shadow of death, and the cold, clammy sweat gathered upon his forehead, he called loved ones to his bedside, and entreated them to meet him in heaven, "where no farewell tears are shed." ## Christmas Evans.

The following Welsh anecdote of Christmas Evans has been translated into the French, Italian and other European languages. On one occasion, while speaking at a Bible Society meeting over which the Marquis of Anglesea presided, he turned and personally addressed the marquis thus: "I imagine, my lord, that you have died, and that the angel of death has taken your soul to the portals of the holy city. Only a few are admitted into paradise; the entrance is narrow and jealously watched. 'Open!' shouts the angel of death as he presses forward to secure a place in heaven worthy of your lordship.

"'Who to?' asks the guardian of paradise with an authoritative voice.

"'To the honorable the Marquis of Anglesea.'

"'Who is he?'

"'An old officer in the army of the Duke of York.'

"'In that capacity,' says Peter, 'he is not on my list.'

"'But he has filled the office of high master of the ordnance.'

"'That may be possible, but we know him not.'

"'He has been several times lord lieutenant of Ireland.'

"'I say nothing to the contrary, but he is to us a total stranger.'

"'He was the leader of the horse guards at the battle of Waterloo.'

"'I repeat that we know nothing of him.'

"'Besides that, he was for many years president of the Bible Society.'

"'He!' shouts Peter; 'that alters the case. He can enter in; indeed, I see his name recorded among the blessed on the books of my Father.'".

THE most effective methods of imparting religious instruction may be learned from the example of the great Teacher.

FLOWERS OR FRUIT.

BY EMILY E. FORD.

In Ulm's Domkirche high there stands
An altar carved by master hands;
The loveliest forms of leaf and flower
Are wrought in wood with cunning power.

Twined with the linden tassel-blows
In one spring wreath, wave bud and rose;
The freshness and fair promise sweet
Of all June mornings in it meet.

But quainter emblems, curves as fair,
The left side of the altar share;
A wreath festooned of seed capsules,
Where loving skill held gruver's tools.

The pea-pod and the shepherd's purse,
The crowned row of the henbane's bearse;
The rose hip and the moonwort's shield,
The poppy's star-cup from the field.

Which is the fairer garland, say—
The beauteous blossoms of a day,
Or the seed-vessels, which but mask
Long floral generations? Ask

The craftsman to what thought his choice
Of either wreath, his tools gave voice?
Which looks the brighter in the duller,
When wrought in monotone of color?

Which is the sweeter, flower or fruit?
Which is most precious? You are mute—
The dewy morning, before strife;
The glory of completed life!

Textual Helps from Bible Lands.

BY C. S. ROBINSON, D. D.

THE DRAW-NET.

In the heading to the chapter of Matthew's gospel the name is applied which most accurately describes the sort of net employed. It is there called "the draw-net cast into the sea." All along the Italian shores of the Mediterranean, off the banks at Messina, near the landing at Haifa, and at last during our three days' encampment at the Sea of Galilee (storm-stayed,) we witnessed, even to the most minute detail, the entire operations rehearsed by our Lord in his story.

PROPHECY FULFILLED.

These seines were exceedingly large, sometimes several hundred feet long, and required a score of men to work them. We saw them lying along the beach at Tyre for more than a mile. The rough shore was so widely covered that we kept quoting the familiar prophecy, uttered long ago, concerning this most desolate city: "I will make thee like the top of a rock; thou shalt be a place to spread nets upon."

There they lay by the hundred, high and low, drying in the sun. In a few instances the boats were drawn up on the narrow line of sand, and the fishermen sat in them mending the strands as they were broken. In general shape these draw-nets were like those in use the world over. Some of them were in narrow strips, fifteen or twenty feet across, made of cords knotted and woven curiously together. The upper edge was fastened to floats, and the lower to sinkers. Stretched out at the ends of long ropes, they swept a vast surface of the water at once. When a heavy haul was made the men would call for the help of each other, in order to draw it safely in. Indeed all the imagery of these fisher-stories of the Bible was under our eyes in plainest portraiture.

"GATHERED OF EVERY KIND."

It seems hard to awake the oriental mind from its indolent repose; but when an event occurs to arouse the greed of those people, they exhibit an excitement almost frantic. A more enthusiastic picture can hardly be conceived than that of a hundred of these half-clad creatures, at the supreme moment when a seine comes in through the waters, and the lively load shows by its flashing and flopping that the yield is going to be large. The cries of the men are deafening; the villagers run down to the beach; everybody catches hold of the ropes, and when the great bulk is within reach, in the shallow waters, the eager interest with which all peer in sudden silence through the meshes to see what is caught, is as amusing as it is impressive.

Now it happens that the word in the parable rendered "bad" is not the usual term opposing "good." It is a peculiar expression. It means anything but bad fishes. It includes unclean sea-monsters, wild, uncouth creatures, sometimes dangerous and most uncomfortable to handle. Nobody has any notion of the contents of the ocean, unless he has seen one of these seine-loads emptied. Of all the shapes of marine things, I am sure the Mediterranean must contain the most dreadful menagerie. I have seen the men overturn a whole net-ful in order to quickly dispossess some awful creature of its hold on it. They were just glad to "cast the bad away."

MEANING OF THE PARABLE.

The net represents the church. Its purpose is essentially active and aggressive. It says always with Simon Peter: "I go a-fishing." Its office is to catch souls.

It sweeps in what lies before it. Of course there is no way of keeping "the bad" out, and letting "the good" in. You must catch before you can discriminate. Fishermen are just to go on fishing; they cannot always see what they are going to pull in, and are not to blame if they get a shark with the rest.

It would seem that "the good" would be worse off with "the bad" than anybody else. But there is no help for that now. If Christians are in the net, they need not be alarmed that they are in the sea for a little while. If worldlings are in the net, they need not be elated, for they are yet in the sea. If these all ever reach the shore there will be some discriminating questions asked and answered.

The shape of the net hardly counts for much. It is the good fishes which are wanted. When the season is over, and the call comes, fishermen will be ready to leave their nets and follow Jesus. It will be a sight never to be seen in heaven, that of a Christian looking to see what has become of his church.

The immeasurable repose with which fishermen commence the sorting of the fish, after the seine is emptied, is not to be described. They labor in a quiet, business-like operation of most imperturbable calm. They take what is right, they cast away what is not. They "sit down" to that choice, and if anybody supposes that the tumultuous confusions of this life will be perpetuated on the calm shores of eternity, so that he, being "bad," will be gathered with the "good," he will be mistaken to his hurt.—Christian Weekly.

The Terrible Chain.

It has been related by a French writer that the captain of a vessel was one day walking carelessly along by the side of a river not far from its mouth, at low water. As he looked about him, not minding his steps, he did not perceive extended before him a great chain, one end of which was fastened to a ring fixed in a stone on the bank, the other to an anchor sunk in the river. Not seeing it, he stumbled against it, and his foot passing through one of the links of the chain, he could not draw it back again. He struggled violently to extricate himself; he turned his foot first on one side, then on the other, but all in vain. He then called out for help, and some men who were passing heard him and hastened to his assistance.

They strained every nerve to drag the foot through the chain, but it was beginning to swell, and all their efforts were in vain. What was to be done? To unfasten or take away the chain was impossible. It was a mass of iron which could only be moved with the help of a capstan, and there was no time to be lost; for the tide was coming in, and the water rose every moment. "Let us call a smith to saw the chain," said the men to each other, and one of them was dispatched for one to the nearest village, which was at a distance of two or three miles from the spot. The smith came, but it was found that the tools he had brought with him were not powerful enough, and he was obliged to go back to the village for others. At last he returned, but in the meantime the tide had risen, the mighty waves were rolling in, and the water, which at first had barely wet his feet, had now reached the unfortunate man's waist; and the men who had come to his assistance had been forced to get into a boat, and the smith saw he could do nothing for him. What was to be done? Oh, the agony of that moment! There is one last resource, only one, but it is a terrible one. He must sacrifice his leg to save his life. Will he do it? Yes, he will sacrifice anything, everything to escape death. A surgeon is sought without a moment's delay; he comes in hot haste, bringing his case of instruments and everything necessary for the operation. The unhappy man sees him approaching. "Oh! do not lose a moment," he cries; "cut off my leg, doctor, and save my life." But when the doctor reached the spot he was obliged to get into a boat, and it was only by strong strokes of the oars that he could get near the man; the water had reached his neck, and with great trouble they kept his head above water. "It is too late," cried the doctor, and in a few moments the waves rolled over the unhappy man's head—he was lost!

Reader, this terrible story may be useful to us as a comparison. You, like this man, go forth in the morning of life light-hearted and happy. The chain, which through carelessness he does not see, is the snare satan spreads for you. The ring in which his foot is caught is your sin. He believes that he will easily free himself from it, but he deceives himself. The rising tide is death, which is approaching. There is not a moment to be lost; every passing hour renders the chain of sin stronger, salvation more uncertain. What will become of you? No boat in the world can save you; no smith has power to sunder that chain; there is no surgeon skillful enough to sever that which binds you to your sin. What will become of you? There is a Savior, one only—Jesus is his name. He can save you, deliver you, set you free. Turn unto him, call upon him for help; do not delay, for time is passing, and now is the day of salvation. Cast on him but one look of faith; he is worthy of all your trust and all your love. "He became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross," that you might live forever. Do not delay to come to him. Whosoever believeth in him shall not be confounded. Jesus will be with you in the hour of suffering, of danger and of death, and he will deliver you from them all. Come to him at once, for now is the day of salvation.

Sensational.

It is very convenient to keep on hand a few words of good size, full sound and sharp edge, which can be used when we desire to be severe without being definite: Enthusiast, fanatical, romantic, ultra, are veterans in this service. Some readers will remember John Foster's fine essay on one of these words. There are strong historical reasons why a Methodist should be quite indifferent to these words when used by others, and rather cautious in using them himself. Sensational is now kept on active duty. Applied to the pulpit, this word is not likely to accomplish much good in the way of wholesome criticism. It is too wide and vague. It has too many good and bad shades of meaning strangely blended in it. If a man now should collect a large congregation at five or six o'clock in the morning, and preach, it might be considered sensational. Wesley and Whitefield, if history can be trusted, made a sensation. Nor was this result of their ministry unexpected. It was the very thing they resolved and aimed to produce. The earnest preachers of that day tried to turn to some good purpose every current of public feeling or interest. Let an earthquake, a fire, a riot, an execution occur, and it was very likely to be "said or sung" on the following Sabbath. Every wave of public feeling can be turned to religious use, unless the feeling is plainly an outbreak of sinful passion or depravity, and then the pulpit's work is to rebuke and stop it.

It is at least a negative virtue when a minister says: "I never produce, or aim to produce, the slightest sensation in my hearers."

When used as an epithet of blame against others, it is too vague and ambiguous. If a man prostitutes or degrades the pulpit, let the decisive charge be made in clearer words. That is not a question of degree. It is wrong in kind. The minister who takes a step in that direction, who even lets a deliberate wish or aspiration go in that direction, is wrong.

It may be well to make a distinction between the means taken to secure attention, and the message delivered when attention is secured. The former is more directly a matter of taste. Richard Cecil once was preaching to a languid, summer afternoon audience. In his desperation he thought, "I must and will be heard," and suddenly called out: "On last Friday morning a man was hanged at Tyburn!" This gave him their attention, which he kept, and doubtless rewarded. Was this sensational? James Hamilton, of London, regretted, when delivering a course of lectures to his people on Acts, that pulpit propriety would not allow him to have a blackboard or map before him, on which he could trace the routes of the apostle. The very anxiety which one man may feel, to religiously impress his hearers, will lead him to do things which a man of more exacting taste, or perhaps only of a colder temperament, would not do. There is a margin here, within which one may not judge another.

When a preacher by any means, common or uncommon, has secured the attention of his own people, or on a wider scale has gained the public ear, what does he say? A full and well-proportioned view of his teaching will be a fair test of his work as a professed embassador of Christ.

Perhaps nothing will be gained by allowing the word "sensational" to become decidedly an epithet of censure. Words and things have often a closer connection than is supposed. Such habitual use of the word might amount to a tacit roller on the part of the sermon-hearing public to our ministers: "You may fill up an hour on Sunday morning if you wish, and we will listen respectfully. But, remember, you are not to stir, excite or disturb us."

Paul's ministry produced a sensation. And so, in his individual measure, will that of any follower of Paul who combines, as Paul did, purity of motive and life, unselfish zeal, knowledge of human nature and good sense.—Correspondent of Southern Christian Advocate.

Wife's Prayer Answered.

One dear lady, as the Syrophenician woman, repeated her petition, resolved that she would take no denial for the salvation of her husband. He is one of the leading lawyers in the town, and a neglecter of salvation. The answer was delayed till within three days of our leaving Geneva, when, as she was weeping and pleading for its immediate fulfillment, her little one, an interesting boy of about nine years, entered the room and, observing that she had been weeping, exclaimed:

"Ma, why do you cry?"

"Because neither you nor your pa will love Jesus."

"Yes, ma, I will love Jesus!"

"No, you will not, because you will not give your heart to him."

"But, ma, I will love Jesus, and will give my heart to him."

"When, my son? You know I have long been trying to get you to do it. When will you do it?"

"I will do it now," said the little son.

And together mother and son wept, waited and prayed, till the little one was enabled in joyful confidence to say: "I do love Jesus; I have given my heart to him."

The little son, now ardent in the bliss of his first love, went to his father and exclaimed: "Father, won't you love Jesus?"

The affectionate father, surprised and affected with such a question from his little son, seemingly unable to resist such a plea, said: "Yes, my son, I will love Jesus."

"Pa, when will you love Jesus? Will you love him to-day?"

Surely, out of the mouth of babes and sucklings God hath ordained strength.

The will of the strong man was bowed. Then and there the decision was formed: "I will love Jesus to-day."

Father, wife and little son all together on the evening of that day knelt in the presence of the multitude at the altar of prayer. How sweet the privilege of pointing the seeking sinner to the Savior! And this was the bliss of the writer that evening. Scarcely a half hour had passed when Jesus revealed himself, and the man of massive form arose, and testified before the congregation that he did now indeed love Jesus, and had given his heart to him. Would that I could picture on paper the joy-illumined countenance of that happy wife, who now looked on her husband as he was standing beside her, newly won to Jesus, and the beaming face of the little son, through whose instrumentality she had been so sweetly aided in bringing her husband to Jesus.

God answers our prayers not according to our wishes, but our wants; not as in our ignorance we may have asked, but as an enlightened regard to our best interests would have led us to ask.

PREJUDICES, it is well known, are most difficult to eradicate from the heart whose soil has never been loosened or fertilized by education. They grow there firm as weeds among rocks.

INTELLECT in a weak body is like gold in a spent swimmer's pocket—the richer he would be under other circumstances, by so much the greater his danger now.

SO FEARFULLY do sensual pleasures darken the understanding that the tempter, from the very habit of deceiving, becomes the victim of his own delusion.

Scientific.

Wood may be rendered nearly as capable of resisting fire as brick or stone, without great labor or expense, by soaking the dried timber a short time in a solution of soluble glass, a silicate of soda or potash, and afterward immersing it in lime-water, by which the pores of the wood are filled with a silicate of lime. This substance is fire-proof, and cannot be dissolved in water, and its presence and effect in the fiber of the wood are therefore permanent.

AT A late sitting of the French Academy an important paper was read on the results of M. Pasteur's long and patient researches into the causes and the best mode of extirpating that terrible disease of the silk-worm, the pebrine. His efforts appear to have been eminently successful in checking the epidemic by the simple means of destroying the eggs from all moths which can by any possibility have become tainted. The yield of healthy eggs is now again increasing rapidly in the south of France; and in a few years the disease will probably be all but exterminated.

A NEW ART.—Painting on tin-foil has reached so high a degree of perfection as to constitute a new and beautiful decorative art. The tin-foil is stretched on a moistened plate of thick glass and carefully smoothed, the design is painted in oils on the tin, and when perfectly dry is varnished. The foil is then removed from the glass and transported on wooden rollers to the surface or object to which it is to be attached; this is covered with a non-hygrometic gum, and the decoration applied. The flexibility of the tin-foil enables the artist to attach it in the most perfect manner even to surfaces which are very irregular.

AT ITS last session Congress set aside $162,300,000 for defraying the expenses of the national government for the year beginning July 1, 1872. In the detailed report of these appropriations we notice the following special grants made in the interest of science, or for the furtherance of scientific research: "Preparing elements and tables of new planets discovered by American astronomers, $3,000; illustrations, etc., for Hayden's United States Geological Survey of the Territories, $10,000; to make astronomical observations at the highest point on the Pacific railroad, $2,000; observation of the transit of Venus across the disk of the sun, $5,000." In addition to the above are the regular appropriations for the signal service and agricultural bureaus, the collection of mining statistics, the continuance and improvement of the Botanical Gardens, and the care and enlargement of government collections at the Smithsonian Institute and elsewhere, amounting in the aggregate to about $350,000.

IN ADDRESSING the British Association on the geology of Moab, Rev. Dr. Tristram said that the southern end of the Jordan valley is in reality a great synclinal depression. The lowest rocks exposed are those of the new red sandstone. These occur only on the east side of the Jordan, and there are capped by tertiary limestone, resembling that of the backbone of Palestine. Many springs break out at the junction of this lime-tone and the new red sandstone, rendering the eastern shores of the Dead sea very fertile. On the west side only three springs occur, and the country is barren, save near these fountains. Great deposits of marl are heaped against the western banks, but only a little of this occurs on the eastern side. A number of basaltic areas exist on the eastern side of the Dead sea, overlying the tertiary limestone, and are therefore of a later age. The origin of these lava streams is unknown, no craters having been observed in this district. To the northeast of the Dead sea, on the east of the new red sandstone plain, there occurs a range of hills, also of tertiary limestone. Eastward of this again the Arabs tell of a vast volcanic tract, covered with ruined cities, as yet wholly unexplored. The great deposits of salt at the southern end of the Dead sea are of the new red sandstone age. The great saltness of the sea itself is mainly due to this salt washed out and downward by rains and streams. Salt occurs wherever this rock is developed, particularly again in the desert of Sahara.

CARBOLIC ACID has occupied the minds of physicians and health boards ever since its properties were known. As a disinfectant and preventive of contagion its effects are widely acknowledged, and yet many observers prefer other remedies. Its poisonous properties, when taken into the system, are generally known, but only recently has it been accused of having produced poisonous effects by absorption when used as a dressing for amputations or other wounds. Dr. Mary C. Putnam, of New York, has recently called attention to this subject in an address before the Medical Library and Journal Association. In her remarks she referred to her experience in the hospitals of Paris, where she spent several years, and where she observed many examples which proved its use to be injurious, rather than in its favor. In these, for wounds, carbolic acid dressings are commonly used to prevent the absorption of putrid matter into the circulation, but this treatment has often resulted unsatisfactorily. Dr. Laidlee's paper, giving his experience in English hospitals, is cited to prove her views, in which, notwithstanding all his care, all his amputated patients, to whom carbolic acid dressings had been applied, had died. Dr. Putnam further remarks: "This lugubrious statement corresponds entirely with the facts I have had an opportunity of observing closely. For at least three years the use of carbolic or phenic acid has been almost universal in the great surgical wards of the Paris hospitals; but the mortality has not been notably modified, and remains higher than that of London."

GOD has always blest those efforts most of which I most despair.

Religious Intelligence.

A TESTIMONIAL of the value of $20,000 has been presented to Rev. Dr. Moffat, in recognition of his services as a missionary in Africa.

ONE million three hundred thousand children are in the schools in India, supported by the British government. The whole population of British India is now 241,000,000.

THE Old Catholics, anti-infallibilists, with a bishop at their head, will be on stronger ground than ever. They are showing more pluck than they did at first, and promise to hold out.

THE Congregational churches of southwestern Missouri have decided to establish a denominational college in that part of the State, and have selected Springfield as the location for it.

THE foul blot of Mormonism, although originating in this country, long since ceased to be American. It is well known that for many years the recruits have come from England and the north of Europe.

THE English High Churchmen are still laboring to have a bishop appointed for Madagascar. Their movement is opposed by the British government and the Church Missionary Society, out of courtesy to the London Missionary Society, under whom the island has been converted.

THE missionary bodies at Peking, China, have started a magazine, printed in the Chinese characters, of a less religious character than the usual publications of these societies. It has had articles on the Mont Cenis Tunnel, the Suez Canal, telegraphs and like articles, illustrated by rough wood cuts.

A CONFERENCE of upward of 400 Friends (Quakers) has been held in London. Among other things they resolved to enter upon the work of foreign missions. This is a valuable testimony to the practical worth of missions, as this same fraternity, a few years since, sent a delegation of their own to inspect the missions of Asia.

IN IRELAND the Baptists have about thirty-five settled churches, and a large itinerating evangelical agency. Every Irish Baptist missionary is an itinerant preacher, and scatters the seed of the gospel by the wayside and in the streets, and the number of preaching stations is more than five-fold the number of the settled congregations.

THE Chinese Sunday school connected with the Third Congregational church in San Francisco recently celebrated its anniversary. The programme included Scripture recitations, original pieces, letters, dialogues and singing by the Chinese boys, besides other interesting exercises. The boys showed much proficiency, and interested the audience by their speaking.

A MAGNIFICENT illuminated copy of Buddha's works is being executed for a mongol prince in the language of Thibet. The whole consists of the usual 108 volumes, eighty of which are completed. They are printed in letters of gold, and bound in embroidered silk, with silver clasps. The copyist is to receive $25,000 for the work. There are but very few copies of these works in existence.

THE number of converts in the Protestant missions of the world is computed at 1,309,638; of this number 256,879 are communicants. This calculation does not include the 4,355 communicants of the native church at Sierra Leone, nor the 21,000 communicants of the "Baptist Jamaica Union." The number of missionaries and native clergy in the mission-field is 2,176.

ONE of the subjects discussed at the recent meeting of the Oswego Congregational Association of the State of New York was the plan of making weekly offerings for benevolent purposes, and the fact was brought out that in one instance a church which had adopted the system found its collections increase from an average of $3,000 to something like $9,000, while another church reported its receipts doubled.

AN APPEAL is made in the Jewish papers for contributions toward building a synagogue in Washington city. Twelve thousand dollars are asked for. The collection committee consider the establishment of a metropolitan synagogue in that city, with a school of theology which will be considered competent American authority, "merely a question of time;" for the present a synagogue on a less pretentious scale will do.

THE fidelity of the Jew to the faith of his fathers was perhaps never more strikingly demonstrated than by the last report of the society for their conversion, in Philadelphia. Its local missionary states that during the past year he made 334 visits, officiated on 264 occasions, preached seventy-six times, distributed 22,000 pages of tracts at a large expense, and yet he cannot rejoice in the conversion of a single Israelite to Christianity.

AN IMPORTANT BILL.—The Roman correspondent of the True Catholic writes: "A bill has just passed the Italian Senate, decreeing that Christians of all denominations may be candidates for the vacant chairs in the universities." This is a great blow to the Church of Rome; and a strong protest is daily expected from the Vatican against the Italian legislators who enacted and carried by majority this daring attack against the religion of the State.

THE Catholic Review says that Bishop Vaughan's mission to the negroes of the South is prospering, and that at the College of St. Joseph, in England, twenty-three students are preparing for it, six of whom are Americans, five English, six Irish, three Germans, two Hollanders and one Belgian. These all "bind themselves to chastity and obedience to ecclesiastical superiors," as usual; but, in addition, "bind themselves for life to the negro mission as fathers and servants of the blacks." The article closes by saying "many prayers are offered" for them.

THE Sunday school cause is gaining ground and friends in Germany. The London Sunday School Teacher reports of a recent meeting of ladies interested in this cause assembled at Darmstadt: "Twenty-five ladies were present, among them Princess Elizabeth, the mother-in-law of our Princess Alice. Half of the number were already Sunday school teachers, and had passed through much persecution from the public authorities and the clergy, who were opposed to the movement. At this meeting it was resolved that the pastor who conducts the teachers' preparation class should in future question the teachers upon the subject, and encourage them to make inquires of him, that the teachers should regularly visit their scholars, and that the elder girls should be trained so as in time to be qualified for teachers. These are new features in German Sunday schools."

THE last report of the Roman Catholic Association for the Propagation of the Faith claims for 1872 (the association's fiftieth year) native Christians as follows: In China, 108,500; Tonquin, 210,000; Cochin China and Cambodia, 102,538; Siam and Malacca, 18,000; Pondicherry, Mysore and Columbaten, 170,000; Japan, some thousands persecuted; Coren, 18,000 before the persecution; Mantchonia, 8,000; Kouangtong, 15,000 to 20,000; Birmah, 9,350; Thibet and Kouangsi, each some hundreds. These missions contain thirty-two seminaries and colleges, and 446 schools. The association gives in its summary a total of twenty-three bishops, 440 missionaries, 320 native priests and 700,000 native Christians. Its receipts for 1871 were £200,835 13s. 11d., or about $1,004,178 gold.

THE religious intensity which has followed Mr. Hammond's preaching in Denver, Colorado, has never before been witnessed to such a marked degree in that section of the country. A clergyman writes from that point that, very soon after Mr. Hammond arrived, the usual places of worship would not hold all who came out to hear him; and a public hall, capable of holding 2,000 persons, was engaged, which has been crowded every day. Very many have come in from the surrounding country, and have manifested a sincere desire to hear the living word, whether from the lips of a speaker, or from a young convert, or from those who lead in the songs of the sanctuary. It was estimated that on Sunday, March 22, there were assembled at the street meeting not less than 1,000 hearers, while on Sunday there were 5,000.

THE Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Presbyterian Church has under its care the Sidon school in Syria. It has been in operation nine years as a training school for native female helpers in the mission. It is an industrial school, the pupils performing the household labor in the building. They are thus fitted to elevate domestic life in Syria by being taught how to keep house, a most important step in the march of civilization. The girls in this school are plainly but thoroughly educated, and are also carefully instructed in religious truth and the doctrines of Christianity. Many of the graduates of the institution are teaching village schools in various parts of Syria, and some are similarly employed in Egypt. Six thousand dollars are wanted to furnish it with a suitable building.

THE condition and prospects of the first and only native Christian church in Japan form the subject of the deepest interest to all the Protestant missionaries in Japan, and will be anxiously watched by those at home who pray for the people of that country. On Sunday, March 2, the first anniversary of this church was celebrated in Yokohama. The Lord's Supper was partaken of by all the members then present in Yokohama. Five persons were admitted to the membership of the church, which now consists of thirty-five souls. There were present at the services about 120 persons, about 100 being natives. The church has two native elders, who are men of more than usual ability and who possess the scriptural requirements. The unanimous desire of the native Christians expressed itself strongly for pure Christianity, with no admixture of sectarianism. Of their own will, and without the instigation of their missionary teachers, they meet nightly for prayer and the study of the Scriptures. On Sabbath morning and evening they are taught by the missionaries—Rev. Dr. S. R. Brown and Rev. J. H. Ballagh. The missionaries in Yokohama seem united in the belief that the native Christians should be interfered with as little as possible in the formation and perfection of their church organization, and regard themselves as advisers and helpers, and not as leaders or dictators. Their first year's history and experience have led them to hope for the future, to thank God and take courage; and, though full and avowed toleration of the religion which they profess is scarcely granted, yet it is evident to those who know the stuff of which the first native church in Japan is built that neither toleration nor persecution will have much effect upon their character as Christians. Already it becomes necessary to examine carefully those who desire to call themselves Christians, and to check some who are in haste to join the native church without fully realizing what they are doing. One of the most cheering facts connected with this first native Japanese Christian church is that all those who have been thus far received have thoroughly satisfied their foreign teachers and native Christian brethren that they were in deed and in truth Christians. It may be mentioned here that the first edition of 1,000 copies of the Gospel of Mark in the Japanese vernacular has been exhausted. A new edition has been struck off. The first edition of 1,000 copies of the Gospel of John in Japanese has also been printed and is being sold, while the translation of Luke is being revised preparatory to publication.—Independent.

THE Lord has so arranged his work that every one has something to do. If we love him we shall find abundant opportunities of doing him service. Can it be said of us: "They have done what they could."

The Pilgrimage.

The earthly life has this peculiar character and significance. The venerable patriarch, in the presence of Pharaoh, speaks of "the days of the years of my pilgrimage." The faith of the patriarchs apprehended the present as rapidly passing, and the future life as the home. To them the world was a strange land, and they were as strangers in it: "For I am a stranger with thee, and a sojourner, as all my fathers were." This was the confession made in word and deed. They "confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth." This pilgrim-tone pervades the most ancient piety. The promised Canaan was "the land of their pilgrimage." David declares: "My statutes have been my songs in the house of my pilgrimage." This conception of the earthly life sprang from no morbid state, nor was it a gloomy and despairing estimate of the experience and destiny of man. It was simply the truth and the reality, and, to the believing, it was far from sad. The house of their pilgrimage was not without its songs, and the conviction of their pilgrim-lot here was connected with the vivid hope of "a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God."

This is ever the counterpart of those sentiments of mortality and transitoriness in reference to temporal things. To say and to feel that we are simply sojourners here, passing through, tarrying but never settling, is the strongest assertion of our faith in the heavenly goal. In the olden time and now "they that say such things declare plainly that they seek a country." Our character as sojourners is made the ground of careful and holy living. It is as strangers and pilgrims that Christians are besought to "abstain from fleshly lusts which war against the soul." As a reason for going forth unto him without the camp, bearing his reproach, the apostle adds: "For here have we no continuing city, but we seek one to come." Life as a pilgrimage, therefore, is connected with the clearest and most cheering conceptions of a future and an abiding home, and contains the most powerful motives to holy and useful living. Very different indeed is this conviction of faith from those dark and repulsive speculations of the atheistical mind, and the cold and refined conclusions of materialism. To be thus unworldly is not to lose interest in the affairs of time, but it is rather to put a true estimate upon them, and to "do with thy might what thy hand findeth to do."

It is, however, a type or phase of faith which is more in the ascendant in certain periods. It is not often in these days that we hear that beautiful hymn, once most popular and frequent:

How happy is the pilgrim's lot,
How free from every anxious thought,
From worldly hope and fear!
Confined to neither court nor cell,
His soul disdains on earth to dwell,
He only sojourns here.

It may be that only John Wesley and Paul, and the like of them, could truthfully appropriate every stanza, but the general sentiment is not altogether in harmony with the piety of our times. Our songs and confessions have to some extent lost this quality of separateness from the world, and of intimate thought and converse about the unseen and the eternal. The earthly garment, wrought of the fabrics of gain and pleasure and ambition, is not worn loosely, as it should be, but has become a closely-fitting habit, girded and fastened as if it were to be a permanent investment. Instead of conceiving of the earth as the house of our pilgrimage, the tendency is to regard it as a home and as the place of our rest. Instead of realizing that we are strangers, hurrying on to the city which hath foundations, we are stopping to build and plan and enjoy, as if this were "the be-all and the end-all" of human existence.

Religion is a practical, every-day matter, touching all living relations and all human concerns with a healing and sanctifying power; but its purpose is at the same time to lift men out of the merely sensuous, and to raise them above the drudgery of the world. If we are Christians in the best sense of the word, our conversation or citizenship is in heaven, and our affections are set on things above and not on things on the earth. Except as a matter of comparison, the term "long life" is bitterly ironical. While life is really a vapor, a mere puff of smoke, a flower of the field, we talk of long life and think complacently of attaining to old age! Our faith and piety are probably tinged with the prevalent materialism of the world, and we grasp its fleeting shadows and unsubstantial bubbles as if they were all. Men move amidst these illusions, busied and absorbed, and become rooted in the temporal, and only awake to a sense of life's brevity when their trembling spirits are being torn from the earthly anchorage.

To the worldly mind and to the unbelieving heart the pilgrim idea is certainly repulsive. But to the eye of faith it is the true and the glorious. Life as a pilgrimage is attended by the guiding hand of the divine Shepherd, and its fading brevity leads the mind to the amaranth of the skies. It is not a lackadaisical and sickly sentimentality, but it belongs to the most wholesome and sturdy type of religious thought and feeling. If it belongs to the Old Testament pictures of saintly life, with its surroundings of tents and the shiftings of pastoral and nomadic habits, it is the more needful to enforce the idea now, when human pursuits and enterprises have assumed a more substantial form. We may build cities, push inventions, perfect the sciences, and crown the achievements of art, but we are not here to stay.

The Law of Kindness.

In that beautiful description which the wise man has given us of a good wife, not the least among the praises bestowed upon her is this: "In her tongue is the law of kindness." The rule by which the talk is governed, the law by which the tongue is controlled, the line which hedges in the conversation on all sides, is kindness. The design of the gospel is to control every part of man, and it has a special rule or law for every part by which every part shall be controlled. This shows the adaptedness of the gospel to enrich the happiness and to augment the pleasures of life. Where each of these laws is allowed to exert its full force, the person so operated upon realizes more real pleasure in living than if only one or two of them exerted an influence. The law for the control of the tongue—for the guidance of the conversation—is the law of kindness. Now kindness is that "temper which delights in contributing to the happiness of others." When this law controls the tongue, the conversation becomes a literal and a liberal contribution to the stock of other people's happiness. This law, governing and guiding the tongue, does more for the happiness of man, adds more to the general bulk of the world's peace, than the mighty deeds of heroes or the schemes of statesmen. The exercise of this law is quiet and unobtrusive. Kindness never makes a noise. It is not a thing that babbles. It does not recommend itself by blowing trumpets. It falls as gently and as brightly as the rays of the sun, and acts as powerfully. The sun-rays make no noise, though they come down with inconceivable rapidity. In nature there is not a more powerful thing than a sunbeam, and yet there is not a thing that works more gently. Quiet power is the highest type of power. This law of kindness is as quiet in its operations as the law of light, and just as powerful. A kind word will melt its way into the depths of a heart of stone. No resistance can avail to stop its progress. It turns away wrath. It dissipates clouds of melancholy. It pours into the gloomy soul floods of beautiful light. The apostolic precept, "Be kind to one another," touches a chord of the human soul and evokes therefrom a most delightful music. There is no purer pleasure, no sweeter peace, no calmer joy this side of heaven than that which is produced by the practice of this law of kindness. It works both ways. While it flashes a pure light upon the pathway of others, it sends a deep peace down into the heart of the man who exercises it.

Kindness is not generally made up of grand actions. It shows itself in all its beauty and glory in what we are pleased to call "the little things" of life. But by a few strokes of its quiet power it transforms these "little things" into the "greatest of all." Great actions make life a wonder to look at—kindness makes it the most beautiful picture outside of the kingdom of beauty. Now if this law of kindness is specially adapted to human nature, and if the keeping of it develops a quiet power for the accomplishment of good which nothing can successfully resist, and if the practice of it enlarges the domain of happiness by removing the limits which selfishness has set up, then why do we so often hear sharp, cutting, stinging words from those who profess to be governed by gospel law? Why are the followers of the meek One as snappish as wild wolves? Why do they sometimes carry the thunder-cloud on their brows and the fierce lightning-flash in their eyes and the sharp sword in their tongue? How unlike him whom they profess to follow! How unlike him who had "the tongue of the learned, that he should know how to speak a word in season to the weary!" Oh, how appropriate is the prayer of David: "Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth; keep the door of my lips." How calm and peaceful would our world be if men would persistently practice this gospel precept: "Be kind to one another!" The quiet, sunny days of paradise would beautify the earth with their brightness again, and man would walk upon its surface, always breathing the sweet-scented perfumes that float from the flowers which religion plants along the wayside of life.

"Little deeds of kindness,
Little words of love,
Make our earth an Eden
Like the heaven above."

Letter from China.

TO THE CHILDREN.

The following letter from Brother Lambuth, of the China mission, is addressed to the children of the Felicity and Moreau Street Sunday schools of this city. We advise the children and the grown-up people to read it.

SHANGHAI, CHINA, April 10, 1873.

My Dear Young Friends of Felicity and Moreau Sunday School Societies:

You no doubt think it a long time before my next letter about the wicked man who pretended to turn himself into a god called Buddha, by enduring much bodily suffering. This man Buddha pretended to make people happy. How do you think he proposed to do so? He told them they must think of nothing, and then they would become perfectly happy. Many stories are told of attempts made by such men to be happy.

One man fixed his eyes for nine years steadily looking upon a blank wall, hoping thereby to become perfectly happy.

Another one set himself gazing upon the wall belonging to a foreign consul, and all entreaties for him to abandon his position having no effect, the consul ordered men to build a brick wall around him. He did not move until the men had built up the wall to within a few feet of the top of his head, when he raised himself up, leaped over the wall and ran off like a deer.

The introduction of the Buddhist religion into China was not very readily received by the people. It is said the prime minister warned the Emperor against receiving it, and for this he was censured by his sovereign and banished to the southern confines of China. It was many years before it became the religion of the people. Now the country is full of temples, and there are thousands of these lazy priests who are constantly telling lies and deceiving the people. It is in this way they make their living, and not by instructing the people or doing them good. They renounce their families when they enter the order, shave their heads, take a vow to eat no animal food, and remain in the temples day and night. They will not step upon any insect, or do them harm, lest they should destroy the lives of some of their relations—it may be a father or mother, brothers or sisters.

We have seen recently in Shanghai much of the stupidity of these priests. About once a month we see one of these men shut up in a kind of box or cage in or near a temple. On the outside of this box are large characters, stating that the occupant has taken a vow not to come out or eat anything for seven days, until such an amount of money is given him to erect or repair a temple in some distant place. They have been so successful that the number has greatly increased in our midst.

One man shut himself up in such a box with a vow not to come out for three years unless he received a certain amount of money, to be devoted to some religious purpose.

At another place in the settlement another priest had shut himself up in one of these boxes, and was then elevated about ten feet on some poles. The box was about five feet high and about three feet in width. He determined to remain in that position until some one would come to his assistance with contributions sufficient to build him a temple for his god. It seems he was not the only one who was trying to get away from this wicked world by getting into a box and being elevated. Not far from my house, near one of their temples, there was a frame of bamboo or wood erected, rising some forty feet in height, and visible all around. Inside of this frame of wood is a cage of split bamboo, separated a few inches. This cage seems to be nearly square, and measures about two feet and a half on each side, and about three and a half feet high. There were ropes attached to the cage, and by means of a pully it was drawn up some forty feet in the air. In this cage there was a man, who, on account of the smallness of the cage, was drawn up into a very close place, and hundreds of people were standing gazing at it from morning till night. This man was determined to remain there some days without food or drink. His object was to get about $3,000 for the building of a temple in Hangchow, the great city of Idolatrous worship, for it was there Idolatry was first established in China. Day and night while this man was suspended in his bird-cage the people were pouring in with their money, until it was reported that he had succeeded in getting the amount. It rained one day and night during the seven days, and turned quite cold, yet he remained swung up in the air in this cage, exposed to all the weather of the season.

These are the kind of men Buddhist priests are, who ought to be the teachers of good things to the people, but who, owing to their modes of life, become very idiotic, and care nothing for the good of the people in this life or in the world to come. I will send a photograph of it for each school, that you may all more readily realize that it is so.

Pray for us that our faith fail not. We have difficulties with which to contend that our dear Christian friends know not of. Pray for us that God would be with us, and that our blessed Savior may dwell with us and increase our faith, and that we may be baptized afresh with the Holy Spirit. And remember that we pray for you that God would bless your efforts, and that great good may be the result. O what a joy it would be to me to see some of you yet laboring among these dying heathen. Thousands and multiplied thousands are at our doors who know not God and who have not the word of life, and but few to tell them of Jesus and a free salvation. How many of you, in these two devoted schools in the city of New Orleans, who have determined, if it be God's will, to help in this glorious work? Are there not some in our own Christian land who would like to give themselves up to this work of God in a heathen land? Certainly there is great need that we should all pray the Lord to send more laborers into his vineyard, and especially to the ends of the earth, that these dry bones may have life.

Praying the Lord to be with you and us, even to the ends of the earth and at all times, I remain

Yours in the love of Christ,
J. W. LAMBUTH.

From Mexico.

MR. EDITOR: The following letter I have just received from a young friend, the daughter of one of the missionaries to Mexico, which will be of interest to our Sunday schools. I had requested her to write me all about the opening of our chapel.

CITY OF MEXICO, April 20, 1873.

REV. BISHOP KEENER—Dear Sir: It will be "con muchisimo justo" that I try to give you a description, as well as I am able, of the first Sunday in the Capilla de San Andres. Well, it was a beautiful sunshiny day, and that was a great deal. The chapel looked very pretty indeed. The altar has a dark crimson carpet on it, and a nice wooden railing at the front, and the pulpit, I thought, looked exceedingly handsome and suitable (as it was trimmed by mamma, could it be otherwise?) The floor was matted and we had good rush-bottomed chairs. The front door was nice; it is painted and finished very well. I liked the walls very much indeed. They are colored blue on a buff ground, with a narrow red trimming. The pillars are buff, and the ceiling done with very nice frescoing. There were a great number at the Spanish service in the morning—not less than eighty or eighty-five; so it was quite full. The music went well. They all sang, and all sang with spirit. I had my organ there and played for them. At the afternoon (English) service there were about the same number as in the morning. Everybody said they were much pleased with the appearance of the capilla and with the services held there. In the evening it looked better, I thought, than at any other time. We had splendid lights, and the church was as full as it could be. The lamps were suspended from the ceiling, and two were hung on the wall in the middle of the building.

We had no disturbances to speak of. In the afternoon a lottery-ticket woman came in to offer a chance of "cuatro mil pesos" ($4,000.) We invited her to stay to Sunday school, which she did not do, but graciously declined by walking out. I am sure we all enjoyed the services very much. The large window over the door has been put in, which well ventilates the church. But now I must close. I hope I have given you a satisfactory account. We should be very happy to see you here again. Do you ever think of returning? * * *

I remain yours respectfully,
J. B.

One More Appeal.

MR. EDITOR: Your readers have seen the action of the Board of Missions in its appropriations for the ensuing year, and its assessments to the various Annual Conferences. I hope that the same spirit that urged the board to an advanced movement will actuate the whole church. The period has arrived in our history when our church must put on her beautiful garments and march forward, "fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners." God has given us prosperity at home and among our own people. Thousands multiplied have been added to our numbers. In material interests there has likewise been a vast improvement. In the building of houses of worship, parsonages and schools the church is doing well, and in the support of the ministry they are making praiseworthy progress. For all these things we should be devoutly thankful. And now, God having crowned the labors of his servants with signal success, it becomes them to make a bold but humble step forward in their missionary enterprises. The Father above having been so kind and bounteous in his provision for us, we must work in his vineyard. He commands that we go into the hedges, ditches and highways, and compel the people to come, that his house may be filled. The maimed, the halt, the blind, the poor and the outcast must be brought in. A church without a missionary spirit will soon perish. To make war on sin and satan's kingdom is the legitimate work of the church, and woe to that people who lay down their arms and cease to fight the battles of our great Captain.

Without a figure, allow me to urge the brethren to double their collections, where assessments have been made on the old estimates. We want, we must have—or suffer loss—large collections this summer and the approaching autumn to carry out the plans of the Bishops and the board. All our Bishops are fully in the spirit; the board is in solemn earnest, and we pray that the preachers may catch the inspiration, and the membership everywhere experience a new and burning zeal.

One country station in the Tennessee Conference has already more than doubled its assessment since the late meeting of the board, and will add still more to the cause of Christ. This is enlarged liberality, and we hope to see it everywhere exhibiting itself in noble contributions to the glorious work of sending the gospel to the poor and the outcast. Let not our members wait to be called upon by the preachers. Send your contributions to the secretary or treasurer. Make special gifts if you choose—select Mexico or China, or some one of the domestic fields, and all will be right. Make haste! Give while you have a mind and a heart to give, and while you have the means. Small contributions are as thankfully received as large ones, where the giver is not able to cast into the treasury costly gifts. God loves the cheerful giver. Let every man give as God prospers him.

J. B. MCFERRIN, Sec.

New Tracts.

The tracts referred to below by Dr. Summers are well written, suitable for general circulation, and we hope will have a very wide and rapid spread. Dr. Summers says:

The agent has issued in a neat tract, uniform with Dr. Taylor's "Baptism in a Nutshell," the articles which recently appeared in the Advocate, entitled "Why I am not an Episcopalian." Many expressed a desire that they should be issued in this form, as furnishing a convenient answer to those bigoted "Episcopalians" who are always trying to proselyte our members. It makes a neat 18mo tract of thirty-one pages. Uniform with it he has also published a little work, by the editor, on Confirmation, designed to answer a similar purpose. It is a tract of twenty pages. Works of this sort are in demand, and we hope they will be circulated wherever there is need for them. "Why I am not an Episcopalian" is sold at forty cents per dozen net; "Confirmation," thirty cents per dozen net.

THE Carondelet Street Sunday school had a strawberry gathering on Friday night, May 23. The occasion was a very pleasant one, the ladies had everything tastefully arranged, and children and older people enjoyed themselves very much. The superintendent, R. M. Walmsley, is indefatigable in his attention to his duties, and the school flourishes under his care.

IT IS said that Nepotian, by daily reading and meditating on the sacred volume, had made his soul a library of Christ.

IMPORTANT EVENTS are taking place in France. During the past week Thiers has resigned under the pressure of the vote of the Assembly, and Marshal McMahon has been elected in his place. Thiers seems to have lost his place because of his recently-assumed position and declaration in favor of the establishment of a permanent republican government. McMahon was elected by the Right—that is, by the monarchists of all shades and factions—and we suppose that the change in presidents, therefore, means an empire. The regency of Eugenie may be at hand, and the prince imperial, as Napoleon the Fourth, may soon be announced. The Left, the republican side of the Assembly, is in the minority, and although ex-President Thiers is now identified with that party, still it cannot hope to gain control of the government. A monarchy of some kind would seem inevitable, and General McMahon, with the army under his command, is the arbiter of the fate of France. Will he decide for a Bourbon, an Orleanist or a Napoleon? If the prince imperial were grown, the last would be the choice of the soldier President; but with a long regency under Eugenie he would himself be Emperor in all except the name, and this offers a strong inducement for him to declare for the Napoleonic dynasty. McMahon was elected by the most intense anti-republicans, and of course with the single view of bringing about an imperial regime of some sort. The army is devoted to him, and with the bayonets, and the support of a powerful though somewhat divided party, he is in a position to dictate to the nation and to establish a monarchy.

OUR MISSIONARY TO MEXICO, Rev. A. Hernandez, reached this city on Saturday, the twenty-fourth, and was expected to sail for Vera Cruz on Wednesday of this week. A gracious Providence seems to have raised up the very man who is wanted to enter this field, and to occupy the church which has been purchased and neatly fitted up in the City of Mexico. Mr. Hernandez is represented, by those who are acquainted with him and his preaching, as a most humble and devoted Christian, and a man of great eloquence. He is likely to secure a full house anywhere among Spanish-speaking people, and will doubtless build up a flourishing church in the Mexican capital. At present he neither speaks nor understands English, and communicates with his American brethren here through an interpreter. He is a Mexican of the Mexicans—dark skin, dark hair, bright eyes, well formed, in the prime of life, and apparently a live man, soundly converted, and every way qualified for the important work to which he has been assigned.

NOTICE. The Publishing Committee of the ADVOCATE gave it as their opinion that the insertion of the notices of Quarterly Conferences once or twice was sufficient, and, as the space of the paper is valuable, they passed a resolution recommending that they be "not inserted more than once or twice." Our friends who are interested in these appointments will take due notice thereof, as we propose to be governed by the resolution in future.

THE WEEKLY WATCHMAN, LITTLE ROCK, ARKANSAS.—Under contract with E. B. Hotchkiss, editor and proprietor, the subscribers of the Watchman will be furnished with the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE during the time of the suspension of said paper, being thirty-six weeks further, as agreed upon, or until notice thereafter.

THE MEMOIR of Mr. Daniel Pratt, which we publish on our second page, will be read with interest by thousands to whom his name and good deeds have long been familiar.—Neither the country nor the church is often called to mourn the loss of so useful or so good a man.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.—The members of the board of trustees of Homer College will please be in attendance at the next annual meeting, beginning on Monday, the sixteenth of June next, as business of special importance will be presented for their consideration.

THOS. J. UPTON, Fin. Sec.

IN BUSINESS, in politics, in society, there comes the time when a man stands for his integrity or is swayed by inexpediency or by cowardice, by the popular voice. Then character crystallizes into granite, or disintegrates into sand. Then loyalty, it may be common honesty or morality, or a holy reverence for God, makes a man shine.

SNEER not at old clothes. They are often made holy by long sacrifices, by careful foldings away, that they may last until the dear ones are provided for. If many an old coat could speak, what tales it would tell of the noble heart beating underneath!

The Vanderbilt University.

The board of trust of the Vanderbilt University met last week in Nashville, and adopted important measures for the establishment of that institution. The board, in company with the Bishops, visited several sites offered, on both sides of the river, for the location of the university. Liberal propositions were made by the citizens of Edgefield and vicinity, but the Bishops, with the approval of the board, decided that a site in the west end of Nashville was, on the whole, the most eligible. It is indeed a fine location—situated south of the Broad street railroad, about a mile and a half from the capitol, in full view of that noble edifice and of the city generally, as well as of the surrounding country. We can well imagine what a magnificent panorama will be spread out before the eye of the spectator looking out from the lofty towers of the university when it shall be built. There are at least seventy acres in the plat; the soil is deep and rich, gently sloping in all directions from the center, on which, we presume, the main building will be erected. The Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis railway will be extended to the site for the transportation of all building materials. This is very generous on the part of the company. The gas company have promised to lay gas-pipes to the buildings free of cost. Water-works also will be extended to the site. There are two brick residences on the ground, which can be utilized for the university. There is also a native grove of forest-trees, besides a great many ornamental trees that have been planted, with shrubs, flowers, etc. The site is susceptible of any amount of improvement and ornamentation, and when the university buildings, professors' houses, etc., are erected, and the landscape gardener shall have expended his labors upon it, it will be "a thing of beauty and a joy" for many future generations. On one of its commanding eminences we hope an observatory will be erected, in which shall be placed a telescope that shall as far transcend that being constructed for Cambridge as that is to transcend the teleseope of Lord Rosse.

It will be perceived by the report of the proceedings of the board that Dr. Young has been elected secretary. A better selection could not have been made. The doctor is in full sympathy with the enterprise, he is a first-rate scribe and financier, he is proverbially punctual and exact in all his business transactions, and is too prudent and far-seeing to enter on any undertaking which he is not likely to make a success. He has courteously handed to us the following important papers. The first has reference to the location—being a letter to the board from the College of Bishops:

BISHOPS' ROOM, May 9, 1873.

To the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University:

BRETHREN—The College of Bishops returned to their room on yesterday at half-past eleven o'clock, after having viewed the proposed locations of the university in West Nashville and Edgefield. After some general conversation and interchange of views it was unanimously

Resolved, That it is the sense of the College of Bishops that the Vanderbilt University be located west of Nashville, on that parcel of ground situated between the Hillsboro pike and the extension of Broad street, and known as the Litton or Taylor Hill, adjoining Boyd's Hill.

A true extract from the minutes.

H. N. McTYEIRE,
Sec. College of Bishops.

On the reception of this communication the following resolution was unanimously adopted by the board:

Resolved, That we learn with entire satisfaction of the decision of the College of Bishops as to the site for the university.

The annual election required by the by-laws resulted in the choice of the following officers:

Bishop McTyeire, president; Hon. E. H. East, Hon. R. J. Morgan, Hon. L. Q. C. Lamar, Rev. Andrew Hunter, D. D., Rev. John M. Steel, Rev. H. R. Withers, vice presidents; Rev. A. L. P. Green, D. D., treasurer; Rev. R. A. Young, D. D., secretary.

Executive Committee—D. C. Kelley, D. D., Tennessee Conference; W. C. Hearn, Little Rock Conference; G. A. Dannelly, White River Conference; S. H. Babcock, Arkansas Conference; L. C. Garland, L. L. D., North Mississippi Conference; W. C. Johnson, Memphis Conference.

The following are the duties of the secretary:

The secretary shall keep a faithful and permanent record of all the acts of the board, and of the executive committee; shall also have supervision of all soliciting agents, who shall report to him; shall receive all moneys collected, all notes and deeds; collect the notes or the interest thereon; look after all real estate and other subscriptions, donations and bequests; shall keep an entry in a well-bound book of all notes, deeds, subscriptions and bequests; shall pass all moneys over to the treasurer, taking his receipt therefor; and do all other acts required of him by the board. His salary, after the first day of October next, shall be determined by the executive committee.

The duties of the treasurer are:

To receive of the secretary all moneys collected, receipting for the same, and paying them out on the order of the board; to visit all such sections of the country and church convocations as he shall be able to work in behalf of the endowment fund of the university.

The following resolutions were adopted by the board:

Resolved, That after the meeting of the respective co-operating Conferences of the university, no agents shall be employed for the different Conferences, but the duties of such agents shall be performed by the secretary and treasurer.

Resolved, That the Bishop presiding at the Tennessee Conference be requested to appoint Dr. R. A. Young and Dr. A. L. P. Green secretary and treasurer of the Vanderbilt University.

Resolved, That the board pledges itself that so soon as sufficient funds are realized, and put at our disposal, that we will set apart $200,000, the interest of which, or a sufficient amount thereof, shall be forever devoted to aid in the support at the university of young preachers, and the sons of preachers in the traveling ministry, of the co-operating Conferences, under such rules as the board may prescribe.

Resolved, That a building committee of three be appointed for the university, to act in connection with the president of the board.

The chair appointed Dr. Green, Judge East and Colonel Reynolds as the building committee.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

Drink and its Cost in 1872.

We copy the following, by the Rev. Dawson Burns, from the London Primitive Methodist. We fear a showing not much better could be made for the United States. It is appalling.

Some facts and figures in relation to the comparative consumption and cost of intoxicating liquors in the United Kingdom in 1871 and 1872 may be valuable to those who do not regard the struggles of party as of higher interest than the social and moral condition of the realm.

Official statistics relating to British spirits and malt enable us to make an exact comparison between the years named, and though the statistics concerning foreign and colonial spirits and foreign wine have yet to be revised as to 1872, a very close approximation to the true state of the case may be attained.

First, then, as to ardent spirits:

| | 1871. | 1872. |
|---|---|---|
| British spirits consumed, gallons | 24,163,644 | 26,872,183 |
| Foreign and colonial spirits, gallons | 8,926,733 | 9,030,835 |
| Total gallons | 33,090,377 | 35,903,018 |
| Alcohol in ardent spirits, gallons | 16,545,188 | 17,951,509 |
| Cost to the consumer | £33,983,050 | £36,856,101 |

Secondly, as to malt, the quantities used for home-consumed beer, together with the amount of sugar used for the same purpose, enable us to compute the barrels of beer and other malt liquor produced:

| | 1871. | 1872. |
|---|---|---|
| Beer of all kinds consumed, barrels | 25,176,122 | 28,591,826 |
| Alcohol consumed, gallons | 45,317,019 | 51,467,826 |
| Cost to the consumer | £60,422,693 | £68,620,302 |

Thirdly, the foreign wine retained for home consumption is known for 1871, and may be approximately stated for 1872:

| | 1871. | 1872. |
|---|---|---|
| Wine consumed, gallons | 16,144,559 | 16,773,955 |
| Alcohol consumed, gallons | 2,421,683 | 2,516,092 |
| Cost to the consumer | £12,108,419 | £12,580,460 |

In the absence of any official statistics relating to British wines, elder and perry, it may be assumed that the consumption of each was not less in 1872 than in 1871; and it will be a moderate estimate which assigns to these liquors a consumption of 11,000,000 gallons yearly, at an alcoholic strength equal to 650,000 gallons, and at a cost to the consumer of £1,500,000.

We are now prepared for drawing together these lines of figures:

| | 1871. | 1872. |
|---|---|---|
| Ardent spirits consumed, gallons | 33,090,377 | 35,903,018 |
| Wine consumed, gallons | 16,144,559 | 16,773,955 |
| Malt liquors consumed, barrels | 25,176,122 | 28,591,826 |
| Other liquors consumed, gallons | 11,000,000 | 11,000,000 |
| Alcohol consumed, gallons | 64,333,889 | 72,582,879 |
| Cost to consumer | £108,011,162 | £119,550,949 |

We may therefore conclude that, despite the powerful checks put upon the national indulgence in strong drinks, there was an increase in the consumption of such liquors in 1872 over 1871 represented by 7,648,990 gallons of alcohol, and involving an increased expenditure of £11,536,787.

What the after-costs were, in the way of waste of time and capital, in the loss of property and life, in the production of pauperism, crime and disease, and in the taxation and other burdens inevitably resulting, must to a large extent be conjectured; but it admits of little doubt that the pecuniary valuation would barely fall short, if at all, of the direct expenditure upon alcoholic liquors.

The proper effect of such disclosures is not to induce indifference or despair. Remedial measures may be found if diligently sought, and they may be applied, if those who have the power show themselves possessed of the desire.

CHARLES DICKENS wrote in a letter, which is given in Forster's life of him, that he "believed the dissemination of Catholicity to be the most horrible means of political and social degradation left in the world." He wrote this emphatic opinion while observing the effects of popery in a journey through Switzerland and Italy. "In the valley of the Simplon," he continues "hard by here, where (at the bridge of St. Maurice, over the Rhone) this Protestant canton ends and a Catholic canton begins, you might separate two perfectly distinct and different conditions of humanity by drawing a line with your stick in the dust on the ground. On the Protestant side, neatness, cheerfulness, industry, education, continual aspiration, at least, after better things. On the Catholic side, dirt, disease, ignorance, squalor and misery. I have so constantly observed the like of this since I first came abroad that I have a sad misgiving that the religion of Ireland lies as deep at the root of all its sorrows even as English misgovernment and Tory villainy."

This theory of the Irish degradation is obviously the true one. Father Burke is entirely on a wrong track.—Methodist.

A CONVERSATION FAN.

No family circle is complete in social diversions and entertainments without one, and in order to enjoy the pastime it should be distinctly understood that the answers do not numerically follow the questions, but to spice the amusement an answer must be looked for that will afford a biting response to an interrogatory.

Where a direct answer is not to be found to a direct question, it will be discovered that it furnishes the sequel to a sustained conversation, so that couples can carry on a tete-a-tete, which they may not wish to make audible, by silent indications of numbers.

The Child's Corner.

WILLIE'S BREECHES.

BY ETTY O. SALISBURY.

I'm just a little boy, you know,
And scarcely can remember,
When people ask how old I am,
To tell 'em four last 'vember.
And yet for all I am so small,
I made so many stitches
For mamma's fingers that she put
Her little boy in breeches.

You may be sure that I was glad—
I marched right up and kissed her,
Then gave my bibs and petticoats,
And all, to baby sister.
I never whine, now I'm so fine,
And don't get into messes;
For mamma says, if I am bad,
She'll put me back in dresses!

I'd like to tell you how I look,
And will, if I am able:
My eyes are black, my hair is white,
I'm taller than the table.
Sometimes I pass the looking-glass,
And, peeping in, I see there
A round-faced, rosy, roguish boy,
And mamma says it's me there.

There's buttons up and down my legs,
I'd count 'em all, but baby makes,
Just now, an awful racket.
She's sitting there, behind the chair,
With blocks and dolls and Kitty,
A-playing "go to mamma's house,"
Alone, and that's a pity.

I think I'll go and help her some,
I'm sure it would amuse me;
So I won't bother any more
To talk—If you'll excuse me.
But first I'll stand before the glass—
From top to toe it reaches;
Now look! there's head and hands and feet,
And all the rest is breeches!

The Lighthouse.

William Grey was staying a week in the month of November with his uncle, by the seaside. One stormy night he took him outside the front door, when the waves were dashing against the cliff, and the foam from them was driven before the wind. The clouds were thick and dark, and the wind was howling.

It was ten o'clock at night, but William did not like to go to bed, because of the storm.

"What is that?" his uncle said, pointing out to the sea.

"It is a light," the boy answered.

"Yes, it is the lighthouse, and I will tell you what it is placed there for; it is placed there to warn the poor sailors that there are rocks all around. If they pay attention to the light they will keep away from danger. The one who is in the lighthouse is safe, and he it is who puts the light there, and knows all about the danger.

"When I look at the lighthouse it reminds me of God's word. Christ points us to the Scripture, which is spoken of as a light unto my feet, and a lamp unto my path. If you attend to this light, William, it will point out all the dangers of this life; and though storms may arise, and satan may try to keep you in darkness, yet, if you take God's word as your guide, you will be steered safely into the harbor. And what does the Bible say? To whom does it point you?"

"To Jesus, uncle."

"Yes, to Jesus Christ, who gave his life a ransom for many.

"The poor sinner without him must sink into a gulf of darkness and woe, but the one who goes to Jesus, feeling his need of such a Savior, and trusting in his power and willingness to save, will find peace and happiness in him in a world where sorrow and trial are sure not to come.

"Come in-doors and I will tell you what I once heard of a wicked, cruel captain, who was sailing in a vessel on the seas, when he heard a bell. He asked his men what it was, and they told him that a good old man had fastened the bell on to a dangerous rock, and that it floated and swung on the waves, and whenever sailors heard the sound they knew they were near to it, and steered their vessels another way.

"Now this wicked man was in the habit of robbing vessels on the seas. He was very glad when there was a storm, for he hoped ships would be driven on the rocks and wrecked; so when he heard about the bell he laughed, and told his men to put out one of the small boats and row him to the rock. Then he leaned over and cut the bell from the float, and down it went to the bottom of the sea.

"The captain went back to his vessel, and said that the old man who had had the bell tied to the rock would not get many more thanks from the sailors, for they would no longer hear its warning sound, and some of the vessels would be dashed to pieces there.

"After awhile the wicked man sailed away, and for many years he carried on his wicked ways, but at last he came back to that very part again.

"So thick a mist overspread the sky that neither he nor his men could see which way to go; and although they hoped the moon would rise, and the fog clear off, it did not do so, but became thicker and thicker.

"At last all on board felt a dreadful shock, and with a wild cry of despair their captain told them that the vessel had struck upon the rock from which he had cut the bell. A great hole was made in the bottom of the ship, the waters rushed in, and down she went, and all on board were drowned."

What a dreadful end for the captain, and yet he deserved it. He had delighted in bringing others into danger, and had tried to worry and torment one who wanted to save his fellow-creatures, and it is a true picture of many in our day. They do not own the Savior of the world as their Lord, and they try to keep others from finding the way of peace and safety.—The Life-Boat.

Bonnie Christie.

Two boys were in a school-room alone together, when some fireworks, contrary to the master's express prohibition, exploded. The one boy denied it; the other, Bonnie Christie, would neither admit nor deny it, and was severely flogged for his obstinacy. When the boys got alone again:

"Why didn't you deny it?" asked the real delinquent.

"Because there were only we two, and one of us must have lied," said Bonnie.

"Then why not say I did it?"

"Because you said you didn't, and I would spare the liar."

The boy's heart melted—Bonnie's moral gallantry subdued him.

When school resumed the young rogue marched up to the master's desk and said, "Please, sir, I can't bear to be a liar—I let off the squibs," and burst into tears.

The master's eye glistened on the self-accuser, and the unmerited punishment he had inflicted on his schoolmate smote his conscience. Before the whole school, hand in hand with the culprit, as if they were paired in the confession, the master walked down to where Christie sat, and said aloud, with emotion:

"Bonnie, Bonnie, lad—he and I beg your pardon; we are both to blame."

The school was hushed and still, as older schools are apt to be when anything true and noble is being done—so still they might have heard Bonnie's big boy-tear drop proudly on his copy-book, as he sat enjoying the moral triumph which subdued himself as well as the rest; and when, for the want of something else to say, he gently cried, "Master forever!" the glorious shout of the scholars filled the man's eyes with something behind his spectacles, which made him wipe them before he resumed the chair.

A Tame Bear.

Mr. Goodrich, in his Animal Kingdom, when referring to bears, says:

"Some years ago a boy of New Hampshire found a very young cub near Lake Winnepeg, and carried it home with him. It was fed and brought up about the house of the boy's father, and became as tame as a dog.

"Every day its youthful captor had to go to school at some distance, and by degrees the bear became his daily companion. At first the other scholars were shy of the creature's acquaintance; but ere long it became their regular playfellow, and they delighted in sharing with it the little store of provisions which they brought for their sustenance in small bags. After two years of civilization, however, the bear wandered to the woods and did not return. Search was made for him, but in vain.

"Four succeeding years passed away, and in the interval changes had occurred in the school alluded to. An old lady had succeeded the ancient master, and a new generation of pupils had taken the place of the former ones. One very cold winter day, while the schoolmistress was busy with her humble lessons, a boy chanced to leave the door half-way open on his entrance, and suddenly a large bear walked in.

"The consternation of the old lady and her boys and girls was unspeakable. Both schoolmistress and pupils would fain have been abroad; but the bear was in her path, and all that could be done was to fly off as far as possible behind the tables and benches. But the bear troubled nobody. He walked quietly up to the fireplace and warmed himself, exhibiting much satisfaction in his countenance during the process.

"He remained thus about a quarter of an hour, and then walked up to the wall where the provender-bags and baskets of the pupils were suspended. Standing on his hind feet he took hold of these successively, put his paws into them, and made free with the bread, fruit and other eatables therein contained. He next tried the schoolmistress' desk, where some little provisions usually were; but, finding it firmly shut, he went up again to the fire, and, after a few minutes' stay before it, he walked out by the way he came in.

"As soon as the schoolmistress and her pupils had courage to move, the alarm was given to the neighbors. Several young men immediately started after the bear, and, as its track was perfectly visible upon the snow, they soon came up with it and killed it. Then it was that by certain marks upon its skin some of the pursuers recognized the old friend of their school-days. Great regret was felt at the loss of the creature. It was like killing a human friend rather than a wild animal."—New York Observer.

THE MILL-HORSE AND THE RACER. "What a dull life yours is!" said a racer to a mill-horse.

"Dull enough," said the mill-horse.

"You must feel uncommonly stupid!"

"Stupid enough," said the mill-horse.

"Round and round—round and round, and that day after day! No wonder your head hangs down—why, you're just a piece of machinery, and no better."

The mill-horse didn't answer, but continued going his round; but the racer, who was tethered near, repeated his remarks every time he came within hearing.

"I'm afraid I've offended you;" said the racer.

"Oh! no," answered the mill-horse; "but my quiet life has this advantage in it—it gives me time to think before I speak."

"And have you been thinking while I have been talking?"

"Yes," answered the mill-horse; "and I'll tell you what I've been thinking: You're a very fine fellow, and I'm contemptible in your sight; but I know which of us would be the most missed. Depend on this, if I and my breed were to take our departure, and no other substitutes could be found, folks would do without racing, and take you and your breed into our places."

"THE STING OF DEATH IS SIN."—I once met a little boy in Wales, crying bitterly at his father's door, afraid to go in. I asked him what made him cry. He told me that his mother had sent him out clean in the morning, but that he had got into some water and made his clothes dirty. So he feared to go in, because his father would punish him.

Seek at once, through Jesus, to be reconciled to him. We have soiled our characters by sin, and therefore it is that we fear death—dread the meeting with our Father.

"MOTHER," said Johnny, running into the house when the thunder was sounding heavily, "it's going to rain, for don't you hear the pump going."

Farm, Garden and Household.

Hardy Flowers.

It will be good news to that numerous class—old-fashioned people—to know that the old-fashioned flowers are to come up again. At least the horticultural papers tell us that they are "coming up" in English estimation, and what English and French do in these things it seems a matter of course that we must imitate. No one can ever go into an old-fashioned farm-garden, of which the German and Quaker element in Pennsylvania affords many illustrious examples, without a thrill of delight at the sight of so many of the floral acquaintances of twenty to forty years ago, which have since that time been banished from the gay and pretentious "beds" of highly aristocratic people. What, for instance, can afford more real delight than a dense mass of the old-fashioned crimson peony, or, as we used to pronounce it, "piney?" The most brilliant bed of the modern improved red geraniums will not begin to compare in beauty with a mass of these. And yet the florists tell us, if we ask for this good old plant, that they do not keep it any more, but offer you instead a lot of "improved" kinds under the names of Pottsii and Whiteii, and a lot of other "eyes," as we see in a long list in a catalogue before us, which are neither red nor white, nor anything decided, but simply "novelties of the latest introduction." Glad shall we be to see the lot of motley intruders give place to the rich crimson kind of our old gardens and young days.

We scarcely need any more charming flowers than our old bergamot, the sweet william, the fringed pink, ragged robins, perennial phlox, double catchfly, Canterbury bells, and so forth, although they have not Latin names which can be reeled off to the length of a moderate garden line; and it will give all of our old-fashioned people who have kept them in their glorious old gardens, through good report and through ill report, unfeigned pleasure to know that for some time to come—at least until some new freak of fashion upsets the programme—they are to be just the thing.

The culture of hardy flowers is so easy, and the satisfaction they give so great, that it is no wonder they are again growing into people's good graces. The only wonder is that people should have ever ran after strange gods, and left these innocent little flowers to the care of the good old farming people in the country districts, who, after all, have as fine a taste for the beautiful as those of far greater conceit.—Germantown Telegraph.

DAIRY NOTES.—At this season of the year, when roots, especially turnips, are fed to milch cows, there is frequent complaint of the flavor they transmit to the butter. A correspondent of the Agriculturist states that last winter he fed turnips in the usual way at milking-time to five cows, until the milk and butter became so strong that it could not be used. He then commenced feeding immediately after milking, and found that "there was not a particle of turnip-flavor in the milk or butter." After a time the taste returned. On investigation he found that one of the cows was nearly dry, and was milked only once a day, while she was fed with turnips twice a day. She gave but a pint of milk per day, so that when fed in the morning she could have had only about half a pint of milk in her bag; yet this received so much taste from the turnips that it spoiled the milk of four other cows in full flow. To make the test complete he had her milked twice a day, when the difficulty at once ceased, and did not recur. Evidently a very small amount of milk in the udder will suffice to do the mischief, and if drying-off cows are milked only once a day while on turnip feed their milk should not be mixed with that of the rest of the herd.—Rural Alabamian.

STRAWBERRY ICE-CREAM is liked by many, and it allows the fruit to be used in a form which presents a pleasing variety. A quart of berries is sprinkled over with half a pound of fine white sugar. After standing for three hours the berries are mashed and the juice strained. Add another half pound of sugar to the juice, and a quart of fresh cream stirred in gradually. Freeze in the usual manner. This may be varied by adding to the cream, when it is partly frozen, a pint of unsugared berries, and when this is done it is necessary to add an extra cupful of sugar to the juice that is pressed from the first berries and mixed with the cream.

ORANGE AND COCOANUT MERINGUE.—In cases where it is not convenient to have a cooked pudding, a simple and delicious meringue may be made as follows: Take one dozen sweet oranges, peeled and sliced, one grated cocoanut and half a pint or more of powdered sugar. Spread a layer of the orange in a glass dish, scatter the cocoanut thickly over this. Then put on another layer of oranges, with cocoanut and sugar, as before. Fill up the dish in this way, having cocoanut and sugar for the top layer. Cut through in sections with a sharp knife when serving.

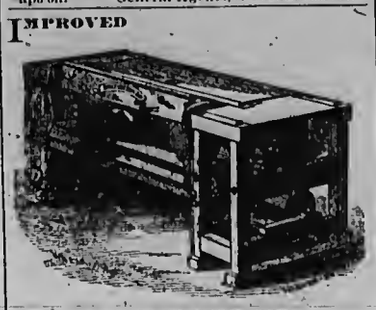
THE catalogue of fruits of the American Pomological Society gives a list of ninety-one varieties of pears, with their adaptation to different parts of the country. The Bartlett leads the list, with votes from thirty States and Territories. Beurre d'Anjou comes next, with twenty-six votes; the Seekel third, with twenty-five votes. Flemish beauty, Duchess d'Angouleme and Bloodgood stand nearly as high.

A PROFITABLE TREE.—W. H. Ragan has pears of the Flemish beauty variety, grown by his father at Fillmore, Putnam county, Indiana, which grew upon a tree that has for the last seven years yielded fruit, the average sales of which amounted to $201 per year, besides what was required for family use.—Northwestern Farmer.

MACHINERY, TIES, ETC.

THE DUBOIS FLANGE COTTON GIN.

By the Flange the Cotton is kept in contact with the teeth on each side, until the fiber is taken from the seed, without allowing them to be taken up by the return motion of the rod, as in other Gins.



The Flange prevents hulls, stems, sticks and hard substances from being cut, consequently making a better sample out of roughly-picked cotton than other Gins.

We have sold more from this point than any agency of any other Gin for the crop of 1872-73; consequently we can furnish more and better references, and they are warranted to come up to all that is said of them.

We keep constantly on hand all sizes, from 40 to 80-SAW STANDS, left or right. Price, $5 per Saw.

IMPROVED

EAGLE COTTON GINS.

The great popularity of the EAGLE COTTON GINS is established from the well-known fact that they are the most reliable, strongest and best built Cotton Gins ever made. The Eagle Cotton Gin runs lighter than any other gin, thus having a great advantage for planters who wish to run by horse power. All the numerous planters who use the Eagle Cotton Gin will certify to the fact that when their cotton is sent to market it always brings the highest market price, as no other gin can produce a finer or a better sample of cotton than the Eagle Cotton Gins. Over seventeen thousand of the Eagle Cotton Gins have been made and sold. During a period of twenty years the undersigned has had the agency of the Eagle Cotton Gin in New Orleans. He has never had a gin returned or rejected out of the immense number sold. The saw cylinders of all the Eagle Cotton Gins are twelve inches in diameter, which is two inches larger than most other kinds of gins, thus giving our forty-saw gin more teeth, and they are more than equal to the fifty-saw gins of other makers, who use only a ten-inch cylinder, and the same great advantage of the twelve-inch cylinder in larger-sized gins can be easily estimated. Planters who wish a reliable cotton gin, with an established reputation, can purchase an Eagle Cotton Gin with a certainty that they are not making an untried experiment, but will obtain a cotton gin which is indorsed by the oldest and largest planters in the country as the best in use. A large stock of the Eagle Cotton Gins are always kept on sale in New Orleans, ready for immediate shipment. Planters should be particular to state if they want right or left-hand motion gins.

New Orleans Markets.

From the New Orleans Price Current.

We have but little change to notice in the general market, which continues quiet.

The river is 2 feet 5 inches below high-water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the twenty-third instant:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Louisiana and Mississippi | bales... | 4,913 |
| Tennessee | | 2,462 |
| Arkansas | | 230 |
| Mobile | | 1,008 |
| Texas | | 52 |
| Total | | 8,665 |

On Saturday, not including 400 bales withheld on Friday, the sales embraced 3,050 bales, at prices indicating no quotable variation, but with the advantage, if any, on the side of the buyers. On Monday the movement continued with a moderate degree of spirit, but operations were restricted by scant supplies of the kinds wanted, and the business did not exceed 2,900 bales. All desirable kinds were held more firmly, but on the whole nothing transpired to indicate any quotable variation. On Tuesday the market opened with a fair inquiry, and although operations were restricted by scant supplies of the kinds most in request and the demand checked by the want of freight-room, yet about 1,500 bales changed hands during the morning, mostly at steady prices, after which the movement exhibited only a moderate degree of spirit, and the entire sales of the day did not exceed 2,550 bales. Prices were generally steady, but in exceptional cases buyers obtained the advantage. Ordinary, good style, sold at 12½c., strict ordinary to good ordinary at 13⅜@13¾c., good ordinary at 15c., strict good ordinary at 16c., and strict low middling to middling at 18c. Strict ordinary has commanded rather stiffer prices than last week, and we revise our figures for that grade accordingly. Styles between strict ordinary and good ordinary have been in some request at intermediate rates.

The above, not including 400 bales omitted on Friday, makes an aggregate for the past three days of 8,500 bales, against 5,650 for the corresponding time last week and 8,700 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 1,174,565 bales, against 942,809 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 734,555 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 247,256 to Great Britain, of 68,299 to France, and of 166,019 to other foreign ports. We quote:

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, May 28.—The Presbyterian Assembly were received by the members of the cabinet, in the blue room, at the White House, at noon to-day.

Secretaries Fish, Belknap, Delano and Richardson, and Attorney General Williams welcomed them on behalf of the President.

Rev. Dr. S. J. Niccolls, of St. Louis, the former moderator of the Assembly, in the absence of Dr. Crosby, addressed the cabinet.

LAWRENCE, KANSAS, May 28.—The excessive rains all over Kansas have raised the streams to flood height. The Kansas river is higher than it has been for the past five years.

WEST STATION, MISS., May 28.—The business portion of Vaiden was destroyed by fire last night at half-past one o'clock. Loss about $75,000; insurance, $35,000.

BOSTON, May 30.—It is impossible to give at once all the losses, or even the names of the losers, by the fire to-day; but it can be said that from Avery street to Boylston street, on the west side of Washington street, is nearly or quite destroyed. On the other side, from Hayward place to Essex street, little is left to show what existed there at eight o'clock this morning. The Globe Theater saved nearly all the wardrobes. Two persons are known to be killed by falling walls so far.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 30.—An unknown Chinaman was murdered last night. There are apprehensions of further murders and rioting. The Chinese are greatly alarmed, and have closed their theaters and stores. The law-abiding citizens of all classes denounce in strong terms the efforts of unprincipled demagogues to incite the murder of these people. There is a general determination that the laws shall be maintained at all hazards.

CINCINNATI, May 30.—The ministerial conference of the New Jerusalem Church of the United States met here to-day. Rev. George Field, of Toronto, Canada, read a paper on the proper form and order of public religious worship. The conference will continue several days.

NEW YORK, May 30.—Twelve new cases of epizootic among the horses on the Coney Island railroad yesterday, making eighty-four now sick, and several new cases reported on other Brooklyn city roads.

CINCINNATI, May 31.—At the morning session of the ministerial conference of the New Jerusalem Church, now in session here, a committee was appointed to prepare a new liturgy. The annual address was delivered by the Rev. W. H. Benade, of Pittsburg, an authority of Swedenborg. The afternoon was principally devoted to the discussion of the address.

NEW YORK, June 1.—The Brooklyn Eagle says that Mr. Beecher and his friends have determined to take definite action on the whole matter of the Bowen-Tilton-Beecher scandal, and that at a meeting of the deacons of Plymouth church, held on Friday evening, it was resolved to proceed at once with the investigation. Mr. Bowen is said to be now in Indianapolis.

APPLEGATE'S MANSION, CLEAR LAKE, CAL., June 1.—A series of prolonged yells and cheers aroused this camp from a pleasant siesta half an hour after the departure of the last courier. Generals Davis and Wheaton and other officers, with all the men, rushed from the house and tents to find out the cause of the uproar, and at once the whole camp was in a state of commotion. Down the level plain north of the house was a grand cavalcade of mounted horsemen.

The steeds rushed forward at a furious rate, and soon reached the group of spectators scattered about the premises. "Captain Jack captured!" shouted a sturdy sergeant, and again the valley re echoed with cheers and yells. The mounted command was Perry's. He had returned from a scout of twenty-three hours. Three miles above the mouth of Yellow creek, at half-past ten this morning, the Warm Spring scouts struck the trail, and, after a brief search, the Modocs were discovered. Colonel Perry surrounded the Indians. His men were bound to fight. Suddenly a Modoc shot out from the rocks with a white flag. He met the Warm Spring Indians and said that Jack wanted to surrender. Three scouts were sent to meet Captain Jack. He came out cautiously, glanced about him a moment, and then, as if giving up all hope, came forward and held out his hand to his visitors. Immediately two of his warriors, five squaws and seven children started forth and joined him in the surrender.

Captain Jack is about forty years old; is five feet eight inches high, and compactly built. He has a large and well-formed face, and, although dressed in old clothes, he looks every inch a chief. He does not speak to any one.

The Modocs are grouped in a field near the house, and are surrounded by a guard.

The spectators peer into Jack's face with eager interest, but he heeds them not. He is as still as a statue.

WASHINGTON, June 3.—The Department of State has received information from Mr. Delong to the effect that religious toleration in Japan has not been decreed. The laws and edicts against Christianity have not been abolished, but orders have been issued for the return of the banished Christians to their homes, and for the removal of offensive proclamations against Christianity therein. The government councils favoring religious toleration were said to be still in the minority, but it was thought that the time was not far distant when the decrees against the freedom of thought upon all subjects would be abolished. Any attempt to hasten such reforms faster than they were being accomplished would, it was supposed, result in defeat.

FOREIGN.

MILAN, May 29.—The funeral of Manzoni, poet and historian, took place to-day. The town is draped in mourning. Prince Humbert, the Duke of Aosta and the ex-King of Spain were among the pall-bearers. One hundred thousand persons were on the streets to witness the procession.

PARIS, May 31.—The Orleanists in the Assembly are seeking an alliance with the Left Center, having refused to form a coalition with the Legitimists and Bonapartists. The Left Center, however, refused to entertain their proposition.

BERLIN, May 31.—The Shah of Persia arrived to-day, and was received at the railway station by the Emperor William.

CONSTANTINOPLE, May 31.—Another disastrous conflagration has occurred in this city. Fifty houses were destroyed before the flames were checked.

MADRID, June 1.—The Constituent Cortes assembled yesterday. The session was formally opened by Senor Figueras, the president of the ministry, with a speech in which he maintained the right of the Spanish people to choose their own government. The republic, he said, would pursue the policy of order at home. It had no concern with revolutions in the European States, and was not ambitious of territorial aggrandizement. He promised to abolish slavery in Cuba as in Porto Rico, and advocated the separation of Church and State. The Cortes then organized by electing Senor Orenz, a Federal Republican, its president.

LONDON, June 2.—The Times of this morning publishes a special dispatch from Berlin, which says the German government is dissatisfied with President McMahon's address to the French Assembly, and will not enter into regular diplomatic relations with his government until satisfied that France will faithfully adhere to the treaty of Frankfort.

HALIFAX, June 3.—News is received of the total wreck of the missionary ship Day Spring in the New Hebrides. The vessel was built in New Glasgow, ten years ago, by the Presbyterians of these provinces, for missionary service in the South seas.

How It Is Done.

The statement made a day or two since that "an electrician would leave London to ascertain at what point the Atlantic cable had been broken," has naturally enough excited the curiosity of all people of an inquiring turn of mind to know how the thing can be done. To an unscientific person it would seem utterly impossible to accomplish such a feat, but to one who knows how, it is the easiest thing in the world. A telegraphic wire will transmit an electromagnetic wave or "current" in proportion to the square of its diameter. The resistance to the transmission of the wave diminishes in proportion as the square of the diameter is increased. This is one law for the electrician. The second is that the resistance to the transmission of the wave increases in direct proportion to the length of the wire or cable over which it is sent. These two laws furnish the bases for the electrician's observations, calculations and results. He knows, to start with, the precise amount of resistance that a mile of the cable will oppose to the transmission of a given quantity of electro motive force. He has delicate and wonderful instruments, made by expert mechanics, that enable him to measure this with accuracy for half a mile or for ten thousand miles. Having this knowledge and these measuring instruments, and having control of the quantity of electricity he is putting on the wire, he is able to calculate to a nicety how many miles of the cable it is transmitted over before it encounters a greater resistance than that which is due to the length and diameter of the cable itself. At or near the end of that number of miles of cable, though it be a thousand miles from land, and two miles under the surface of the sea, the "fault" or break the electrician is in search of will be found. Cincinnati Times, May 25.

HOW WOULD it do for us to say to-day some of the things we intend to say in our last illness? Honor bright! are you not saving up several fine, generous, pathetic little speeches to be made on your death-bed—all the scenery set, full company on the stage, grand final tableau? Ten chances to one you'll forget them then, or have a rattling in your throat that will shake them out of shape. Forth with them now, like men: "My dear boy, you have been the light and comfort of my life;" "My dear girl, without you I would have been nothing in this world."—Scribner's Monthly.

A DICTIONARY of twelve hundred old artists contains the names of more than eight hundred who lived beyond sixty-nine years. Titian was ninety-nine years old, and died of the plague then. Bellini was ninety years old, and Murillo seventy-two years old at death.

From the Work.

A BIBLE COLLECTION.—Mr. Editor: We rejoice that Rev. S. P. Richardson has such an efficient successor in the superintendency of the work of the American Bible Society as Rev. T. J. Rutledge. Bro. Rutledge spent last Sabbath a week in Marion, and held a very profitable meeting of the Perry County Bible Society in the Baptist church here. After addresses from the superintendent, Dr. E. T. Winkler, pastor of the Baptist church, and Rev. W. B. Raymond, of the Presbyterian church, a collection was taken up amounting to $103.

It is scarcely necessary to ask for our Bro. Rutledge a hearty welcome from the members of the Alabama Conference. His is a work precious and vital to us all, and Bro. Rutledge is proving himself "the right man in the right place."

Yours fraternally,

J. BANCROFT.

MARION, ALA., May 28, 1873.

HARRISBURG DISTRICT, WHITE RIVER CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: The church has suffered much in our bounds through the winter and spring. The winter was long and very severe. Our church-houses are open and unpleasant, so that we could not devote as much time to preaching as usual. The spring, so far, has been remarkably wet, so that the streams and wet weather have often prevented attendance. But, all things considered, I suppose we could not expect more than we have realized. We have had some conversions and accessions at our quarterly meetings, and a good feeling and indications for better times in all our work as the season advances. Money is remarkably scarce, which delays the finishing of several new church buildings that were commenced months past, but cannot be completed till we realize the proceeds of the incoming crop, if then, as our country is financially embarrassed. J. M. STEEL.

HARRISBURG, ARK., May 29, 1873.

SHARON, MADISON COUNTY, MISSISSIPPI.—Mr. Editor: In the midst of dilapidation and depression we occasionally meet with something refreshing and encouraging, and in the right direction. Old Sharon is not quite dead. We are here doing what we can for the church and school. The institution is Conference property—has at least a nominal connection. Has the Conference forgotten it? But this is not our subject now. Our Sabbath school is the encouraging feature. It numbers about seventy scholars, with one of the most energetic and industrious superintendents, and punctual and conscientious teachers. Everything is in good working order. We are making good headway in this department. We had a celebration last Saturday. There were bright faces and banners. An address was delivered by young Dr. N. McKie. Everything passed off pleasantly. May the Lord bless this and all the Sabbath schools of our land—make them the great nurseries of the church and the stability of our institutions and government.

W. S. WINGFIELD.

SHARON, MISS., May 5, 1873.

WOODVILLE DISTRICT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: The session of the Woodville District Conference has just been held here, Bishop Kavanaugh presiding. I glean a few items. The attendance was fair. No committees appointed.

1. The churches, except in a few instances, were not satisfactorily reported spiritually. There was a fearful lack of family worship. How dreadful to think so many professing to be journeying heavenward refuse to furnish wife, children and servants with so valuable a means of grace. The Bishop, with eloquent and burning words, warned the churches. He said that prayer was the best-paying business in the world. He would rather the Methodists would cease to be than cease to pray. If there was one present who will not, after that talk, institute family worship, I am sorry for him. Bishop Pierce reports a similar state of things from his observation. O for a spirit of prayer among the churches! Class meetings were not reported common. Prayer meetings much neglected. I hope the investigation made us all sorry after a godly sort.

2. The reports from Sabbath schools were quite encouraging. A little spirited debate took place on the "uniform lessons." The fact was brought to light that they had taken the place of our catechisms and denominational question-books to a dangerous extent. The subject was vital. The brethren cried aloud for the old landmarks. The "lessons" were attacked, were called "wishy-washy" by men of eminence. One said they would not do. He knew his head might come off if he published himself, but his head would have its opinions. Our eyes began to open, they expanded, and I think Dr. Haygood's eyes and the eyes of some other doctors would have expanded too had they been there. What have we been about? Is the discovery too late? What does the Bishop say? His duties had been so pressing that he had not examined them carefully. What a pity! We wanted to hear him on that subject. If I had been a boy studying the lessons I would have felt like taking a moral emetic. I hope really the church is not hurt by the poison getting into the homes. I hope our Bishops and doctors will make a careful diagnosis and report speedily and emphatically. In our district, at least, the uniform lessons have received wounds which must be bound up, or the poor things will be "put out of their misery" some other way. Some one wanted to know why it would not do to appoint ladies to be superintendents of Sunday schools, and I understood the Bishop rather squinted at it, if it did make them members of Quarterly Conferences, etc. Why not?

3. Financially there were indications of improvement. Special investigation as to the system of raising the revenue of the church showed: First. That where there was no system there was but little done. Second. That the plan of assessment, allowing members the privilege of accepting or refusing their assessments respectively, was pre-eminently the best. Third. That next to that plan that of subscriptions was best, allowing the members opportunity to promise on paper and pay when in hand.

4. We missed among the lay brethren that venerable and godly man, Judge E. J. McGehee, the praise of whose liberality is in all the churches. His health is quite feeble, rendering him unable to attend conference. He is now well advanced in the ninth decade of his life. His pastor, Dr. Watkins, reports him patient, devout, ready, with his house in order, waiting for the Master's call. Apparently he must soon leave us. Many shall call him blessed, and many be the works that will follow him.

Dr. Watkins reports himself as nearly quite restored to health. We hear that his congregations at this place are large and increasing in size, and that his sermons were never better.

We heard the Bishop preach on Saturday, Sunday and Monday night. He begins on his texts and ends with them, and draws with wonderful effect upon the Scriptures to elucidate his subject. He "preaches the word" emphatically. We heard one say he would ride forty miles to hear him. What simple, plain illustrations! What graphic painting! What majestic flights! What appreciation of immortality! T. W. B.

WOODVILLE, MISS., May 27, 1873.

Volcano Discovered.

Moleje is the name given to a town in Lower California, situated on a bay of the same name, opening into the Gulf of California, about midway between the mouth of the Colorado river and Cape San Lucas. The distance to Moleje from this city, by the old Spanish mission road leading to Cape San Lucas, is six hundred and seventy miles. We are in receipt of information from Moleje to the effect that recently a volcano was discovered within a distance of about twenty-five leagues from the town, and between two and three leagues from the gulf coast, and about the same distance from the old Spanish mission road. On the mountain side, within an area of about two hundred yards, there are over twenty vent-holes, from which smoke is emitted in jets a yard or more above the surface. Lower down the side of the mountain than these vent-holes streams of water issue forth. The discovery was made by two natives while out on a prospecting tour for mines. The surrounding country is rugged and barren. Although the land is claimed and has been occupied for years, it is utterly worthless, not even affording pasturage for cattle. Earthquakes have been of common occurrence in Moleje for several years. At times the shocks were unpleasantly heavy, threatening to overthrow the buildings of the town. Last year twenty distinct shocks were felt on different occasions, but they were all of a slight character. During 1870 five earthquake shocks were felt at Moleje, which created considerable alarm, shaking the houses to their very foundations.

It is now believed that these earthquakes have had their sources in the newly-discovered volcano, the eruption of which has apparently taken place at a comparatively recent date, for although the district has been inhabited at least two centuries, earthquakes have never been known to occur until the last few years, not even by the Indians. A recent number of El Golfo de Cortes, a Spanish paper published at Guaymas, Mexico, corroborates the above statement.—San Diego Union.

DR. ANDREW COMBE.—Dr. Combe is an instance of what may be done under the most disadvantageous circumstances even by a hapeless invalid. He was well educated in medical science, and for many years he practiced as a physician. Then he was compelled, by disease of the lungs, to withdraw himself from the active duties of his profession. He had now to watch his own health with the utmost discipline and caution. He knew that he was suffering from a fatal disease, from which there could be no hope of cure; but he knew that, with the utmost care and self-control, his life might be indefinitely prolonged, though always with a feeble and uncertain tenure. He fully acted up to the conditions which he saw imposed on him, and his life was spared during ten years. In this period of extreme ill health, caused by extensive organic disease, he addressed himself to literary labor, which had wide usefulness and popularity. He issued volume after volume, in which he made important knowledge intelligible to almost every order of mind. His long experience as an invalid was useful to many invalids, on whom he urged the necessity of moderation and self-discipline. With all his weakness, there was hardly any healthy man who lived so active and beneficial a life.—Leisure Hours.

Early Settlers in Alabama.

Only three miles from Demopolis, on French creek, a ferry was once kept by a gentleman whose elegant manners, commanding appearance and splendid eyes attracted the attention of all who passed that way. This man was Colonel Nicholas Raoul, who had accompanied the Emperor Napoleon in his banishment to Elba. When the Emperor left that island, it is said that Colonel Raoul commanded his advance guard of two hundred grenadiers. He was an eye-witness to a thrilling scene in the life of his beloved chieftain.

The grenadiers were about to fire upon the King's troops, who had come forth to meet and capture the great man whose return was agitating the very heart of France. The Emperor rode rapidly forward to the front of the lines and gave the command: "Order arms!" He then advanced, and, baring his breast to the opposing battalion, he exclaimed: "Do you know me, my children?" "Yes, sire!" answered a tumult of voices. "I am your father. Fire upon me! If I ever have injured a French soldier, fire upon me!" cried Napoleon. Almost instantaneously the tri-colored cockade appeared on the breast of every man in the King's ranks, and the air rang with glad shouts of "Vive l'Empereur!" Thus he whom they had been sent out to capture marched at their head through the gates of the city a conqueror, without shedding one drop of blood, amid the wildest demonstrations of joy. And fickle France banished Raoul for loving such a man!

In Alabama Colonel Raoul was so poor that he ferried passengers over French creek himself. In sight of this scene of his daily toil, in an humble cabin, lived his wife and children. Madam Raoul, who had once been a marchioness, and once maid of honor to Queen Caroline, under King Murat, was a brilliant Italian beauty. From the glitter of royalty, with its robes of velvet and its beds of down, she had turned aside to share her husband's fate. No wonder the traveler gazed upon her queenly form with reverence, or that one felt honored by being ferried across the stream by the illustrious Colonel Raoul.—Home and School.

A SINGULAR CASE, illustrating our almost pagan superstition in the very blaze of the most liberal Christianity, is reported from California—of course with the usual array of evidences and witnesses of strictest impartiality and shrewdest observing faculty. A young lady of conspicuous devoutness and virtue, Miss Collins by name, a resident of San Francisco, has been suffering from bleeding wounds on the hands and feet, "corresponding with those on the person of our Savior at the time of his crucifixion." At the present moment, indeed, the "correspondence" must be exceedingly slight, and scarcely worth the "thorough scientific examination" with which the appearances are threatened. A Dr. Morse seems to have discovered dark spots "about two lines in diameter," even with the naked eye; and several others "with the assistance of a large hand magnifying-glass." The young lady being afflicted with some heart disease, and with hyperesthesia, seems to suffer every Friday—even though comforted by the ministrations of Father Pendergast, who seems to be in constant attendance—a perfect agony of pain, relieved only by a critical oozing of what is supposed to be blood from the spots on her feet and hands. These marks are dignified by the name of Stigmata, and supposed to have some miraculous relation to the wounds of our Savior. And this is in America!

What are we all about—pulpit and press—that this kind of blasphemous folly can be possible? That anybody should believe in the existence of these "Stigmata" is a comparatively trifling delusion; the real marvel is that nearly twenty centuries after the Ascension, any Christian man can be found who can be persuaded to attach the slightest mystical or spiritual significance to them.—Church and State.

JAPAN.—The Japanese papers state that the edicts against Christianity have been withdrawn from all the public notice boards in the empire. An edict has been issued for the suppression of hereditary blood feuds. An embassy to the Pope has, it is said, been sanctioned. The interior is to be opened to foreigners who submit to native law. The government continues to issue edicts concerning social reforms of various kinds. Notifications had been posted in Nagaski, warning all natives who still persist in shaving their heads that they will be severely punished if they do not discontinue the practice. Girls are forbidden to sing or play on the samisong and other musical instruments, while riding in the jinrikishas. The wearing of swords, which has been for some time optional for gentlemen, has now been forbidden, and none will be allowed to keep them, except by a special permission of the local officials. The temple of Monseki, destroyed in the last great fire at Yeddo, is to be rebuilt in accordance with European ideas of ecclesiastical fitness; under the superintendence of a foreign architect. The governments propose to hold a universal exhibition in Japan in four years from this time. Commissioners have been appointed to visit the Vienna Exhibition, whose special duty it will be to study the way of carrying out such a scheme in the best manner possible.—Church and State.

Dedication of the German Chapel in Petersburg, Virginia.

The interesting services of the dedication of the new German chapel, on Sycamore street, Petersburg, Virginia, took place on Sunday, May 11. There was a large attendance, notwithstanding the inclement weather. The house is quite a neat and beautiful one, and the interior had been tastefully decorated with flowers for the occasion. The pulpit and altar had been elegantly and appropriately furnished. Upon the altar there were a magnificent German Bible and hymn-book, which had been presented by the ladies.

After the usual services the Rev. E. N. S. Blogg, superintendent of the German missions of the Virginia Conference, preached the dedicatory sermon in German, taking for his text Genesis xxviii, 16, 17. He spoke of the history connected with the text, and then gave an account of the struggle occasioned and the efforts the people had made to erect this edifice. "But here it stands to-day like a bride in her bridal attire, a wreath-crowned warrior rejoicing over his victory." The sermon was one of characteristic beauty, and we hope the good advice given will be fully carried out.

Immediately after the sermon Rev. Dr. J. E. Edwards delivered an eloquent and impressive address in English. A collection was then taken up to liquidate the debt on the chapel, and reached nearly $100. The exercises were concluded by sentence of dedication and dedicatory prayer by Rev. Mr. Blogg, after which the doxology was sung, and the benediction pronounced by the Rev. Dr. Edwards.

The pastor of the congregation, Rev. E. H. Ebers, is a young minister of fine talents, and is not only loved by his own flock, but is held in esteem by a large number of the citizens of Petersburg. May God abundantly bless him in his labor of love.

A mass meeting, made up of all the Methodist congregations of the city, was held at night in the Washington Street Methodist Episcopal church. Rev. Dr. Edwards delivered a sermon, the object of which was to promote the cause of the German mission work in Petersburg. The effort was remarkable for its beauty of thought, chastity and elegance of conception. About $200 were collected, making in all nearly $300 during the day.—Baltimore Episcopal Methodist.

M. E. Church in Mexico.

A portion of the old convent building of Santo Domingo, in the city of Puebla, Mexico, has been purchased for purposes of Protestant worship. The following information respecting this property is thus given by Dr. Butler, in a letter to the Christian Advocate:

"The part of the convent that we have secured was originally the Inquisition! Mr. Blumenkrow, the present owner, and who bought it from the government of Mexico, showed Bishop Haven and myself the narrow holes in the great wall where these ecclesiastical furies put in the men whose arguments for freedom and evangelical truth they could not answer or silence, and they built up around them, covering the top over the head with a large stone, and then left them to die for want of air or food! Mr. Blumenkrow showed us their remains, and, to make this more real to you, I inclose a photograph of four of such skeletons, which, after the triumph of the republican party in Mexico, and the sale and breaking up of these convents, were lifted out of these narrow dens just as they were, and set up on stands (as here) for the men of Mexico to see what their priests had done.

"And now, in the judgment of that God who saw all this diabolical cruelty, and heard the sighing of these martyred men, it has come to pass that our Methodism has come into possession of the very premises where the tribunal was held that doomed them to such deaths, and the very walls that echoed their dying groans are henceforth to resound to the themes and songs of liberty and salvation. Hallelujah!"

Dr. Butler is hard at work, as will be seen by the following extract from one of his letters: "My own work is divided into three points, one of which is one hundred and sixteen miles off, and the other sixty miles, and I have been away from the city a good deal, so that my six weeks have been crowded with duties. God has, however, sent me some help. We are four in number now, and have organized five congregations, three day and Sunday schools, two classes and a prayer meeting. But Romanism has so perverted the morals and consciences of this people that it will need the entire gospel of God to liberate and save them."—Zion's Herald.

DREW SEMINARY.—The past week at Madison, New Jersey, has been devoted to the commencement exercises of the fifth graduating class of Drew Seminary. The first three days were devoted to the final examinations of the class of 1873, and on Tuesday evening Bishop Foster, president of the seminary, delivered the annual sermon before the members of the graduating class. On Wednesday evening the alumni held their reunion, and on the same day Dr. Hurst, formerly professor at Drew, and at one time president of the Mission College at Frankfort, Germany, was elected president in place of Bishop Foster. The graduates number eighteen.

SATAN'S ADDRESS TO THE FRIGHTENED RUMSELLER.

BY WILLIAM H. BURLEIGH.

Do you think I have come for you?—never fear:
You can't be spared for a long time here:
There are hearts to break, there are souls to win
From the ways of peace to the paths of sin.
There are homes to be rendered desolate;
There is trusting love to be changed to hate;
There are hands that murder must crimson red;
There are hopes to crush, there is blight to shed
Over the young, the pure and the fair,
Till their lives are crushed by the fiend Despair—
This is the work you have done so well,
Cursing this earth and peopling hell;
Quenching the light on the inner shrine
Of the soul till you make it mine.
Want and sorrow, disease and shame,
And crimes that even I shudder to name,
Dance and howl in their hellish glee
Around those spirits you've marked for me.
Oh, the selling of grog is a good device
To make a hell of a paradise!
Wherever may roll that fiery flood,
It is swollen with tears, it is stained with blood,
And the voice which was heard just now in prayer,
With its muttered curses, stirs the air.
And the hand that shielded the wife from ill,
In its drunken wrath is raised to kill.
Hold on your course; you are filling up
With the wine of the wrath of God your cup.
And the fiends exult in their homes below,
As you deepen the pangs of human woe;
Long shall it be, if I have my way,
Ere the night of death shall close your day.
For to pamper your lust for the glittering pelf,
You rival in mischief the Devil himself.

KAPPA ANSWERED.

MR. EDITOR: In your issue of April 3 is a communication over the signature of Kappa, written as a reply to my article found in your paper of February 13. But for the duties and labors of an extensive district I would have noticed said communication before now.

My present purpose is to answer the objections of Kappa, and thereby show the correctness of my views and vindicate my position on this subject; and in doing so I will notice his objections in the order in which they are presented.

1. He objects because my "protest" in the ADVOCATE makes it "an ex parte statement of the case." How so? Ex parte statements and testimony can be such only when they are made where and when they cannot be called in question or the testimony rebutted. Have I done that? By no means. The organ of the Conference is open to both sides of the question. My statement contained the action of the Conference, and there was no distortion, but a simple declaration as to what was done. There was no wish or design to keep from the public the facts in the case.

2. Kappa objects to the spirit of my article because I saw fit to say that "I have ever taken more interest in this institution than any of its special guardians or custodians have in me," etc. Well, that is truly refreshing, that a mere criticism upon the bearing of the managers of this institution toward me should be regarded as so objectionable in spirit. Indeed I must have indulged in a very bad spirit from the way the sympathy and pity of my "reviewer" are drawn out, as the following will clearly show: "One who esteems Bro. Shores as his present reviewer does, cannot but regret, for his sake, that he sent it abroad," etc. O unfortunate man that I am, that I should speak thus of those who are specially set for the defense and management of said institution. How much better to have submitted with cringing, sycophantic acquiescence to the action of the Conference, and not dared to allude to "the spirit" and bearing of "the guardians and custodians" of so noble an institution. The truth is, I made the allusion I did, in connection with myself, from the fact that those who were set on having these funds for the University were ready to thrust it in the teeth of all who questioned the propriety of said action, "that it was because of hostility to the institution, sectional feeling," etc., that they were opposed to the appropriation. If not "for their sakes," at least "for the sake" of the institution some of us could but "regret" that any such bearing and "spirit" should be manifested.

3. He objects to my article on account of its putting "the action of the Conference in a wrong point of view." He contends that if the Conference had done what I insisted it should, that, "it would have betrayed a most sacred trust;" that "it is not for the benefit of its members," but "to promote the cause of religion." Suppose this be true, would it not be "to promote the cause of religion" to help educate all the sons of the members of the Conference? Kappa contends that it would not, but to have used the funds thus would "have betrayed a most sacred trust," because that would have given to the members of the Conference a personal interest in these funds. But to "serve the cause of sanctified learning," in that it is "applied to the payment of the tuition of the sons of the members of the Alabama and North Alabama Conferences, and of such young men, preparing for the ministry, as may be prosecuting their studies" in the University, does not, directly or remotely, give the members of the Conference any personal interest in these funds, but that it simply "promotes the cause of religion." Well, it is truly fortunate that the astuteness of "a large majority" of the Conference enabled them to make such a wise discernment, else some of us might have caused the body to "have betrayed a most sacred trust."

Now I wish to say, just here, that since writing my first article I have learned something more definite about this money. The object of the donor in making the bequest was to afford the means of assisting those preachers who might serve hard works on small pay. He was very anxious that it should be used exclusively for their benefit. But in giving it to the Conference it could not be done without in some sense leaving it to the judgment and discretion of that body as to how and to whom its benefit should be applied. Thus it came into the hands of the Conference; and, while it may not be the expressed, it is the implied condition that the interest is to be used so as to inure to the personal benefit of the most needy preachers in the itinerant work. If that be so, then it is a "trust to promote the cause of religion," in helping a class of preachers who will hardly ever reap any benefit from it as it is now disposed of. The information to which I refer I have from an old member of the Alabama Conference, who was largely instrumental in securing the bequest to the church, and of course he knows well what was the wish, purpose and object of the donor.

In this connection I will answer the questions of Bro. West, as propounded by him in your issue of March 6. He asks:

1. "Why does the Alabama Conference propose to pay the tuition of the sons of the preachers of the North Alabama Conference?" I suppose it is because that said Conference has a claim upon these funds. But just here I would ask: What right has the Alabama Conference to say how the interest the North Alabama Conference has in these funds shall be appropriated? For one I would say: None whatever.

2. "Is the Alabama Conference so generous as to educate, out of its funds, the sons of the preachers of another Conference?" Of course it is not, for the reason that it is not able to educate all the sons of its own members, and we ought to be just before we are generous.

3. He objects to my "scheme," both from principle and policy. Truly he seems to be alarmed at the idea of creating a fund of $25,000 or $30,000, to be used for the education of preachers' children, and wants to know "what sanction does God's word give to the Christian ministry to create large endowments for their personal benefit." God's word has "ordained that they who preach the gospel shall live of the gospel." As to how the living shall be secured is an open question, or a prudential regulation, as all Christendom will show. If the endowment of the ministry, or providing a fund to help them in their holy vocation, is dangerous because it may "tend to invite unworthy men into the ministry," etc., then it is equally so to institutions of "sanctified learning" for the same reason. Indeed if there is any cogency in his reasoning, it is against any emolument for the ministry, as the principle is the same, no matter what "form the endowment takes" or the "amount" involved.

If Kappa will just carry out his reasoning to its logical sequences, it will make him a regular "hard-shell," and he will be down on "a paid ministry." One with such astuteness and logical acumen as he seems to possess ought to be able to discriminate between a principle and the abuse of one. If he expects to have no plan except one that cannot be abused by "unworthy men" using it, then let him turn "hard-shell" at once, and take a bold stand against all "paid preachers."

As to his objection on account of its policy, that is very much akin to the line, run by a number, it is true, of not paying the preacher because "he has means of his own," or "receives something from some other source," just as if the incumbents of the ministry were to be supported or helped as if they were paupers. It is only an excuse, made by some, for not doing what they will not do under any circumstances. Your "man of ordinary intelligence and information, who reads our papers and congratulated you in view of the deficit in salary being made up at Conference," was but covering a retreat he intended to make at all hazards. No, Kappa, if you expect to reach such persons by cutting off all helps or aids, except a direct support, you are engaged in a fruitless enterprise, for they are not the supporters of the ministry. Away with all temporizing with such people.

In conclusion I will define my position upon this subject in a few words:

1. I lay no personal claim to these funds. The scheme that I proposed is, to my mind, more just and equitable—as all might have some benefit—than to appropriate it, as the Conference has, where only a few can have the benefit, and that few of the class who could do better without it than those who cannot reach where it is.

2. The good that the funds will do the University is liable to be more than overbalanced by the prejudice and opposition, and consequently the support thereby diverted, that the action of the Conference may superinduce.

3. But as I now understand the bequest, I would prefer to my own scheme that the Conference invest the funds, and use the interest for the benefit of that class of preachers for whom the donor really intended it; the application of it to be made according to the judgment and discretion of the Conference, provided that the implied object of the bequest be carried out.

One thing more, and that is that I object to my "reviewer," inasmuch as he "esteems me as he does," writing over a fictitious name. I do not like to be ambushed, even by a friend. Will he throw off the mask?

GREENVILLE, ALA., May 8, 1873.

Selma District, Clarke County, Ala.

MR. EDITOR: Our long and gloomy winter has at last passed away, and nature has again put on her glorious apparel and sprung forth with new life and beauty under the genial influences of vernal showers and summer sunshine; and our district, which a few weeks since wore the chilling semblance of death, is now, from the Alabama to the Tombigbee river, one flowery bank and blooming grove. It is beautiful to look upon; on the one hand, the forest clothed in the richest foliage and flowers; on the other, the mellow earth yielding to the tiller's toil. Oh, this lovely spring, faint picture of that unfading and eternal spring of bliss and immortal glory to which all the faithful shall come forth after the winter of death shall have passed.

"Oh, heaven, sweet heaven,
I hope to get there!"

And to this end I am toiling and enduring heavier burdens than ever before. I have served missions, circuits and stations, large and small, but in none of these have I experienced the labors, physical and mental, that I have and am now passing through on the district. "Who is sufficient for these things?" Sometimes I think I must desist, and ask the Bishop for relief; but the hope of heaven, the goodly manna that falls around my tent, wherever pitched for the night, and the refreshing stream from the smitten rock, cheer up my flagging spirits and strengthen me for another round. Oh, brethren of the ministry, let us strive for a full and more complete consecration, to become more holy, and get more of the image of God stamped upon our souls. Oh, for more of that faith which casts out sin, purifies the heart, conquers and puts to flight all our enemies, and enables us to pull up and swing out as itinerants indeed, and not merely in name, trusting to the God of our fathers for home and peace and rest at last.

During the past four months I have been deeply impressed with the importance of "working while it is called to-day." After a long absence from home, on my return I passed through Cahawba, where sleeps in a new-made grave the very prince of preachers, Dr. J. L. Cotton, my last presiding elder. Peace to his ashes, honor to his memory and bliss to his soul! Arriving home I found that the chariot had come, and my dear old friend, Bro. Garrett, had gone, and ere this doubtless has received the welcome plaudit: "Well done, good and faithful servant." And thus one after another we pass away. Let us be up and about our Master's work, for "Behold, the bridegroom cometh." Four other appointments, and this my second round shall have been accomplished without the loss of one. It has been a round of light and shade, of grief and joy.

At Uniontown we were deeply pained to find our pastor, Dr. Spangler, suffering with paralysis, having received the stroke in his pulpit, while holding up the cross to his deeply-interested congregation. The doctor for awhile thought the Lord was going to confer great honor upon him by calling him to pass joyously from the pulpit to his seat above, but supposes his work not yet done, and cheerfully awaits the decision of his Master. His intellect and speech are clear, while his left arm hangs lifeless by his side. Hopes are entertained of his speedy recovery. The gospel, however, which he preached to others is fully sustaining him in this severe affliction and through divine grace he is prepared for any event.

Passing on to Dayton to fill an engagement with the church there, at Bellevue, on the Central road, I met with quite a shock. My dear brother, Dr. Briggs, of Mississippi, whom I had not seen for a dozen or more years, came aboard of the cars with the remains of his daughter, Mrs. Bethea, bearing it home to his family burial ground. For awhile it seemed as if the good Lord had almost broken my heart and dried up the fountain of my tears. Oh, how I longed to follow the remains of my dear niece to their final resting-place, and comfort my brother in his sore bereavement. But no; Jesus said: "Let the dead bury their dead; but go thou and preach the kingdom of God."—Luke ix, 60. The congregation at Dayton is awaiting my arrival, and at Farmsdale we separated, perhaps to meet no more on earth. May the God of all comfort and grace attend on his journey, and support him in his troubles.

Elmina P. Bethea, my dear niece, has been gathered with her mother on high, and now shares in the blessedness promised to the dead who die in the Lord. The Lord grant that when Elmina died may be the beginning of the pilgrimage to all the family yet out of the ark of safety.

In all our trials we are glad to say the Lord is with us and our people in convicting and converting power. Bro. Glenn has just closed an interesting meeting at East Selma, with thirty-one accessions. Bro. Thames, at Dayton, is enjoying a precious season. I left him with five accessions and eleven at the altar. Bro. Andrews, at Selma, and Bro. Harris, at Summerfield, were protracting their services when I left home. From them I hope to receive good news on my return. The last two days I have spent at Jackson and this place. In this county for a long while we have had only a respectable minority, but are now gradually and surely gaining the ascendancy.

Methodism is on the march, and taking deep root in the hearts of the good people of Clarke, which is generally the case where the people are well read and intelligent. Ignorance and superstition have no home here in these pine-woods. From the palatial residence down to the humble cottage may be found the book of books, the Holy Bible, Clarke's Commentaries, Webster and Cruden, while the humble walls, which were once hung with circus bills and patent medicine almanacs, are now decorated with files of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and the Mobile Weekly Register, to aid and strengthen which the Nashville Christian Advocate is threading its way in, and entwining itself around the hearts of the people. Who can study these books without being intelligent and good? Who can read these weeklies without knowing it all? In this county we have three circuits and one mission. "And herein is that saying true, One soweth and another reapeth."—John iv, 37. Here we find the footprints of Bros. Hudson, Shores, Hood, Philips, Butt and A. J. Coleman on the Suggsville circuit. The last-named brother traveled this work in 1871. Being anxious to spread "Scripture holiness over these lands," he extended his work by making an appointment at Amity, a community entirely under the control of a denomination of Christians that commune not with us. Here he gathered round him some fifteen or twenty, whom he turned over to his successor in 1872. The Lord abundantly blessed the labors of his servant in this part of the vineyard, and Bro. Thames turned over to his successor for 1873 an organized church, with a handsome membership, and one of the strongest points of the circuit.

There are four other appointments, covering a membership of two hundred, among whom are many of the leading families of the county. Here Methodism has a stronghold for all time to come, and the present pastor, Dr. Turner, is gradually "lengthening her cords and strengthening her stakes."

JACKSON CIRCUIT.

Here we find the way well "blazed out" by those old pioneers, Bros. Thomas Abernathy and A. S. Dickerson, followed by M. M. Graham, A. M. Jones, W. H. Morris and others. "Union" is the strong church here. From its membership we received our Evans and Calhoun, now earnest workers in the Conference. Some of the first settlers of the country, and the very bone and sinew of the county, are numbered with us on this circuit, whose membership is over three hundred. At Jackson we had a precious meeting last week—eleven accessions, which will be increased through the labors of their stirring young pastor, John S. Frazer.

CHOCTAW CORNER CIRCUIT.

For years after the war-whoop of the red man had died away from this his home, we had hardly a name among this people, the ground being occupied by a denomination of a very exclusive character. But the light of the gospel, as dispensed by Bros. Powers, Kirk, Ellis and others has penetrated the minds and hearts of this people, until now Methodism is being enthroned in nearly every household. Here sleeps the sainted Carter, whose influence for good still lingers, and "who, being dead, yet speaketh." We have a membership of about four hundred, which is being added to, strengthened and built up by their earnest pastor, W. S. Wade.

COFFEEVILLE MISSION,

from where I now write, was formed at the last session of the Alabama Conference, and is truly missionary ground. From this section the men, almost to a man, I learn, went out at the call of their country, and scarcely a third returned. The strong arms upon which these families leaned for support have been palsied by death, and they must slumber in the fields of Shiloh, Chickamauga and Seven Pines

"Till wrapt in flames the realms of ether glow,
And heaven's last thunder shakes the world below."

It now falls to our church to bring them the gospel as it is in Jesus, and we will do it. Here we have no churches with their glittering spires pointing heavenward, but rejoice together worshiping our God in the rude log-cabin and the grand old woods. We have established five appointments, have sixty members, and four Sabbath schools, numbering about one hundred scholars, which is being daily increased by the pastor, N. A. Rice, a young man of solid piety and deep devotion to his work.

Upon the whole, we may safely say to the brethren heretofore mentioned, and others who may have labored in this field, that old Clarke is about redeemed, and I send forth this greeting: "That both he that soweth and he that reapeth may rejoice together."—John iv, 36. We closed our second quarterly meeting yesterday at this place, with seven accessions, administering the ordinance of baptism to four in the apostolic way by pouring.

May the Lord preserve these lambs of the fold from the prowling wolf of hell.

ANDREW J. BRIGGS.

COFFEEVILLE, May 12, 1873.

MEMORIAL DAY—APRIL 26, 1873.

We bless the dear memory of heroes to-day
Who fought for our cause and fell in the fray;
Their lives and their labors to some may seem lost,
Yet for martyr's devotion we honor them most.

They died to maintain what they felt to be just;
Let us weep o'er their tombs and hallow their dust:
For it was nobler far to die for the right
Than to live in the wrong that's supported by might.

Had victory but crowned the cause they defended,
With pæans of glory their names had been blended;
They yielded, o'erwhelmed in life's last endeavor:
Shall our hearts not enshrine them lamented forever?

'Tis a pleasure—how mournful! a duty—how sad!
This adorning of graves—bedecking death's bed:
All gemmed with our tears, we'll strew the fresh flowers,
For the lives of the sleepers were ransom for ours.
Victor.

Obituaries.

DEPARTED THIS LIFE, on the eighth of March, 1873, at his residence in Sabine parish, JOHN CARROLL. He was born in North Carolina, May 16, 1816, and removed to this State in 1836, where he finished his pilgrimage on earth. He was a kind neighbor, a good citizen, a faithful husband and an affectionate father. He leaves a wife and three children to mourn his loss.

J. M. F.

DIED, at Mr. Cooks', in Sabine parish, Louisiana, on the fourth of April, 1873, after an illness of three months, JOHN J. WATKINS. Bro. Watkins was a son of the venerable Greenberry Watkins. He was a brother of the late Daniel Watkins, of this Conference. He was known to many of the Louisiana preachers, who only knew him to love him. He died in the triumphs of a living faith, and leaves a wife and two children to mourn his loss.

ROBERT FAGAN was born in Winchester county, Virginia, about the year 1782, and died, at his residence in the city of Natchez, Mississippi, on the thirteenth of May, 1873, aged about ninety-one years.

Having grown up to manhood in his native State, and having there learned a useful trade, he came to Natchez in 1806 with the expedition of Aaron Burr. Deciding to make the place a permanent home, he married, a few years after his arrival, Amelia C. Ratlif, a native of Charleston, South Carolina, who, having shared with him life's joys and sorrows for more than half a century, still lives, and in trembling age, blindness and widowhood awaits her summons hence. About the year 1854 Mr. Fagan professed faith in Christ and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South, under the ministry of Rev. A. T. M. Fly. For many years he was a regular attendant upon the ordinances of the church, until the infirmities of age and increasing dullness of hearing disqualified him for filling his seat in the sanctuary. He reared a family of children, the youngest of whom, Mrs. Sheridan, was living with him and watched by his dying bed. He was a man of stalwart frame and strong constitution. He was rarely sick. When at last the springs of life seemed rapidly losing their activity, being asked by his pastor if he could still trust in God, he replied: "Certainly I can." Without apparent suffering he lingered for a day or two, and then so quietly ceased to breathe that not even his daughter, who sat by him, perceived any dying struggle.

LAURA E. RIGGS met death tranquilly, in New Iberia, after a protracted illness with consumption. She was born in Little Rock, Arkansas, November 20, 1852; married William A. Riggs, Jr., in New Iberia, May 21, 1872, and died April 10, 1873. This is a life's epitome. From childhood to a bride (but a step!) from a bride to a corpse (how brief!) from a corpse to a crown (how soon, and yet delightful transition!)

Our young sister faltered not as she gradually, for nearly a year, came down to the brink of the last river. "Tranquil amid alarms," she breathed her blood-washed soul out "to God who gave it." How beautiful thus to die, whispering of the loved and gone before!

Sister Laura had been a member of the church for years, and was one of those admirable characters who meekly "exemplify the doctrines of God our Savior." She has gone to join her sainted mother, "where the wicked cease to trouble and the weary are at rest," while her stricken husband mourns his absent mate, but looks forward to that happy reunion

"Where all the ship's company meet,
Who have sailed with the Savior beneath."

A large concourse attended the funeral obsequies at the church.

T. B. WHITE, Pastor.

M. D. KIMBROUGH, the subject of this notice, was born in Surry county, North Carolina, August 26, 1806; married in South Carolina, December 28, 1826, to Miss Elizabeth Douthit; moved to Macon county, North Carolina, and there resided three years; then removed to Anderson county, South Carolina, lived there five years, and from there he emigrated to Greene county, in Alabama.

The writer first made his acquaintance in the year 1845. In the year 1846 he was violently attacked with a disease which was protracted for about seven long years, and under the painful influence of which he was confined nearly the whole of that time to his sick-chamber. He was not a professor of our holy Christianity at the time he was thus, in the wisdom of God's providence and grace, suddenly stricken down, but in the year 1848, under the very efficient ministry of Bro. D. B. Lyne, he was converted, joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in which he continued a plain, consistent member until summoned to his final resting-place. When at last his race was run and his work was done, he quietly, calmly and peacefully sunk into the icy embrace of the monster death, exclaiming: "My way is clear; there is not an intervening cloud between me and home." He died on the seventeenth of February, 1873, aged seventy-two years, five months and twenty-one days. The deceased was plain and unassuming in all the business transactions of life, and though unostentatious as a Christian, still he was a warm and zealous advocate for consistency in matters of religion.

In conclusion allow us to say that in the death of Bro. M. D. Kimbrough the community in which he has so long lived has sustained a great loss, and the church one of her firm and warm members.

ISRAEL G. SMITH.

MRS. MARGARET MCCOMBS, widow of William Dunbar, died in the parish of East Feliciana, Louisiana, on Monday, the nineteenth of May, aged seventy-five years. Mrs. Dunbar was a resident of New Orleans for many years, and we believe had been absent but a few months before her death. She had been a member of the Methodist Church for more than forty years, and a most consistent and devoted Christian during all that time. Her membership was, for nearly twenty years past, with the Felicity Street church, and during much of this time the writer was her pastor. She was a model of patience and cheerfulness in suffering, and of remarkable attainments in religious experience. Her love for the church of her choice, though free from bigotry, was enthusiastic, and she was never happier than when dwelling upon the history and progress of her beloved Methodism, as it had developed within her own observation and remembrance. When not hindered by physical infirmity she was usually in her place at class and prayer meetings, and to miss any of the public services was counted by her as little short of a calamity. During the last few years she passed through severe afflictions and great bodily sufferings. She was a great deal confined to her house and room, but she maintained the utmost composure and serenity of mind, and seemed nearly always ready to shout for joy. Her experience of divine things was very deep, her communion with God most intimate, and her hope was both sure and steadfast. We learn that her last hours were eminently peaceful and happy. It is in accordance with her dying request that I have prepared this brief memorial of an elect lady, whose exemplary Christian intercourse have been to me a source of enjoyment and spiritual benefit beyond anything that words can tell. Her suffering but unspeakably beautiful life has been withdrawn from the world, but her memory is as ointment poured forth. She has reached the goal for which she was striving so long—gathered, in the fullness of years, and in the ripeness of faith and holiness, to the home of the good.

LINUS PARKER.

DIED, at Walnut Grove, Mississippi, April 22, 1873, Miss MOLLIE, daughter of Robert and Elizabeth Lindsey, in her twenty-sixth year.

The subject of this memoir joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South, at this place, in 1863, under the ministry of Bro. T. W. Hines, and remained an honored member of the same until the Master called her to the church triumphant above. She was of that noble, kind-hearted disposition that shed a halo of gladness around the circle in which she moved. She was a faithful and constant attendant at the bedside of the suffering, and in all probability the constant watching and fatigue at the bedside of a sick brother was the primary cause of the disease (pneumonia) that so soon swept her away. She was taken with a chill on Sunday night, and died on the morning of the tenth day thereafter. This brings us to the closing scenes of her life.

I have never witnessed a more calm, peaceful and happy death. Never at any time during her sickness did her mind seem to be in the least impaired, and reason held her supremacy almost up to the very moment when her glorified spirit took its flight to heaven. She called her weeping mother, sisters, brothers and friends around her bedside, and bid them "not to weep for her, but to meet her in heaven." Being perfectly aware that she was dying, she inquired of her physician and friends how much longer it would be before she would go. Being told that it might be several hours, she said: "Oh, I want the time to be short; yes, right now." Calling her mother closer to her, she said: "Kiss me, mamma;" and with her cold and clammy hands she smoothed down the furrowed and tear-tricked face of her weeping mother, and requested her to "remain close by her side until the struggle was over." Speaking of the coldness of her limbs, which was produced by the fast approach of death, she said her "Savior would meet her and not let the stream of death be so cold, as she crossed over." Thus did she talk for several hours preceding the last moment, while a smile, such as the presence of Jesus alone can impart, lighted up her countenance. It seemed to the Christian friends around that it "was good to be there," and so much was the Christian heart of her physician affected that he could not refrain from speaking of the power of a firm faith in the hour of death. About three minutes before the spirit took its flight, when all was darkness to the natural vision, she said: "I am going up to heaven; it won't be dark there;" and without a struggle she fell asleep in Jesus. "And the ransomed of the Lord shall return and come to Zion with songs, and everlasting joy upon their heads; they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away."

IRVIN MILLER.

CATHERINE GOLSON, relict of the late Emanuel Golson, died of pneumonia, at her home in Autauga county, Alabama, April 17, 1873, aged nearly eighty-four years, having been born April 26, 1789. Her maiden name was Stoudenmire. She was a native of Orangeburg district, South Carolina; was married March 28, 1809; moved to Alabama in 1819, and professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church when about nineteen years old. Her conversion was clear and powerful. In the early part of her career as a Christian she had much to contend with. Her parents and other members of the family were at that time irreligious. They were fond of dancing and other worldly amusements, and were disposed to treat her with ridicule because of her becoming a Christian and a Methodist. A good deal of courage was therefore necessary upon her part. But this she possessed, and pressed on in spite of all difficulties. She possessed the spirit of meekness and forgiveness in an eminent degree. She has often been heard to say that she was never so angry with any one as not to be able to speak to him with feelings of kindness. Another thing worthy of note was the regularity with which she attended to her private devotions. As long as she was able to retire to her closet she kept up the old Methodist custom of praying in secret about the close of the day. She was not perhaps altogether so demonstrative in her religious character as some; but she was consistent—she carried her religion everywhere and into everything. She was emphatically an every-day Christian. While able to go no one was more faithful in attending church. And in revival meetings she was a diligent worker, inducing many to go to the anxious seat, and going with them, that she might assist them in seeking salvation. One who has known her intimately all his life says she was the best woman he ever saw. She was afflicted for many months with what was termed by her physician a chronic boil on the side of her face and neck. She suffered much with this; but she bore it all with great patience. In my visits to her I always found her strong in faith and calmly awaiting the time of her departure. A short time before she died she said she saw some of her family who had died, particularly her daughter, Mrs. Stoudenmire, who had been dead only a few weeks. She often spoke of the happy meeting she expected to have with these friends on the other shore. Thus after sixty-five years of service in the Master's vineyard below she has gone to reap the fruit above.

FIVE LIVING SEA-FISH were recently sent by mail from Naples to London, the journey consuming over four days. The fish were each about two inches in length, and were packed in damp sea-weed, from which all but one came out in good condition, and, soon after being placed in their natural element, became as lively as ever.

THE death of Prince Massimo, the head of one of the oldest and noblest families in Rome, and a firm adherent and champion of the temporal power of the papacy, is announced. So ancient, indeed, was his pedigree that he is said to be descended from Q. Fabius Maximus, the "Cunctator" of the Punic wars.

MY LITTLE BABY.

BY MRS. DINAH MULOCK CRAIK.

My little baby is buried to-day;
Gone down in the depths of the church-yard clay,
Up in the sky so dim and gray.
Who will take care of my little baby?

Who will kiss her?—her waxen feet,
That have never walked, and her small hands sweet,
Where I left a white lily as was meet—
Who, who will kiss my little baby?

Who will teach her?—her wings to ply,
Her tiny limbs their new work to ply,
Her soft, dumb lips to sing gloriously—
O who will teach my little baby?

I have a mother who long ago died—
We speak of her now with our tears all dried;
She may know my pretty one, come to her side,
And be glad to see my little baby.

Christ, born of woman, hear, O hear!
Thine angels are far off—she seems near;
Give them my child to my mother dear,
And I'll weep no more for my little baby.

Surely in heaven thy saints, so blest,
Keep a mother's heart in a mother's breast;
Give her my lamb, and I shall rest
If my mother takes care of my little baby.

A Blessed Old Soul.

"Father Tutwiler!"

It is the moderator of a Western presbytery who calls this name in its order upon the roll. "Father Tutwiler, please state whether you have been paid by the churches under your care." For, by standing rule of presbytery, this is the next thing in order upon the docket; no minister present exempt from the screw of this inquisition.

Father Tutwiler arises. He has risen since; indeed, stands this moment, if man does, in the general assembly and church of the first-born on high. He looks solemnly around him upon the brethren, then at the moderator, then moistens his poor dry lips by a preliminary movement before speaking, for presbytery is a leading event of the year to him. I do not think it makes a penny's difference to him, clothed to-day in white, that his clothing, his very best then, is a suit of very brownish black, old-fashioned, exceedingly worn and shiny about the knees from frequent kneeling, wearing this instant, if ever king did, a glorious crown. I think he rather rejoices than not in remembering the old felt hat he wore to presbytery, bronzed by a score of summers, battered and soaked by all the accompanying whiters. Nor do I believe he is disposed to weep while I write, recalling his age, then weather-beaten by treble twenty years of this world, every step of which has been as in the teeth of a gale. I have him before me now, fastening the focus of his blue spectacles upon the moderator as he draws his enormous yellow handkerchief from his coat-pocket behind. Pity, for the sake of some of the rest of us left here, I cannot see and fully describe how, at this very instant, think of it! with open face, Father Tutwiler beholds, and without a glass, the glory of the Lord!

"Father Tutwiler, please state what compensation you have received for your services during the year past."

The person addressed clears his throat. "Yes, Mr. Moderator, I preached this last year, first Sabbath of the month, at Limestone Ridge; second Sabbath, Boggy Bottom; third Sabbath, Plum Creek; fourth Sabbath, Smith's Hollow; fifth Sabbath, when there was one, at Jackson's Crossing or wherever was opportunity. It has been rather a hard year, brethren. I had to travel late Saturday night several times getting to Boggy Bottom. The mud was so very deep. Smith's Hollow, the church is on the other side. I had to swim twice, past fording Plum Creek. I had to camp out one night until it ran down. I managed to get over the rheumatism before next Lord's day."

"But, Father Tutwiler," the moderator urges, "the question is now upon compensation. What salary did you receive from all these various charges?"

"Compensation! Yes, I know, Mr. Moderator. I left it to the people. There was no written agreement. The people are poor and few and scattered. Five Points, Limestone Ridge, Boggy Bottom, Plum Creek, Smith's Hollow, Jackson's Crossing, are important centers. My horse gave out, brethren."

That old, old white horse. You could have known he was a minister's horse wherever you saw him tied to a post or tree, he was so serious an animal. If we but knew completely what is meant by the groaning and travailing together until now of the whole creation, as well as we ourselves. No fondness have I for speculative reasoning, much less anything so absurd; yet I almost wish I could imagine that faithful old horse could be recompensed somewhere, somehow, for his many years of service for that Master who, surely, despises nothing his hands have made. Never think I have forgotten all that about the Israelites upon the free fields of another life and how "his faithful dog shall bear him company;" but where the realities are so pressing, I have not the least taste for such fancies.

"Father Tutwiler, your compensation—"

"Left it to the people, moderator. I never missed a single Sabbath at any point. At the end of the year the only compensation I received—"

Now what that minister said then and there is literal fact. The writer, being pressed at a certain synod to make remarks during the hour set apart to home missions, stated the fact in question as portion of said remarks. He almost regretted doing so. Possibly the hearers thought the speaker mistaken. One excellent brother was exasperated into making a speech denouncing Father Tutwiler and all laborers like him for submitting to such treatment, degrading themselves and spoiling the churches. Very likely. But the dear old Father Tutwiler has been in the receipt for some years now, and will be forever, from the hands of Christ in person, of ample reward. If it is any satisfaction to know it, every individual of those failing to do his and her duty in the matter shall give due account to the same Master.

Besides, Father Tutwiler was very dull, extremely uninteresting, listened to merely because it was he or no minister at all. "We would rather pay that blessed old soul so much not to preach," good Christians remarked who felt it a duty to attend. Yet many a field where it is just such a messenger or none. Father Tutwiler (of course that is not his real name) had received a thorough collegiate and theological training; must have been, at least, a much stronger preacher in his earlier days. Yet poverty, care, work upon his fragment of a farm, mortification until it became his life-long bread, association chiefly with the unlettered in his rounds, and the like, had slowly de-educated the man! His grammar as well as his mathematics had deteriorated, his English suffering only less than his Latin, Greek, Hebrew; for, in a positive sense, a man can be *un*educated as well as educated. All he ever knew has come back, however, to Father Tutwiler in heaven. And there was his spotless religion too—doctrine and practice. If his sermon was nothing, what of his hymns, Scriptures, prayers at every service? What of his baptisms, breaking the bread and giving the cup? Frankly, I do believe the Master has meaning in leaving as long as he does every such a servant; do believe Jesus rates such more highly, here and hereafter, than many a minister with a thousand-fold the talent and the salary. The practical wisdom of admitting young men, merely because pious, to the ministry, is not the question here; it is of the actual Father Tutwiler I am speaking.

"Compensation? For the year? I was quite sick, moderator," he said, "at Smith's Hollow, in consequence of my wetting. Considerable tendency to diarrhea. The friends with whom I stayed let me have their vial of paregoric. Monday, before leaving, I offered to return it. 'Oh! no, Father Tutwiler,' they said, 'you may need it again. Keep it, Father Tutwiler, keep it, keep it, keep it!' And that, moderator, is all the compensation I have received from the points I have mentioned for my labors during the year." Your incredulity, reader, may spoil your smile. But I cannot help that; it is simple fact.—Independent.

Almanacs.

The origin of the modern word almanac is variously accounted for. By some it is supposed to have been derived from the Arabic al manach, to count, while others again assign it an Anglo-Saxon origin. The Anglo-Saxons were in the habit of carving the annual courses of the moon on a square piece of wood, which they called "almonaught" (al-moon-heed,) from which word Verstegan, who has written on the antiquities of our country, derives our word almanac—the German origin being "almonat." These wooden almonaughts were succeeded by the manuscript almanacs of the fourteenth century, very splendid specimens of which exist in the British Museum. There is also a very remarkable specimen of them in the library of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge.

On the invention of printing, almanacs were rapidly multiplied. One of the earliest printed books with the date annexed is the "Astrological and Medical Calendar," supposed to have been issued from the press of Gutenberg in 1457. The earliest English almanacs were printed in Holland on small folio sheets, and some of these have been preserved by having been pasted on the covers of old books.

With "Old Moore's Almanac" still in existence, we cease to wonder at the singular mixture of truth and falsehood which filled the early calendars. Astrology was accepted as a real science, and its predictions were naturally united with the astronomical portions of the almanacs. These prophecies from their diffusion became so dangerous in imaginative France that, in 1579, Henry the Third promulgated an edict forbidding any predictions in them relating to civil affairs, whether of the state or of private individuals.

No law of the kind was found necessary in England, though the belief in the calendar prophets was singularly strong, and was shared by the educated classes, even as late as 1661 (or later;) for the greatest almanac-maker of the seventeenth century, William Lilly, was had up before Parliament to explain a hieroglyphic in a previous Ephemeris, which was supposed to have foretold the great fire. The commissioners appointed to examine him gravely accepted his explanation on the subject. Of course he "had read it in the stars." "Did you foresee the year?" asked one of the commissioners. "I did not," replied Lilly, "nor was desirous; of that I made no scrutiny." But using his own good sense, he assured them that the fire was "from God"—that is, accidental, not kindled, as the people were willing to believe, by the Roman Catholics. Lilly began to print his Ephemeris in 1644, during the greatest heat of the civil wars. He uses much Latin and many astrological terms in his predictions, and constantly invokes the divine assistance in his art. The year 1677 was distinguished by the appearance of a comet, which afforded him much matter for speculation. He says that comets "produce very hard and ulping weather; frosty, dark, cloudy, much snow and wind, strange or unusual hail and tempest. Moreover, they portend change of kingdoms, pestilence, wars, tempests and drought." This scandal about comets was, however, a mere echo from the past, as the venerable Bede, more than eight hundred years before him, had imputed the like evil character to the Bohemian stars, who have only within the last two hundred years been recognized as respectable luminaries obeying the laws of the universe, much as their more sober neighbors, the planets, do.

Lilly's cotemporary, John Lord, in 1678, gave the same account of "eclipses." "The fourth eclipse of the moon," he says, "on October nineteenth day. This threatened great and rich men with loss of goods or decay of substance, likewise death and diseases among cattle, beasts and sheep, and such as chew the cud; also dearness of corn and seed sown upon the earth; this will or may chiefly belong to Ireland, Russia, Polonia the Great, and such others as are under Taurus."

The weather prophecies were very singular in those days. They were decided by its state on certain festivals. New Year's day (not New Year's day then, by-the-bye, but the circumcision) was supposed to present a type of the weather which would ensue throughout the opening year. The following lines, translated from Latin rhymes of the middle ages, were used by the almanac-makers of the seventeenth century with regard to this ominous day:

If St. Paul's day be fair and clear,
It doth betide a happy year;
But if by chance it then should rain,
It will make dear all kinds of grain;
And if the clouds make dark the sky,
The neat and fowle this year shall die;
If blustering winds do blow aloft,
Then wars shall trouble the realm full oft.

St. Swithin's day is still regarded as ominous of the weather by the peasantry. "Forty days' rain more or less" is expected if it rains on that day.

A famous almanac-maker in the early part of the eighteenth century gave birth to one of the best jokes of the wits of Queen Anne's reign. His name was Partridge, a shoemaker, quack doctor and astrologer, who, in his "Merlinus Redivivus," foretold coming events in the usual style. Swift, for a frolic, wrote his "Predictions for the year 1708—written to prevent the People of England from being further imposed on by Vulgar Almanac-makers." In this pamphlet he attacked Partridge as the chief of them, wondering how this foolish pretender should be ignorant that he—Partridge—was doomed to die on the following twenty-ninth of March, about eleven at night, of a raging fever.

Partridge was enraged; still more so when, after the twenty-ninth, an account of Partridge's decease appeared by the same hand. The poor almanac-maker, infuriated, published a denial of his death. But it was in vain. The Tatler assumed that he was in error. Dead he had been declared, and dead he should be; and very funny are the mock reproaches of Steele to the poor man for his willful pertinacity in denying his own decease. A paper was next written in his name, called "Bickerstaff Detected," by the Rev. Dr. Yalden, preacher at Bridewell; the almanac-maker's neighbors giving a most amusing account (whether true or untrue) of the progress of the jest. The passing bell tolled; Partridge sends his servant to ask for whom it is ringing. The answer is: "For Dr. Partridge, who died to-night." The undertaker comes for orders, the sexton to know if a funeral sermon is required. "Sirrah," says Partridge, "you know me well enough; you know I am not dead. How dare you affront me after this manner?" "Alack-a-day, sir," replies the fellow, "why, it is in print, and the whole town knows that you are dead. * * * It is strange, sir," says he, "that you should make such a secret of your death to us that are your neighbors; it looks as if you had a design to defraud the church of its dues; and let me tell you that, for one who has lived so long, by the heavens, it is unhandsomely done."

Partridge became the butt at which all the wits discharged their shafts. The Tatler buried him! They all turned a deaf ear to his remonstrances. Swift answered his somewhat confused assertion, that he was not only now alive, but was also alive upon that very twenty-ninth of March, by declaring that Mr. Partridge had announced it as his opinion that a man may be alive now who was dead a twelvemonth previously, which, he adds, is mere sophistry. The almanac with Partridge's name long survived the real death of its originator, thus fulfilling the Dean's mocking words, which we quote in conclusion of this story: "It is the privilege of authors to live after their deaths; almanac-makers are alone excluded, because their dissertations, treating only upon the minutes as they pass, become useless as these go off. In consideration of which Time, whose registers they are, gives them a lease in reversion to continue after their deaths."—Chambers' Journal.

Teaching Pastors Needed.

The best preaching gift is the teaching gift. An aptness to teach is an evidence of a call to the ministry, which no church or ordaining council ought under any consideration to dispense with. Without this the understanding of all mysteries and the possession of all knowledge will only produce weighty dullness, to be shared—and with nearly equal profit—between empty pews and sleepy remnants of the faithful. Without this the richest endowments of piety, all the graces of the Spirit, may furnish a model Christian character very creditable indeed to Christianity, but not a successful pastor, any more than the perfection of a marble statue makes it fit to become a professor of sculpture. Both models would need for higher service the gift of speech, an aptness to tell others the processes by which such work can be performed. Without this shrewdness, tact, agreeable manners and winning ways will only stock our churches with refuse material, which can neither be used nor disposed of at first cost; and yet it is perhaps too valuable to be thrown away, and must be involved year after year for associational reports, to be levied on by the proper authority for raising the means to carry on the great enterprises of the kingdom. Without this all gifts of gesticulation, intonation and lachrymation, all crafty manipulation of revival measures, ordinary and extraordinary means of grace, and mean graces, will only supply sensational revival reports for the papers, and fickle, inconsistent and unreliable additions to the membership of our churches.

This aptness to teach, concerning which so seldom any inquiry is made by ordaining councils—this aptness to teach, in some small measure at least—is absolutely indispensable for any service in the ministry. In proportion to its union in symmetrical harmony with other gifts and graces, is it possible for one to do good work for Christ in the Christian ministry, and just in the same proportion can he labor in and with the Sunday school in the fitting relation of leader there as anywhere else in the church. G. E. Leonard.

WORKING WITH GOD.

FROM THE GERMAN OF SPITTA.

Forth in God's name gladly going
To thy work, with zeal begun,
In good time thy seed be sowing!
Whatsoe'er is done is done.

Leave the discont to his keeping,
With the nearest did thy best!
Who doth sowing is no reaping:
Only busy hands shall rest.

Danger lies in idly living,
Health to labor freely done;
Sweat of toil is honor-giving
To the brow at set of sun.

Know'st thou not, whate'er the ending,
Whether failure or success,
That God's favor, still attending,
All good deeds of thine will bless?

The Ascent of Cotopaxi.

Cotopaxi, which is the highest active volcano in the world, had never been scaled until recently, when that great feat was accomplished by Dr. Reiss, who has made a report of the circumstances attending this ascent to the President of Ecuador. He commenced the ascent early in the morning, and reached the snow-line in the afternoon. Here he encamped for the night. It snowed during the evening and night, and the next morning the sand and lava were covered by a coating of ice as smooth and hard as glass, and they were forced to wait until the sun had melted it. Dr. Reiss then pushed forward with the greatest ardor and arrived a little after ten o'clock at the base of the rocks which crown the summit of the mountain. He turned to wait for his companions, and found that all had fallen discouraged by the way except his major-domo and his dog, who were toiling painfully after him. The rocks among which he had now arrived were the huge relics of former lava deposits, from the fissures of which came occasional gusts of sulphuric acid, while the climbing was made dangerous by the fall of dislodged fragments, one of which actually struck the doctor, inflicting a troublesome wound. But he and his faithful attendant clambered on and upward through the mist, until about noon they found themselves suddenly and unexpectedly upon the southwest point of the rim of the crater, which, stretching fifteen hundred feet below them, revealed itself probably for the first time to human eyes. Its form was elliptical, its longer axis running from north to south. From all its circumference, rocky slopes descended in broken lines to meet in the center, there being no plane of any extent. The northeast portion was thickly covered with snow, from which the rest of the crater was free. The air was filled with the roar of falling fragments from the sides, and with white jets of sulphurous vapor from the southwest portion of the crater. The barometer gave a height of five thousand nine hundred and ninety-three meters, an estimate considerably larger than that of former writers. A noticeable observation of Dr. Reiss is that chlorides are found among the deposits of this crater; thus contradicting the statement of Humboldt that the absence of this acid was characteristic of South American volcanoes.

The intrepid savant did not finish his observations, however, for while he was examining a handful of earth a gust of wind filled his eyes with dust impregnated with sulphuric acid, causing immediate and acute inflammation, and driving him at once down the cone. He thinks that the tremendous floods which often devastate the neighboring valleys have their origin in the sudden melting of the ice and snow in the high ravines by bursts of lava and hot air from the crater, and his explanation seems as probable as it is ingenious. Dr. Reiss adds another to the many refutations of the exploded fiction about respiration being impossible at these great altitudes, and blood gushing from noses and ears. There is a little difficulty of breathing at twelve thousand feet, but it does not appear to increase above that height. The doctor's dog appeared to suffer more than the peons; but though his lungs were weak, his conscience was strong, and he followed his master, grumblingly, to the summit.—New York Tribune.

THE late Dr. Guthrie was equal to any emergency, physically or otherwise. While engaged in pastoral visitation he came one day to the door of an Irish papist, who was determined that the doctor should not enter his house. "You cannot come in here," said he; "you're not needed nor wanted." "My friend," said the doctor, "I'm only visiting round my parish to become acquainted with my people, and have called on you—only as a parishioner." "It don't matter," said Paddy, "you shan't come in here;" and with that, lifting the poker, he said: "If you come in here I'll knock yer down." Most men would have retired, or tried to reason; the doctor did neither, but drawing himself up to his full height, and looking the Irishman fair in the face, he said: "Come now, that's too bad! Would you strike a man unarmed? Hand me the tongs, and then we shall be on equal terms." The man looked at him for a little while in great amazement, and then said: "Och, sure, yer a quare man for a minister! come inside;" and, feeling rather ashamed of his conduct, he laid down the poker. The doctor entered and talked, as he could well do, in a way so entertaining and instructive as to win the admiration of the man. Patrick, when he rose to go, shook his hand warmly and said: "Be sure, sir, don't pass my door without giving me a call."

THE income of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel (High Church Episcopal) for 1872 was £113,125, an increase of £15,522 from the previous year.

Religious Intelligence.

MEMORIAL RELICS.—The Yale Divinity School is becoming rich in mementoes of distinguished theologians, such as the writing-desk, bookcase and Concordance of President Edwards (the latter presented by one of his descendants); the pulpit of Dr. Dwight, presented to Yale College when his old church on Greenfield Hill was taken down; and a copy of "Cartwright on Proverbs," printed at Leyden in 1617 by Elder Brewster, one of the "pilgrim" settlers of Plymouth.

A GREAT MISSION-FIELD.—A great field is now opened to missionary labor in the Austrian empire. Rev. Mr. Schaufler, who has recently entered that field, gives its extent as follows: "Think of the 35,500,000 of Germans, Bohemians, Silesians, Gallicians, Hungarians, Rumanians, Servians, Croatians and Dalmatians to whom the Lord gives us the privilege of carrying the gospel, all accessible to the missionary." He calls for a reinforcement of eight men to enter the field, and is greatly encouraged with the prospect of success.

ACCORDING to the Watchman and Recorder, the condition of English Methodism indicates a good degree of spiritual prosperity. Encouraging revivals are reported in many parts of the country. On one circuit 500 members had been added to the societies within two years. There is a general improvement in regard to financial matters, and the efforts being put forth for the erection of more commodious and convenient places of worship, the occupation of new ground, and the employment of additional ministers, are signs full of promise.

FROM the half-yearly report of the Alliance Israelite Universelle we learn that eleven schools are in operation under its auspices: at Aleppo, Adrianople, Bagdad, Shumla, Jaffa, Larissa, Safil, Tangiers, Tetuan, Volo and Widdin. At Paris the Alliance maintains a training school for teachers frequently recruited from the most promising pupils in the Eastern schools. The Bischoffsheim Institute at Paris, on the same principle, trains governesses for work in the East. New schools are on the point of being established at Beirout, Salonica and Smyrna.

IMPORTANT union projects are meditated both by the Presbyterian and Methodist bodies in Canada. The former are represented by four branches, which have now succeeded, through a joint committee, in adopting a basis of union, which remains to be ratified finally by the several general assemblies. There seems to be no doubt that their action on the subject will be favorable. As to the Methodists, the Wesleyan and the New Connection Conferences—both of them influential—have taken such steps as to render their union a certainty, and that speedily.

METHODIST WORK IN INDIA.—The Methodist Episcopal Church work in India never seemed as vigorous and hopeful as now. In Lucknow the church-membership numbers 117, of whom sixty-nine are natives. In Allahabad, about 150 miles from Lucknow, a powerful revival has taken place and a Methodist church has been organized. Rev. William Taylor, whose work there has been very successful, has just opened a campaign in Calcutta. Three periodicals are published by them in Lucknow. Various tracts and other publications are also issued.

STRANGE RELIGIOUS QUARREL.—In the quaint old church which is supposed to stand on the spot where stood the manger in which Christ was laid at his birth, the chief of the Roman Catholics has hung a new tapestry curtain across the "Grotto of the Nativity," in the place of the one burnt in 1871, and which the Ottoman government was to have replaced in order to end the traditional dispute between the Greek and Latin churches relative to the proprietary rights in said curtains. Both parties have now agreed to refer the question to the French embassador at Constantinople.

REV. V. BOUHON, of the English Baptist mission, has established a mission station in the town of St. Brieuc, in the department of Cotes du Nord, Brittany. Mr. Boulon, who is the only Protestant minister for miles around, has found it somewhat difficult to establish himself and secure a suitable place for worship. The place in which he holds service is, he writes, "only a room over stables." Mr. Bouhon notices that even among a Breton-speaking population a French tract is usually preferred to a Breton. This is the result of the public school teaching, in which the old Breton is disused.

AN URGENT CALL for more missionaries comes from Japan. Rev. J. D. Davis, of the American Board, writes from Kobe that since the whole empire has been opened to foreigners, and Christianity is to be tolerated, a large force of missionary laborers should enter that field at once. "We wish," he says, "we had to-day workers enough to put a station in each station of a million souls. We need the twenty men asked for last summer. All the arguments then presented are now upon us with increasing power. To all human appearances, unless we are speedily and largely reinforced, the golden opportunity for Japan will be lost. Now, when we seem to need a score of well fully trained and ready, we have only five on the ground, and most of as beginners only."

ORIGIN OF MISSIONARY LABOR IN THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.—Rev. Joseph Harvey, who died recently in Michigan at the age of eighty-six, is reported to have been the first man to suggest the establishment of American missions in the Sandwich Islands. In 1809, while Mr. Harvey was pastor at Goshen, Connecticut, a whaler brought to New Haven the first Sandwich Islander ever seen on this coast. He was placed in Mr. Harvey's family to be educated, and under the latter's teaching he embraced Christianity. The American Board, then just starting in Boston, took an interest in the case, and the result was the sending out of missionaries to the Islands. From such beginning, "behold what hath God wrought!"

THE Rev. Dr. Jessup writes privately to the editor of the Congregationalist from Beirut, Syria: "The year 1872 was one of the most prosperous in the history of our (the Syrian) mission. Sixty were added to the nine churches, making the present number of members 381. We received 28 to our Beirut church; we have 38 preaching places, and average congregations of 2,055; also 28 Sabbath schools, with 898 pupils. These 1,913 Protestants gave last year to benevolent objects $1,328 in gold. We have 46 common schools, with 1,535 male pupils and 572 female—in all 2,107. We have two female seminaries, with 125 pupils; two boys' high schools, with 62 pupils, and one college, with 86 students. There are 89 native agents, of whom three are ordained pastors, 12 licensed preachers and 60 teachers. The prospects of growth and enlargement are greater than ever before."

ACCORDING to the Calcutta correspondent of the London Times, the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal announces the abandonment on the part of government of its plans for the education of women in purely secular schools. The reason assigned for the failure of Miss Carpenter's schools is that "natives will not have their daughters taught without the moral safeguards given by religion, whether Hindooism or Christianity." Government also hesitates about graduating at such an expense so many young people whose "own faith has been destroyed, while no moral or spiritual substitute has been given for it." It is now intimated that the public policy will be to make use of the means provided by the various religious societies for the popular education of India. The native Christians also, in the Bengal Christian Herald, tell an English lady who is endeavoring to open a purely secular school for native girls that she makes a great mistake in attempting to found a "godless" institution. "A day school for females without religious instruction is bad enough; it is a thousand times worse to have a boarding school without religion."

THE MENNONITES.—The Herald of Truth, organ of the Mennonites in the United States, says: "The emigration of the Mennonites from Russia is beginning to assume a more serious aspect. Since the Russian authorities have prohibited the preaching of the doctrine of non-resistance, the people begin to feel the burden of oppression, and to comprehend that there is really a meaning to the restraints laid upon them by their government. From recent letters received from there we learn that about twenty families are ready with the opening of the spring to come over. These families possess considerable means and intend to go to Minnesota. A deputation has also been chosen, and is no doubt at this time already upon the way to this country, and will shortly arrive here, to examine this country and make final choice of a place for settlement. The necessity of emigrating seems to gain ground. Many who, till recently, were strongly opposed to emigrating are now favoring the project, and we have no doubt that in the course of another year we will see a very large number of them coming to this country."

THE Christian Times (London,) organ of the Ritualists, gives the following figures, which illustrate the growth of Ritualism in the English metropolis: "While in 1870, out of every hundred churches in London and its neighborhood, there were only 15.1 where the surplice was used in the pulpit, there are now 46.1. Historically speaking, preaching in the surplice was the first step toward Ritualism, and it is well known that most of the members of the Church Association hold it still in utter abomination. Take another thing which made a great figure in the Tractarian revival, and which the Record has not even yet ceased to denounce—the choral service. In 1868 there were only 33.3 per cent. of the London churches where the psalter was chanted, and only 18.8 where the service was sung throughout; whereas in 1873 the proportions are 52.6 and 25.8. Surpliced choirs have risen from 17.9 per cent. to 30.9. But to come to more important matters. Choral celebration, it will be allowed, is distinctively Ritualistic. Well, in 1868 the per centage was but 5.1; it is now 11.9. Weekly communion has risen in the four years from 23.6 to 34.2 per cent.; daily communion from 2 to 3.4 per cent.; early communion—which connotes fasting reception—from 22.9 to 40.4 per cent.; free and open churches from 8.8 to 16.7 per cent.; and eucharistic vestments from 2 per cent. to 3.4."

SOME explorations beyond Old Calabar, on the West African coast, were made last fall by Rev. Samuel H. Edgerly, of the United Presbyterian (Scotch) mission. Journeying from 80 to 100 miles north of Creek Town, his station on the Calabar river, Mr. Edgerly found a group of villages, the headquarters of the Ibami and Uyanga clans. It had been supposed in the region of Calabar that the Ibami people came from Akuna-Riuu, about a day's journey westward of Ibami and Uyanga; but the king of these clans asserts that there is no blood connection between the tribe of Akuna-Riuu and his own, nor do they understand each other's language. The Ibami and Uyanga lie between the Inokon colony to the west and Ikpofia to the east. Next to the Ikpofia are the Gedi, a branch of the Ibami. The Ikpofia were entirely distinct, disowned by the Gedi, who lived nearest them, as well as by the Inokon and the Ekol, who lie south. Mr. Edgerly found the natives eager to welcome white men, and he proposes that Uyanga be occupied as a central station by a European missionary, and that teachers be scattered about the neighboring villages. Three children of the king alluded to accompanied the missionary to Urvet, about forty miles south of their home, there to live with the teachers; and the king promised at a future day to send children from his tribe to the mission in Calabar.

The Higher Life.

There are probably differences of opinion in our Southern Methodism about the definitions of Christian perfection. As a distinct work, and attended by a distinct witness, there are many who stand in doubt of it; but as a higher degree of the grace received at conversion, and attended by the same spirit of adoption which was given at first, our people as a body believe in it. There is, however, an aversion to it as a specialty, because they have seen this form of religious specialism associated in the Northern Methodist Church with fanaticism and other elements of mischief. The aversion may not be well founded, but the people who do most affect entire sanctification, and hold camp meetings especially for its promotion, have shown themselves to be most bitter, malignant and blood-thirsty in their temper and utterances toward us. Then this special advocacy and profession of perfection have led to more or less trouble in the Northern Church itself, threatening at one time a most serious disruption, and is still an element of disquiet that may result in great damage in the future. It is often asserted that the profession of this higher state of grace is frequently associated with a censorious and uncharitable spirit, and that "sour godliness" is the particular type of piety which those who profess the experience of perfect love usually exhibit.

And, again, the charge is perhaps not altogether groundless that the advocates of this doctrine often exhibit the experience of regeneration as something comparatively insignificant. Rev. John Inskip declares that the difference between a regenerated person and a sanctified one is as great as that between an unconverted sinner and a justified soul. This has doubtless been the tendency in certain quarters: to make light of that tremendously important experience of the new birth or regeneration, and to establish a sort of caste in religion, which very naturally runs into the self-righteousness of the Pharisee. Judging from these things, the doctrine may be easily perverted, and the experience may readily run into the extremes of fanatical folly, and the most uncharitable judgments and estimates concerning the attainments of others. It may be also that these circumstances have brought the doctrine, as expounded by Inskip and others, somewhat into disfavor with many of our people. As stated by Wesley and Watson, it may be that there is a disposition to diverge somewhat from these old Methodist standards, but we believe that our people and preachers are sound, for the most part, in their acceptance of Christian perfection as exhibited, for instance, in Wesley's sermon on the text: "Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect." Watson's treatment of the subject in the Institutes is brief but judicious, and certainly free from the extravagances which some modern perfectionists have indulged. Our preachers do not make a specialty of the doctrine, neither do our writers, but it is presented in connection with all the doctrines and experiences, and in harmony with the whole system of revealed truth.

There is probably a call for more direct experimental preaching to the church. There is much beyond conversion, in the way of building up and in promoting the grace of God as a growth, and a complete victory over sin. There should be no relaxation in reference to the import of regeneration, and the privilege of every one that is born of God to live without sin. To be a Christian at all is to be holy, to be accepted in Christ, and prepared for death and eternity. Mr. Wesley expressly says that "even babes in Christ are in such a sense perfect, or born of God (an expression taken also in divers senses,) as first, not to commit sin." But while we insist on the greatness of the blessing of conversion, progress should be insisted on as a condition of spiritual health, and as a source of indescribable usefulness and happiness. There is a great deal of fallow ground in the church and in the hearts of professed Christians that needs to be broken up. Backsliding has resulted from the neglect of this doctrine of higher blessings and a completer sanctification. The new-born spiritual babe must be nursed and pressed forward to adult experience—to the manhood of the spiritual life. The high standard of privilege and attainment, as set up in the gospel, should be kept steadily before the church, and all motives and encouragements should be urged to stimulate to diligence in advancing and ascending in the divine life. If we have become negligent in reference to the duty of perfecting holiness in the fear of God, it is time to awake to righteousness in this special sense, and to direct the attention of believers more to the clean heart and the right spirit. It will be always profitable to examine ourselves with reference to the inspired exhibition of religious consecration, and no professed follower of Christ should be content for a moment to live below the mark of purity as enjoined by the word of God.

The Pastor in Society.

A correspondent, whose opinions are of more value than ours, writes as follows:

MR. EDITOR: Please to give us your opinion of the following, from Vinet's Pastoral Theology, page 133:

"The pastor is a social man—not a man of society, still less a man of the world. He should make himself scarce, unless prohibited by charity, which alone is allowed to make him common. A man who is seen everywhere cannot inspire respect. The judgment we form of a pastor who goes much into society is not very favorable. We suspect him of not being sensible of his duties, and of the need of solitude. Society multiplies the occasions for doing good, but much more the temptations to do evil."

We have not Vinet's work at hand, and therefore do not know what light the connection might throw upon this extract. Going into society is, of course, a different thing from pastoral visiting. Of this latter the preacher must do a great deal ordinarily. This and the work of the study are the two important branches of his labor outside of the church and pulpit. When all is thoroughly attended to there will be little time for mere society. And yet for relaxation, and also as a means of doing good, social intercourse is desirable and necessary.

To be a man of society, however, in the fashionable sense of the term—in such sense as Chesterfield and the Countess of Blessington would have understood it—would be scarcely expedient for a minister of the gospel. Vinet probably referred to the fashionable society of his day, and his views are equally applicable to the worldly companies of the present time. There are few gatherings of this sort in which the card-table, the wine-bottle and the dance are not present, and of course neither consistency nor self-respect would allow of a minister's presence under such circumstances.

For such society as is open to no objections on moral grounds, and which involves no compromise of religious principle, and especially for occasions of social intercourse with intelligent and refined religious people, we cannot conceive that any scruples should be entertained. To enter such circles is often a duty, and may contribute to our enjoyment and to the furtherance of our ministerial usefulness. The preacher ought, as much as possible, to avail himself of all legitimate social influences, to be a man among men, and to contribute to the chastened vivacity and cheerfulness of the social circle. The art of conversation is worth cultivating by ministers, and will often prove a powerful reinforcement to their pastoral and pulpit influence. Dr. Johnson testifies that Wesley talked well on any subject, and we are assured that he was the delight and ornament of the society in which he moved. The preacher who wastes his time in frivolous gossip, in lounging about livery-stables, whittling sticks on the public street, or loafing about generally, has greatly abused, if he has not mistaken, his calling.

There is such a thing as degradation to character and to the religious profession, but there is also a social intercourse and an acquaintance with the people which may be made available to the best ends. Good social qualities in a preacher are indeed of great importance, and often determine his acceptability and success. The absence of them cannot always be overcome by the highest pulpit ability and by the most unquestioned piety. The ascetic model of John the Baptist is not for the Christian ministry. We would rather turn to the great Teacher himself who went about doing good, adorning and beautifying the society of his day, and embracing these opportunities to instruct the ignorant and to unfold the mysteries of his kingdom.

Under Way.—The Collections.

Our annual connectional departure is from the May meetings of the Bishops and the Board of Missions. The episcopal districts are now fixed, the time of the Conferences is announced, and the amount needed for our mission work is set before the people. The church is now in harness, and the preachers have gone forth sowing precious seed. Their work is before them, the time to do it in is determined, and, with the goal in view, all have entered on the race.

The proceedings and action of our Board of Missions, we hope, were most carefully considered. One hundred thousand dollars is the figure set, but the board ventured to appropriate only $79,050. Each Conference is assessed a definite amount, its pro rata of the sum total. Alabama is to raise $10,000, Mississippi $8,000, Louisiana $7,000. Will the preachers begin early to work up to these amounts? This is a heavy advance on what was done last year, and to realize the amount assessed we must begin at once to preach on missions and to plan for the largest possible results.

It is gratifying to know that the Bishops' fund was adequate to pay their claims in full. Let us resolve that this shall ever be the case for the future. Every member should make it a point of conscience to contribute something to the support of our Bishops—ours and theirs; and every preacher should give his congregations the best of opportunities to meet this demand. The salary allowed our effective Bishops ($3,000) is less than it should be. This amount covers house-rent, furniture and everything except traveling expenses, and in some localities is inadequate to the comfortable support of a family. From $4,000 to $4,500 are the salaries of the effective Bishops of the Church North. We believe that our Bishops are not paid enough, and it is not much to boast of that their annual allowance is met. No class of men in our ministry do as much hard work as they, and the value of their labors to the church, in all of its enterprises and interests, is not to be put in comparison with the meager support accorded them. The people will more than meet the demand every year if they are afforded the opportunity of giving.

Then let us not forget the widows, orphans and worn-out preachers. When their claims are not met at the Annual Conference, somebody is to blame. The pastors who come up empty-handed in this collection have surely failed to plead for them before their congregations. It is little, comparatively, that they are allowed, but that little should be regarded as a sacred debt. No part of this price should be kept back. It is one of the gravest defects of our system that no adequate provisions are made for our aged and disabled preachers, and that the dependent families of those who have died in the work are left, for the most part, to take care of themselves as they best can. The allowance to these beneficiaries of the Conference collection should at least be doubled in every Conference, and then the last penny of it should be raised and paid over.

Other matters are of course to be looked after, but these three collections should be specially kept in view, and taken at different times through the year. If they are all crowded together toward the end of the year, as the unfortunate manner of some is, or if they are all taken at once, as the still more unfortunate manner of a few is, the amount raised will be much less than if taken separately and at different seasons. It is not uncommon to reach the beginning of the third round of Quarterly Conferences, or even of the fourth, and not a collection taken. Everything has to be brought up at once—preacher's salary, perhaps church repairs, missions and everything—and, as might be expected, the result is anything but satisfactory. Various circumstances may affect the collections, as the state of the country, crops and claims for church improvements and building enterprises; but still they should be taken as regularly as April, July and October come. Our church has perhaps fewer stated collections for connectional objects than the most of our neighbors, and these should be presented with vigor, and urged zealously.

Take Heed.

Mrs. Chapin writes in the Southern Christian Advocate on children's rights. We commend the following from her pen to our Sunday school workers:

"Before me, on my desk, is a book which was taken by a scholar from the library of one of the most flourishing Sunday schools in this city. It is written by Miss Alcot, the author of "Little Men," "Little Women and Old-Fashioned Girls." The book is coarse and vulgar in the extreme, and there is scarcely one single page that would not offend the taste of any decent, well-raised Southern child.

"Jane Amanda," said a colored woman to her daughter the other day, "I tell you now, don't you give up the inside of the pavement to nobody, for if you don't think nothing of yourself, nobody ain't a gwine to think nothing of you," and Jane Amanda's maternal head is not very far wrong. I often wonder what those authors who cannot write a book without throwing out some slur against the South must think of us for buying their books, and what our children will think after they have read them, and had their minds poisoned by the demoralizing stuff.

In the story of the "Blue and the Gray," Miss Alcot gives us a specimen of what she is pleased to call in derision, "Southern chivalry." In the person of a Confederate officer she pictures an incarnate fiend, who was wounded and a prisoner in a Federal hospital, where he received the utmost kindness and attention through the influence of a wounded Federal soldier. Ungrateful for all the favors the noble Yankee showed him, the "fiend" stealthily creeps up in the night and pours from a gold locket, containing his mother's hair, a deadly poison into the tumbler of the brave man who lay dying at his side.

Upon another page Miss Alcot speaks of "picking up a funny little negro baby, and, with the blood of two generations of abolitionists in her veins, kissing the little black, shining toad with ardor." Well, there is no accounting for taste any more than there is for the vagaries of these "strong-minded females." Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe, the priestess at the shrine of Uncle Tom, picked up herself after the war, soul and body, and moved down South, where she could enjoy the society of her sable pets ad libitum. I think, from a recent letter of the fanatical lady's in the Christian Union, that she has seen too much of Uncle Tom, and the familiarity has bred contempt. She writes: "With suitable instruction we may yet see alligators in the Legislature, and they would not be any more voracious and grasping than many who are there." This is certainly very flattering to the alligators, but how about the Uncle Toms, of whom the Legislature down there is so largely composed? I have no doubt if Mrs. Stowe gains the right of suffrage for the alligators they will reward her by voting for Grant; but I don't like to see people go back on their friends so. Now I do not begrudge poor Miss Alcot the little drop of comfort it affords her to kiss negro babies (if she can get to kiss nothing better,) but I do not think either the morals or the manners of our children will be improved by reading any of her miscegenation views. She says, "I feel decidedly more interest in the black man than in the white," and dwells at large on "the delight she felt in washing, nursing and fondling the negro men" wounded at Battery Wagner. I have not selected the most repulsive examples from her book, because of their delicate suggestions. This carelessness in selecting our libraries cannot be excused. There are many good books written by Southerners which cannot be found upon the shelves of any of our libraries. Miss Alcot's books are bought, while those of Mrs. G. H. McLeod (a lady whose talents warrant her selection as editress of a department in one of the principal papers in Baltimore) are entirely ignored. A few months ago, at a horticultural exhibition in one of our Northern cities, a poem was read on "The Sense of the Beautiful." The author's name was not given. It was listened to by a number of Southerners, upon whom it created quite an impression. Upon their return they were speaking of it enthusiastically as one of the rare treats to be enjoyed North. "Is it possible," I said, "that you did not recognize in it the last utterance of our own Simms?" They had not.

Let us be true to ourselves, to our children, to our literature.

Experience the Same.

What a demonstration of the truth and divinity of Christianity there is in the uniform effects produced upon men of all nations and tongues when they experimentally embrace it! No matter how unlike in everything else they may be, the grace of Christ stamps them with a divine uniformity—they speak one language, they have one spirit. Here is an East Indian, one of a race that we are accustomed to look upon as almost incurably barbarian, and yet his language and spirit have "the true ring."

NATIVE INDIA PREACHER.—Many a missionary friend will be glad to read the experience of one of them. He is at a distance from one of our missionaries, an old associate, and writes: "I miss those blessed seasons of social and Christian communion. I will never forget our happy conferences and camp meetings, especially the one held at Tilhur. I can never forget the mango-tree, under whose branches I found the Lord, and beheld the face of the Father beaming with smiles of reconciliation. I have repeated the story over and over again, and yet it is the more pleasant to me. I will tell the angels, who rejoiced when I wept tears of joy, how I found the Lord at Tilhur.

"The happy associations of past times now and then come up before my mind, and make my separation from you, my brethren, somewhat more painful. But as I remember that I am here in obedience to the Master's call, I feel quite reconciled. My desire is that we may not forget one another. It is possible that, as we are separated by several hundred miles, and the distance will increase as you go to America, your home associations and enjoyments may cause you to forget me. I wish you to allot me a little corner in your heart. You will no doubt often think of your orphan boys; you may then think of the Bengalee head-master they had for some time. When the associations of our camp meetings and conferences come up before your mind, I trust you will think of me, and when you do so turn me in thought to the throne of grace, and pray for a blessing upon me and my work here."

The brother who wrote the above letter is a Bengalee. He became a Christian while attending school in Calcutta. Nearly six years ago he came to the mission as a schoolmaster. Two years later he learned the difference in Tilhur between being a nominal and real Christian; was afterward received on probation in Conference. At the end of two years, which have just expired, he goes to take the charge of a native self-supporting congregation.

The Presidency of Drew Seminary.

The trustees of Drew Seminary have just elected Dr. J. F. Hurst to the presidency just vacated by Bishop Foster. Though comparatively a young man, Dr. Hurst has shown his fitness for the position by his success as the head of the Martin Mission Institute in Frankfort, Germany. Since his return home he has occupied the chair of church history in Drew Seminary, where his affable manners and scholarly spirit have made him hosts of friends. Dr. Hurst has been an industrious author. His History of Rationalism was published nearly ten years since. While in Germany he put to press a translation of Hagenbach's History of Christianity in the Eighteenth and Nineteenth Centuries. He also translated the Commentary of Lange on the Epistle to the Romans, a part of the complete commentary now appearing under the supervision of Dr. Schaaf. He has besides these written several smaller works. His administration will, we have no doubt, fully meet the expectations of the church.

In literary productiveness Drew Seminary has already borne rich fruit. The Biblical and Theological Cyclopedia, begun by Drs. McClintock and Strong, and now in process of completion by the latter, is an honor to American literature. In its plan, one of the most comprehensive cyclopedias ever undertaken, it will be, when completed, a condensed library. The care, the patience, the research involved in the execution of such a work can be fully appreciated only by those who have been engaged in similar undertakings. For Dr. Strong it will be his magnum opus. It is, indeed, his life-task, and will remain an enduring record of his and Dr. McClintock's scholarship. Dr. Kidder has been for years a prolific author. Bishop Foster is preparing, we understand, a complete work on dogmatic theology. Dr. Miley, his successor, will no doubt turn his opportunities to good account.

Thus the seminary, both in the number and progress of its students, and the literary fruitfulness of its teachers, is meeting the expectations of its founder and the church. May we not hope that these are only first fruits?—Methodist.

THE Interior says of the death of John Stuart Mill:

"Few men of this generation have been more widely known than Mr. John Stuart Mill, whose death, at Avignon, France, on the eighth instant, has been announced by telegraph. His mind was of a high order; he was a prolific writer; his style was clear and incisive, and this, united with a fearless logic, made him capable of presenting, in its strongest light, whatever side in controversy he espoused. As he was, for the most part, on the wrong side, his influence has been very injurious, and it is a melancholy fact that his splendid intellect should have been made subservient to the work of shaking the faith of England in the verities which lie at the bottom of sound morals and true religion.

"In early life he was devoted to physical science, and contributed something, we believe, to the literature of botany. He has been a hard worker, pursuing his literary studies during intervals of business, in this respect reminding us of the late Mr. Grote. Until 1853 he held an appointment as chief examiner of the accounts of the East India Company, resigning his position when the affairs of the company were transferred to the English government.

"He first adopted as a disciple, and afterward defended as a master, the sensational philosophy of which his father was an advocate. His Logic is his greatest book, and will probably live longest.

"He adopted the utilitarian theory of ethics, as indeed he was required to do by his Psychology, and has given the ablest defense of that theory which we have in our language.

"Mr. Mill has borne a conspicuous part in the fight against those intuitions which lie at the foundation of our religious experience. When we lose faith in these we lose faith in God, religion and moral obligation. If Mill was right, Bentham was not wrong when he penned the contradictory statement that the word ought ought not to be in the dictionary. But the battle is not over, though the leader is dead."

THE commencement exercises of the Alabama Conference Female College, Tuskegee, will be held June 25. The commencement sermon is to be preached by Rev. A. S. Andrews, D. D., on Sunday, the twenty-second. They are sure to have a good time at Tuskegee. Wish we could be there.

Texas University.

At a meeting of the board of trustees of the Texas University, held in Galveston, May 16, 1873, the following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, That the board of trustees are now prepared to permanently locate the Texas University at either of the following points, to wit: Corsicana, Waco, Waxahachie, Fort Worth, Fairfield or Georgetown.

Resolved, That the board will award the location within ninety days from this date to either one of the above-named places offering the highest subsidy; provided that the subsidy shall aggregate in value not less than $150,000.

Resolved, That W. B. Norris, M. C. McLemore and J. R. Henry are hereby constituted an executive committee to examine the bids, estimate their value, give and receive information relative to the particulars of location and report to the board from time to time, and they are hereby empowered to take such other action as they may deem advisable to secure immediate settlement of the question of location.

Resolved, That the foregoing resolutions be published in the daily papers and the Texas Christian Advocate.

W. B. NORRIS,
President Board of Trustees.
GEO. F. ALFORD, Secretary.
Galveston Christian Advocate.

THE site for the Vanderbilt University, says the Nashville Christian Advocate of May 31, covers sixty-six acres and a half, of which sixteen acres were given to the board, and the rest costs $59,500, of which more than half has been subscribed in Nashville, and the remainder will be forthcoming in due time. There are two good houses and other valuable improvements on the premises. A contract has been closed with the architect, and the ground will soon be broken for the foundation of the main edifice. The architect is now visiting the most prominent institutions of the country, to secure the best plans for the university buildings. The committee having the work in charge will let no grass grow under their feet. The titles to the property are secured, and everything betokens a prosperous enterprise.

HIWASSEE COLLEGE, Tennessee, is located seven miles from Sweetwater, in a very pleasant and healthful region, and offers great inducements to parents who have boys to educate. The institution is under the care of the Holston Conference. Rev. J. H. Brunner is president, and is assisted by competent and experienced professors. The college reopens on the fourth of August. We notice that a law department has been established to meet the wants of young men who purpose entering the legal profession. The total expense of the collegiate term is put down at $150, which includes everything.

WE REGRET exceedingly to hear of the bereavement of our brother, Rev. T. W. Hines, of Waxahachie, Texas. His little son, Henry Hunter Price, died on the twelfth of May, aged seven years. He was a child of great promise, and remarkably for his clear and mature religious experience. "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." The bereaved family have our deepest sympathies in this great sorrow which has overtaken them.

MANY THANKS to our "little friends" for an invitation to attend the fourth annual celebration of the Euterpean Society, Martha Washington College, which is to be June 23. In the order of exercises we notice the names of Miss M. H. Werlein and Miss M. B. Parham, of New Orleans. Sorry that we cannot be there. We hope the young ladies of Martha Washington College may have a pleasant commencement.

THE controversy about the Alabama Conference and the Southern University, with reference to the appropriation of funds, must be settled on the Conference floor. We have published an article pro and con, but doubt the utility of continuing the discussion in the ADVOCATE. One or two articles on hand may appear, but not any more.

WE NOTICE with great pleasure that our confrere of the Southwestern Presbyterian, Rev. H. M. Smith, D. D., was chosen moderator by the General Assembly which met at Little Rock, Arkansas, on the fifteenth of May. It was a well-merited honor, and we observe that Dr. Smith filled the important position most admirably.

THE announcement of the commencement exercises of the Wesleyan Female Institute, Staunton, Virginia, will be found in another column. This institution is among the best, and is located in the most salubrious region of Virginia. Parents in the South who wish a change of climate for their daughters cannot fail to be pleased with the Wesleyan Female Institute.

HOMER COLLEGE.—The commencement sermon will be preached June 15, by Rev. John Wilkinson. Annual meeting of board of trustees on the sixteenth. Address to the Polytechnic Society, by Mr. Drayton B. Hayes, on the seventeenth. On Wednesday, the eighteenth (commencement day,) Rev. Charles F. Evans will deliver a literary address.

Books and Periodicals.

A COMMENTARY, CRITICAL, EXPERIMENTAL AND PRACTICAL, ON THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS. By the Rev. Robert Jamieson, D. D., St. Paul's, Glasgow; Rev. A. R. Fausset, A. M., St. Cuthbert's, York, and Rev. David Brown, D. D., professor of theology, Aberdeen. Volume 5, Matthew-John. By the Rev. David Brown, D. D. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co.

We have had occasion already to notice several volumes of this commentary on the Old Testament, and to commend the work highly. This volume on the Four Gospels is, we think, even better than those. We have examined it here and there, and find the notes fresh and instructive; the latest results of criticism and of discovery are embodied in them, and they are written in a vigorous and popular style. We are indebted to the publishers, through Kain & Co., of this city, for a copy.

THE NATURE AND UTILITY OF MATHEMATICS. With the best methods of instruction explained and illustrated. By Charles Davies, LL. D. New York: Published by A. S. Barnes & Co., 1873.

Prof. Davies' text-books have been long in use, and he is widely known as an author and teacher. This work embodies the views of the author after a long experience. It contains, indeed, the results of a life of labor and study on a subject of first importance to the thinkers and educators of the age. The volume is handsomely printed on cream-tinted paper, 419 pages, 12mo, with a fine lithograph likeness of the author. Price, $1.50 sent by mail.

SELF-HELP. With illustrations of character, conduct and perseverance. By Samuel Smiles. Revised by Atticus G. Haygood, D. D., Sunday school secretary. Nashville, Tennessee: Published by A. H. Redford, agent, for the Methodist Episcopal Church South, 1873.

Samuel Smiles is among the most pleasing and instructive writers of our times, and we are heartily glad that Dr. Haygood has revised this volume especially, and that the Publishing House at Nashville sends it forth for the instruction of our youth. Self-Help is especially valuable to the young, but it is also a work full of interest to all. It is now a good time for the young people of the South to read it and profit by it to the utmost.

THE HUGUENOTS. Their settlements, churches and industries in England and Ireland. By Samuel Smiles.

This is another interesting volume, revised by our Sunday school secretary, Dr. Haygood, and published by our Publishing House at Nashville. It is a 12mo of 332 pages, well printed and handsomely bound. We need not say that this most exciting and celebrated passage of history is here told with truthful power. Our Sunday school and family libraries should by all means have the book. The Huguenots and Self-Help can be ordered from the Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, or from the Depository, 110 and 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

A FAIR SAXON. A novel. By Justin McCarthy. New York: Sheldon & Co., 1873.

The author is one of the best of magazine writers, especially in the line of essays and sketches. We know nothing of his merits as a writer of fiction. Kain & Co., New Orleans.

AMONG the May periodicals not heretofore acknowledged are the American Agriculturist, the Household, the Rural Alabamian, Southern Cultivator, the American Educational Monthly, the Gardeners' Monthly, Revue de la Mode, the Southern Magazine, Old and New—a very fine number.

OUR Sunday school publications for June reached us some time ago. All are exceedingly good. The Magazine opens with "The City of Mexico," a fine article by Bishop Keener. The Sunday schools must rally to the Mexican mission, while they do not forget the Chinese missionaries who are battling and suffering for Christ in that distant land. We say once more what we have said before, that Dr. Haygood gets up the best Sunday school magazine in the country.

OF THE June publications we have received the Galaxy; Scribner's Monthly, illustrated and filled with entertaining articles; Tlio Aldine, with its eleven beautiful engravings; Haus und Herd, a family magazine, published in German, by the Publishing House of the Methodist Episcopal Church; a very handsome magazine in appearance and illustrations. Lippincott, with "A New Atlantis," and "The Roumi in Kabylia," illustrated, besides other articles of interest. Old and New has: "My Time and What I've Done With It," "A Good Appetite," "The Iconoclast of Sensibility," "Scrope, or the Lost Library," and other articles.

THE SOUTHERN CULTIVATOR for June is an excellent number of this always excellent agricultural journal. The June number of the Southern Magazine has: Jasmin, the Troubadour, a fine article by Prof. J. A. Harrison, of Randolph Macon College; A Story of Gettysburg; General Lee at Appomattox, and other articles of merit.

WE HAVE RECEIVED the catalogue of Randolph Macon College for the collegiate year 1872-3. We notice with pleasure that this institution shows increasing prosperity. It has two hundred and thirty-four matriculates, and not less than three hundred are expected at the opening of the next session.

WE ARE INDEBTED to Mr. Louis Grunewald, music dealer, of this city, for the last composition of Mr. Theodore Von La Huche, entitled "Veni Creator," and accompanying the words, "How pleasant, how divinely fair."

WE HAVE RECEIVED "Address and other Exercises at the Inauguration of Alexander Winchell as Chancellor of the Syracuse University, Thursday, February 13, 1873."

LA MODE ELEGANTE, published by S. T. Taylor, New York, is a very handsome monthly journal of fashions, containing patterns, fashion plates, etc.

ROYAL DIADEM.—A tune-book for the Sunday school. Published by Biglow & Main, Chicago, Illinois.

A WRITER in the Penn Monthly gives the following summary of results in regard to the practical working of the system of elective studies:

"The plan of study at Harvard is substantially this: In the freshman class all the studies, which differ very little from those pursued in all colleges (and certainly do not differ in being more difficult,) are pursued by the whole class.

"In the sophomore class each student spends four hours a week on physics, rhetoric, history and elementary French; but he must devote, in addition, eight hours a week to any four courses of study selected from the list given in the table below, giving two hours a week to each course.

"In the junior class the required studies are logic, political economy, physics and rhetoric, which occupy six hours a week. In like manner as the sophomore, the junior selects from the list referred to such subjects as he prefers, the only restriction being that he shall take three courses from that list and devote three hours a week to each.

"In the senior class the only required exercise appears to be four 'forensics' (written arguments,) and the student must select from the list four courses of study, each occupying three hours a week."

The sophomore, junior and senior classes contain respectively one hundred and sixty-six, one hundred and sixty-two and one hundred and thirty-one students. The following figures show the numbers of students in these three classes who have "elected" various studies—the figures belonging to the classes in the order above named:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Greek | 146 | 43 | 31 |
| Latin | 151 | 87 | 63 |
| Mathematics, pure | 36 | 11 | 8 |
| Mathematics, applied | 41 | 8 | 3 |
| English language and literature | 3 | 10 | 30 |
| Logic, metaphysics or philosophy | 21 | 11 | 12 |
| History | 16 | 75 | 124 |
| Chemistry | 79 | 35 | 15 |
| Physics | — | 15 | 21 |
| Mineralogy | — | 1 | 2 |
| Physical geography, botany or natural history | 28 | 35 | 58 |
| Political economy | — | 1 | 2 |
| German | 119 | 86 | 25 |
| French | 35 | 42 | 8 |
| Italian | 10 | 2 | 3 |
| Spanish | 3 | 3 | 3 |

"This is a very significant statement. The following, among other deductions, may be made from it, viz.:

"First. That it is possible for a young man to remain four years at Harvard and graduate with the degree of bachelor of arts without any more knowledge of Latin, Greek or mathematics than he gains during freshman year.

"Second. That, as a matter of fact, the study of the classics has grown into disfavor at Harvard, nearly four-fifths of the senior class having given up Latin and Greek.

"Third. That the study of the mathematics—the only true basis of scientific or technical training—seems to have been in like manner almost abandoned by the higher classes, only nineteen juniors out of one hundred and sixty-two and twelve seniors out of one hundred and thirty-one choosing either pure or applied mathematics as an 'elective' study.

"Fourth. That even that sort of practical instruction which is given in applied science in the chemical and physical laboratories attracts comparatively few of the advanced students—sixty-three of the juniors and thirty-six of the seniors.

"Fifth. That the students are permitted to change their electives at the beginning of each college year, with this result: that no continuous, systematic plan of study, with a definite view, is followed by the large majority of their number.

"Sixth. That the favorite 'electives' of the two higher classes are: History (seventy-five juniors, one hundred and eighteen seniors,) political economy (sixty-five seniors,) botany (sixty-six juniors,) natural history (fifty-eight seniors,) German (eighty-six juniors, forty-seven seniors,) philosophy (forty-three seniors.)

"This is a sad and discouraging result to those who have been firm in the belief that the American 'young man,' if given absolute freedom of choice, would select those studies which would be best suited for his special training."

BARON ADOLPHE DE ROTHSCHILD, who spends some months of the summer at his splendid villa in the neighborhood of Geneva, intends to endow and build there at his own expense a hospital for the treatment of diseases of the eye. He will give for that purpose about £20,000, £8,000 to be devoted for the ground, buildings and fittings, and the revenue of the remaining £12,000 to be devoted to its yearly support. Very suitable grounds were purchased a few days ago at the cost of £12,000, and the new building will be completed and opened in the middle of the next summer. The hospital is to be fitted for twenty in-door patients, with a room for out-patients, and a room for clinical demonstrations. The medical direction of the hospital has been intrusted to Dr. Barde, of Geneva.

IN A recent lecture on the "Constitution of the Sun," Prof. Young made use of the following curious illustration in order to aid his hearers in forming an idea of the sun's distance. "You know," he states, "that, if you touch a part of the body, one does not feel it instantly. If you touch the hand of any one with a pin, it will be an appreciable part of a second before he will feel it and draw his hand back. Now, if I had an arm long enough to reach to the sun, and should put my fingers into the solar flame, and burn them there, it would be a hundred years before I would find it out, and another hundred years before I could remove my hand. Such is the distance of the sun, and yet, across that space, the earth responds to every impulse of the solar surface."

THE General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church met in Baltimore, May 15. Rev. S. J. Niccolls, of St. Louis, the retiring moderator, delivered the opening sermon. Rev. Howard Crosby, D. D., chancellor of the College of New York, was elected moderator, and on taking the chair made an elegant speech. Rev. W. E. Moore, of Ohio, J. D. Crum, of New York, Samuel Conn, of Indiana, and J. R. Miller, of Philadelphia, were chosen secretaries. The chair occupied by the moderator is an heirloom of the church in which the Assembly is held. It was used in the Synod of Dort, in 1618; a Dutch family that emigrated brought the chair to Albany, New York, in 1650, and it was finally bequeathed to Rev. Dr. Chester, of Albany, about sixty years ago. It is a handsome straight-back chair, made of cherry, not very massive and but slightly carved. The committee on the Centenary of American Independence recommended that Presbyterian churches take part in the celebration, and invite the co-operation of all Presbyterian churches. The anniversary to be celebrated by a general fast-day, to be held on the first Sabbath in July, 1876, and that for the occasion historical essays be prepared, comprising a history of the church prior to and since the revolution, and all historical events pertaining thereto up to the present time.

A PAPYRUS, discovered a short time since in a tomb in Egypt by the editor of the Hieroglyphical Standard, has since been thoroughly examined by Dr. Eisenlohr, of Heidelberg, who is a first-rate Egyptian scholar. He has made a full translation of the "hieratic" characters inscribed on the scroll, which is discovered to be an allocution of Rameses the Third "to his people and all men on earth," recounting the great deeds that were done in the days of his father Sebnecht and his grandfather Maneptah the Second Seti. In the days of those monarchs the religious feelings of Egypt were much disturbed, for Moses had brought in or restored monotheistic worship; but when the author of the chronicle ascended the throne he restored the old religion, rebuilt the temples, and gained the favor of Ashtaroth and her suite. He details at length all the causes which led to the downfall of the Mosaic reform and the exodus of the Jews. This discovery is therefore of the greatest interest and importance to biblical students, and the time when a translation will be published will be looked forward to with eagerness. The scroll is further "the finest, largest, best-written and best-preserved of all that have hitherto been discovered in the country of the Pharaohs." There seems, happily, to be no doubt about its authenticity.

DEATH OF REV. NICHOLAS TALLEY. Rev. Nicholas Talley, the oldest member of the South Carolina Conference, and probably the oldest minister in that State—being in his eightieth year—died at his residence in Columbia, South Carolina, on Saturday morning, May 10. His life had been one of constant usefulness, and he had been long identified with all the important movements of his country. He was worthily loved and honored by all with whom he came in contact on account of true Christian character. At the earnest solicitation of friends he preached on the Sabbath previous to his death, and his strength immediately thereafter began to fail, and continued in a gradual decline until death relieved him, and he now rests from his labors.—Baltimore Episcopal Methodist.

THE General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of the United States met at Little Rock, Arkansas, and was opened with a sermon by Rev. T. R. Welch, moderator of the last Assembly. H. M. Smith, D. D., of New Orleans, was elected moderator, and Rev. R. H. Smoot secretary. Some eighty delegates answered to roll-call.

THE commencement of Whitworth College, Brookhaven, is July 1. See special notices for the details.

The Child's Corner.

A CRADLE SONG IN THE FIFTEENTH CENTURY.

FROM A BOOK OF TRANSLATIONS FROM THE GERMAN.

Sweet Jesus Christ, my Lord most dear,
As thou wast once an infant here,
So give this little child, I pray,
Thy grace and blessing day by day;
O Jesus, Lord divine,
Guard me this babe of mine!

Since in thy holy heaven, O Lord,
All things obey thy slightest word,
Do thou thy mighty succor give,
And shield my child by morn and eve;
Sweet Jesus, Lord divine,
Guard thou this babe of mine!

Thy watch let angels round it keep Where'er it be, awake, asleep;
Thy holy cross now let it bear,
That it thy crown with palms may wear;
O Jesus, Lord divine,
Guard thou this babe of mine!

Now sleep, oh sleep, my little child!
Jesus will be thy playmate mild;
Sweet dreams he soaleth thee, I trow,
That full of goodness thou mayest grow;
O Jesus, Lord divine,
Guard me this babe of mine!

Suited to a "T."

"How did your wristbands suit you, Frank?" said Fanny Grey to her brother Frank, a young man just home in his first college vacation. "I stitched them every bit myself on the machine. Were they nice? Did they fit?"

"They were splendid, Fan. I told the fellows they were done by an old lady of seven years. Fit? I guess they did. Fitted to a T. Thank you!"

And Frank Grey pulled his coat-sleeve up a little and showed the shining linen, fitting his shapely wrist, much to his little sister's admiration.

"Frank," said Fanny, a few moments after, "may I ask you something?"

"Of course you may, little one; I'll answer if I can." And Frank clasped his hands over his head, tilted back his chair, and put his feet upon the table, and looked down into his sister's eyes, that were saying just then: "As if there was anything you didn't know, you splendid old fellow."

But aloud she said: "What did you mean by 'fitted to a T?' I'm sure I don't know; and I want to."

"Whew!" whistled the young man. "What do I mean, sure enough. Well, I mean suited exactly, fitted perfectly, I suppose."

"Yes," said the little girl, in a disappointed tone; "I know that; but I thought perhaps it came from something. I don't see the sense of it, I'm sure. 'Suited to a T.' It meant something else in the first place, I know."

"Well, I guess it did, pet," said Frank. "I'll look it up for you some time."

"He'll never think of it again," said Fanny to herself, "but I do wish I knew. 'Suited to a T.' It is so funny."

The next day Frank came in with a strange sort of ruler in his hand. It had a cross-piece at one end which gave it the shape of a capital T.

"See here, Fanny," said he, "I've been to the carpenter shop in your behalf. I hope I'll get you 'suited to a T' this time. I failed to satisfy you yesterday, you know."

So Frank placed the cross-piece against a perpendicular line which he had drawn, and laid the arm along a horizontal line that formed the right angle.

"You see," said he, "this rule is called a T square, and is often used to test the accuracy of lines and angles, as I have just tested mine. For a wonder it fits exactly. I never did hit it so well before. And so, you see, it is fitted or 'suited to a T.' And it is altogether probable that the proverbial phrase, 'suited to a T,' originated in this instrument."

"O Frank! how much you do know! I'm so glad I asked you! I can see the sense of it now," said little Fan, hugging him tight, to the great damage of his flowing necktie.

Frank looked as wise as an owl, but he didn't "let on" that he couldn't have told, to save him, till he asked somebody else. That's how I found out what is meant by "suited to a T."

Babies that Live in a Ball.

Is not that a droll place to live in? And the ball no bigger than the one you play with, and six or eight babies inside!

Of course they're not so big as your baby brother. In fact their mother is not half so big as a little brown mouse, and the babies themselves are tiny bits of mice.

This airy nursery of theirs is a curious affair, made of narrow grasses woven together into a beautiful, snug ball, and hung on the stems of two or three stout grasses or wheat straws. There it hangs all summer, rocked by every breeze, and when men come to cut down the wheat they find the cunning little ball and say they have found a harvest-mouse's nest. Funny as it seems, the mother don't go into the house herself; indeed it isn't big enough—it is just stuffed full of babies.

I don't suppose any place was ever so full of babies, unless it is the tin boxes packed full of little fishes (which we buy, and call sardines,) and they are dead before they are packed and don't mind being crowded.

The harvest-mouse's ball is made very open; and, although you and I couldn't find any door to it, Mamma Mouse manages to feed and take good care of the little ones inside, while good Mr. Mouse is quite ready to do his own marketing in the grass near by. How she does it not even the wise men have found out yet; for she is very shy, and does not like to be watched.

These curious little creatures are no common brown mice. Their coat is reddish brown on the back, and white on the under side. As I said before, when full-grown they're not half so large as a common mouse; so you can imagine how very little the babies in the ball must be. Often those nests, babies and all, are carried into the barn with the harvest, and then the babies grow and thrive as well as in the field, though of course the open-air nursery is far more pleasant.

Mr. and Mrs. Micromys Minutus—that is their name in the big books, you must know—have a very nice way of getting up to the nest, though they have neither stairs nor ladder. They just run up a straw or grass-stem as easily as you run up stairs. Besides the long, finger-like toes which they have on all of their fore-feet, they have a very useful tail, which is as good as a hand to hold on with. When they want to go down they curl this little tail around a straw and slide down before you can wink.—Olive Thorne, in Hearth and Home.

The Rhyming Game.

One person thinks of a word, and gives a word that will rhyme with it. The players, while endeavoring to guess the word, think of those that will rhyme with the one given, and, instead of speaking, define them. Then the first person must be quick in guessing what is meant by the description, and answers, whether it is right or not, giving the definition to the question. Here are two examples:

"I have a word that rhymes with bun."

"Is it what many people call sport or merriment?"

"No; it is not fun."

"Is it a troublesome creditor?"

"No; it is not a dun."

"Is it a kind of firearm?"

"No; it is not a gun."

"Is it a religious woman who lives in retirement?"

"No; it is not a nun."

"Is it the act of moving very swiftly, or what one does when in great haste?"

"No; it is not to run."

"Is it a quibble or play upon words?"

"No; it is not a pun."

"Is it a word that we often use to denote that a thing is finished?"

"No; it is not done."

"Is it a weight?"

"No; it is not a ton."

"Well, is it that luminary that shines by day, and brightens everything it shines upon?"

"Yes; it is the sun."

The one who guesses the word will then perhaps say:

"I've thought of a word that rhymes with sane."

"Is it a native of Denmark?"

"No; it is not a Dane."

"Is it used by an old gentleman?"

"No; it is not a cane."

The Lord's Day.

A PARABLE.

"O dear, I am so very tired of the Sunday!"

So said Willie, a playful little fellow, who was longing for the Sabbath to be over, that he might return to his play.

"Who wants to hear a story?" said a kind friend who was present.

"I, sir," "and I," "and I," said the children, as they gathered around him. Then he told them a parable.

Our Savior, when he was on earth, often taught the people by parables. The parable now told to the little boys was of a kind man who had some very nice apples hanging upon the tree. A poor man was passing by the house of the owner, and he stopped to admire this beautiful apple-tree. He counted the golden pippins. There were just seven of them. The rich owner could afford to give them away, and it gave him so much pleasure to make this poor man happy that he called him and said: "My friend, I will give you part of my fruit." So the man held out his hand and received six of the apples. The owner had only kept one for his own use.

Do you think the poor man was grateful for this kindness? No, indeed! He wanted the seven pippins all for himself; and at last he made up his mind that he would watch his time, and go back and steal the other apple.

"Did he do that?" said Willie, very sorry. "He ought to have been ashamed of himself! I hope he got well punished for stealing that apple."

"How many days are there in the week, Willie?" said his friend.

"Seven," said Willie, blushing deeply; for now he began to understand the parable, and he felt very uneasy. Conscience began to whisper to him: "And should not a boy be ashamed of himself who is unwilling on the seventh day to lay aside his play? Ought he not to be punished if he will not 'remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy?'"

Trifles.

"For the want of a hatchet of small value the wicket of a barn-yard leading to the fields was often left open. Every one who went through drew the door to; but, as there was nothing to fasten the door with, it was always left flapping, sometimes open, sometimes shut. So the cocks and hens and the chickens got out and were lost. One day a fine pig got out and ran off into the woods; and after the pig ran all the people about the place—the gardener and the cook and the dairymaid. The gardener first caught sight of the runaway, and, hastening after it, sprained his ankle, in consequence of which the poor man was not able to get out of the house again for a fortnight. The cook found, when she came back from pursuing the pig, that the linen she had left before the fire had fallen down and was burning; and the dairymaid having, in her haste, neglected to tie up the legs of one of the cows, the cow had kicked a colt, which was in the same stable, and broken its leg. The gardener's lost time was worth $20, to say nothing of the pain he suffered; the linen which was burned and the colt which was spoiled were worth as much more. Here was a loss of $40, as well as much trouble and vexation; for the want of a latch which would not have cost three cents."

"That story," says Mr. Short, "reminds me of the old proverb: 'For want of a nail the shoe was lost, for want of a shoe the horse was lost, for want of a horse the man was lost.'" Methodist.

A LETTER from an India missionary says: One hundred and twenty-six young men have just graduated and received the degree of A. B. at Calcutta University.

Farm, Garden and Household.

GETTING PLENTY OF FRESH EGGS. "Thirty years ago I was troubled just as my neighbor now is. I fed my hens plenty of corn and got but few eggs. I reasoned upon the matter, and happened to think that the constituent parts of milk and the white of eggs were much alike. Now it has long been known to milkmen that wheat middlings and bran are about the best of any food to make a cow give milk; why not, then, the best to make the hens lay eggs? I tried it, and since then have had no trouble. My mode of preparing the feed is to mix about five parts of bran with one of middlings. In the morning I wet up with water about four quarts of the mixture in a large tin pan, taking pains to have it rather dry, though all damp. This I set in a warm, sunny spot, south of their shed, and they walk up, take a few dips, don't seem to fancy it like corn, and start off on a short hunt for something better, but always coming round in a short time for a few more dips from the dish of bran. There is little time during the whole day but what one or more are standing by the pan and helping themselves. I am careful to mix for them just as much as they will consume during the day. At night, just before they repair to the roost, I usually throw them about a pint of shelled corn, well scattered, so that each one can get but a few kernels. If your hens don't incline to eat this feed at first, sprinkle a little Indian meal on it. I would like all who complain of not getting eggs to try my plan, and I think they will never be sorry."—Correspondent of Germantown Telegraph.

FOWLS IN ORCHARDS.—The public has yet to learn the full advantage of keeping poultry. Few seem to appreciate what they may do among trees in an orchard. Let any one try them in an orchard of a quarter of an acre, where they may be kept by a picket fence four or five feet high; put in say one hundred and twenty-five fowls, and observe the result. They will avoid annoyance in the garden, of which so many complain, while they work among the trees, doing just what is needed, and destroying everything that can injure the fruit-trees in the shape of bugs, worms or other insects, and lay a large number of eggs, which are a cash article, to say nothing of the chickens, which pay well for raising at the present time. I have tried it, and know it is so. I have about one hundred fowls, which have worked admirably among my trees, keeping the ground in good condition, keeping off the insects, and promoting the growth of the orchard. I am satisfied that we have yet to learn the full benefit which may be derived from the proper management of fowls; and it is quite possible that the method I have suggested may offer the best way of getting our apple-orchards in good bearing condition.—Farmers' Home Journal.

THREE BEST ROSES.—Fifteen of the most distinguished rose-growers in England having been asked to name thirty-six roses, and out of the thirty-six to name twelve which they considered the best twelve, they answered that, of all the roses which were named, only three were on the record named by all as worthy to be placed on the first twelve. These three roses ought to be universally known, as every one who cultivates flowers wants the best roses as a matter of course. These three are: 1. Maréchal Niel; 2. Baroness Rothschild; 3. Marie B[illegible]. The selection of roses thus made is worthy of being particularly mentioned, as the rose-growers who made the lists are men who have a high standard of excellence, and are not likely to be deceived about the qualities of a plant which they have made a study, and have had opportunities for observing that are unequaled at the rose shows of England and of France.—Cottage Gardener, England.

FREEZING APPLES.—A Canada paper says some of the apple-raisers on the hills of western Massachusetts are about to test a new process for the preservation of that fruit. The experiment will consist in freezing the apples solid as soon as the temperature will insure that result, and then packing them in dry sawdust, or some other non-conductor of heat or cold, free from moisture, as security against untimely thawing before they are needed for use. The parties feel confident that, by some peculiar process not yet known to the public, they can extract the frost from the apples, whenever demanded for use, without injuring the fruit, leaving it, in fact, as fresh and sound as when gathered from the trees. Apples will always retain the appearance of soundness if the frost is very gradually withdrawn from them, but their flavor is injured, becoming more insipid and flat.

SALT AND THE AGUE.—The following appears in a leading editorial in the Cleveland Herald: "We wish to give a simple remedy for fever and ague, and wish to emphasize it by saying that it has to our knowledge proved very efficacious. It is simply common salt. A teaspoonful taken in water, and a teaspoonful deposited inside each stocking, next the foot, just as the chill is coming on. That's all there is of it; but knowing that it has been very efficacious in 'breaking' a chill and perfecting a cure, we put it in our editorial columns, where no humbug remedy shall ever find a place if we know it."

MR. RILEY M. HOSKINSON, of Burlingame, Kansas, has on his prairie farm several thousand trees, planted by him and his family within the last five years, among which are oak, walnut, soft maple, elm, whiteash, sycamore, catalpa, white and yellow willow, mulberry and cottonwood. Many of his cottonwoods are now about thirty feet high and six inches in diameter.

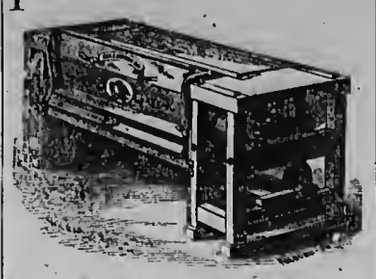
THE DUBOIS FLANGE COTTON GIN.

By the Flange the Cotton is kept in contact with the teeth on each side, until the fiber is taken from the seed, without allowing them to be taken up by the return motion of the roll, as in other Gins.



The Flange prevents hulls, stems, sticks and hard substances from being cut, consequently making a better sample out of roughly-picked cotton than other Gins.

We have sold more from this point than any agency of any other Gin for the crop of 1872-73; consequently we can furnish more and better references, and they are warranted to come up to all that is said of them.

We keep constantly on hand all sizes, from 40 to 80-SAW STANDS, left or right. Price, $5 per Saw.

IMPROVED

EAGLE COTTON GINS.

The great popularity of the EAGLE COTTON GINS is established from the well-known fact that they are the most reliable, strongest and best built Cotton Gins ever made. The Eagle Cotton Gin runs lighter than any other gin, thus having a great advantage for planters who wish to run by horse power. All the numerous planters who use the Eagle Cotton Gin will certify to the fact that when their cotton is sent to market it always brings the highest market price, as no other gin can produce a finer or a better sample of cotton than the Eagle Cotton Gins. Over seventeen thousand of the Eagle Cotton Gins have been made and sold. During a period of twenty years the undersigned has had the agency of the Eagle Cotton Gin in New Orleans. He has never had a gin returned or rejected out of the immense number sold. The saw cylinders of all the Eagle Cotton Gins are twelve inches in diameter, which is two inches larger than most other kinds of gins, thus giving our forty-saw gin more teeth, and they are more than equal to the fifty-saw gins of other makers, who use only a ten-inch cylinder, and the same great advantage of the twelve-inch cylinder in larger-sized gins can be easily estimated. Planters who wish a reliable cotton gin, with an established reputation, can purchase an Eagle Cotton Gin with a certainty that they are not making an untried experiment, but will obtain a cotton gin which is indorsed by the oldest and largest planters in the country as the best in use. A large stock of the Eagle Cotton Gins are always kept on sale in New Orleans, ready for immediate shipment. Planters should be particular to state if they want right or left-hand motion gins.

New Orleans Markets.

From the New Orleans Price Current.

The weather continued unsettled and showery until Tuesday, when it was clear and warm.

The river is 2 feet 3 inches below high-water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the thirtieth ultimo:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Louisiana and Mississippi | bales... | 4,811 |
| Arkansas | | 344 |
| Mobile | | 131 |
| Texas | | |
| Total | | 6,602 |

On Saturday the market opened with a moderate inquiry, and continued quiet throughout the day, only seven brokers participating in the business. The movement was restricted by scant supplies of the kinds wanted, as well as by the slack demand. Clean, even-running lots of all grades commanded full prices, but the general run of the offerings and especially the lower grades were irregular and in some cases sold at easier prices. Upon the whole, however, nothing transpired to indicate any quotable variation. Not including 100 bales omitted on the day previous, the sales were confined to 1,450 bales. On Monday buyers came forward with more spirit, and took 3,400 bales at full prices for the better qualities, while mixed lots and the lower grades were irregular, and, if anything, ruled more in favor of buyers; factors in many cases accepting offers which they had refused on Saturday. Nothing transpired, however, to require any change in quotations. On Tuesday the market presented no material change. The demand was moderate, and, with scant supplies of clean and even-running lots, the movement at no time exhibited much activity and the sales did not exceed 2,000 bales. The neglected descriptions continued to rule in favor of buyers, but without any quotable falling off, while those the most in demand, and especially the better qualities, exhibited, if anything, increased firmness.

The above, not including 100 bales omitted on Friday, makes an aggregate for the past three days of 6,850 bales, against 8,500 for the corresponding time last week and 5,650 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 1,183,311 bales, against 965,388 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 756,543 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 236,897 to Great Britain, of 64,134 to France, and of 167,814 to other foreign ports. PUBLISHED BY ROBT. J. HARP, FOR THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH SOUTH.

VOL. 19. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, JUNE 12, 1873. NO. 24.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, June 4.—It is said by the highest military authorities that the Modocs could not surrender as prisoners of war, in the sense known to nations where war is declared in accordance with constituted forms. Not having been so served, they are not entitled to consideration as prisoners of war.

The order issued to the commanding general, directly after the assassination of General Canby and Dr. Thomas, was not to exterminate the Modocs, but it was said their conduct had been such that their extermination would be justifiable, thus leaving the matter to the discretion of General Davis. Therefore, if he had ordered the killing of these Indians, he would not have been censured by the authorities. As to their final disposition, no one questions that they will be delivered to the government of Oregon for trial.

A private dispatch from Montgomery, Alabama, says that Governor Lewis, Republican, has appointed Robert C. Breckell, Democrat, chief justice of the Supreme Court of that State, vice Peck, resigned.

MEMPHIS, June 4.—For the past ten days a disease at first pronounced by the physicians cholera morbus, or malarial fever, has prevailed here, but no alarm was felt until yesterday, when the physicians generally agreed that it was cholera, some classing it sporadic and others Asiatic.

Thus far its ravages have been chiefly confined to negroes and the laboring classes, and, in the absence of an organized board of health, it is difficult to estimate the number who have died. The doctors say the disease, if promptly attended to, yields readily to treatment. Among the latest victims was George Moore, of the Memphis and Louisville Transfer Company, who died last night.

During the war he was provost marshal of this city under the Federals, and was highly esteemed.

Reports from the towns below here on the river say the disease prevails there also. There is but little excitement in regard to it.

CINCINNATI, June 4.—At the ministerial conference of the New Jerusalem Church, to-day, two papers were read by the Rev. W. H. Hinckley, of New Orleans, the first being upon the most efficient and practical method of propagating the doctrines of the new church. The second was upon the conduct of the ministers of the new church toward those of other denominations.

Papers were also read by Rev. George Field, of Toronto, Canada, upon the distinction between the symbols of the Jewish and Christian churches.

ST. PAUL, June 4.—The following dispatch has been received here:

Bismarck, Dakota, June 4.—The track of the Northern Pacific railroad reached the Missouri river at this place to-day, and the entire division of four hundred and fifty miles, from Duluth to Bismarck, is open to business. The people are celebrating the event. Connection is made here with the navigation of the upper and lower Missouri.

A line of steamers is established between this point and Fort Benton, in western Montana, and shipments of both government and private freight are being made by this new route to the Northwest.

The railroad surveying expedition, with a military escort under command of General Stanley, will start west on the sixteenth instant, with the intention of making a definite location of the line of road from the crossing of Yellowstone, and along that river to central Montana, this being the only portion of route not yet determined.

NEW YORK, June 5.—The steamer Frolic was hailed off Sandy Hook, to-day, with the rescued crew of the Polaris. The Frolic was ordered direct to Washington.

The Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons to-day had under consideration the proposed new constitution. Among the amendments adopted was one providing that the warrant of a lodge can be surrendered only when there cannot be found among its members seven qualified brethren desirous of retaining the same. An unaffiliated Mason shall not be allowed to visit any lodge, or join any Masonic procession, or receive Masonic relief or burial. No member shall be permitted to sever his connection from the lodge of which he is a member until he shall present a ticket from some warranted lodge that he has petitioned for membership therein.

WASHINGTON, June 6.—The Polaris people rescued by the Frolic are virtually prisoners until Secretary Robeson finds out all about it. Journalists are excluded.

KEY WEST, June 7.—Intelligence of the safety of the steamship George Cromwell, from New York to New Orleans, whose non-arrival at the latter port has caused so much anxiety, reached here to-day. Her engines broke down May 21; she made for Abaco, in the Bahamas, where she now lies in safe anchorage awaiting assistance from New York. All on board are well.

NASHVILLE, June 7.—The excitement about the presence of cholera here is increasing. Several deaths have been reported on the authority of the best physicians; but the mortality to-day shows no increase, and physicians report some abatement. The deaths by cholera, which some pronounce sporadic and others Asiatic, have not on any one day during the week exceeded seven.

NASHVILLE, June 8.—The disease here, which some call cholera, is subsiding, fewer cases reported, and these are of a milder type.

CINCINNATI, June 8.—A fire doing $150,000 damage occurred in this city to-day, burning fourteen hundred barrels of coal oil, twenty-five freight cars, mostly loaded, a lumber yard with three million feet chiefly of hard lumber, and seventeen dwellings, most of them small frame structures.

NEW YORK, June 10.—Stokes was greatly delighted upon receiving the information that a new trial had been granted him, and there was a good deal of rejoicing among those interested at the favorable decision of the appellate court. His counsel say: Upon the next trial we will prove to the satisfaction of the New York public that there has been gross misapprehension of the case from the day of the tragedy, and we will be able to establish his innocence by evidence of an overwhelming character.

MEMPHIS, June 10.—The cholera is undoubtedly increasing. The interments to-day were eighteen, against eleven yesterday, while the undertakers had received, at six o'clock, orders for fourteen more to-morrow.

Hon. Jacob Thompson, Secretary of the Interior under Buchanan, is dangerously ill with cholera.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 10.—General Schofield telegraphs General Davis, at Boyle's Camp, to appoint a commission on the spot for the trial of the Modocs.

FOREIGN.

CITY OF MEXICO, June 1.—Mr. Foster, the new American minister, arrived here on the twenty-seventh ultimo.

The foreign priests who were held in custody have been expelled from the country, the government styling them as pernicious foreigners. The American minister interfered in behalf of two naturalized Irishmen, but President Lerdo de Tejada refused to allow them to remain.

The arrest of these priests is considered a clear indication of the unwillingness of the President to protect the church party. He has hitherto been considered as having a leaning in favor of the priests. Three sick foreign priests were allowed to remain temporarily upon giving bail to leave the country immediately upon their recovery.

The nuns found an asylum in private houses. Nearly all of them are very old.

LONDON, June 5.—It is reported that Eugenie has been in Paris two days.

The Pall Mall Gazette, in its issue of this afternoon, published an appeal of the ex-Empress Eugenie to the President of France in favor of her son.

ROME, June 5.—The death of Urbano Ratazzi took place at Frosinone, forty-eight miles from this city.

Signor Lausa, president of the council and minister of the interior, was at his bedside when he breathed his last. The death of this eminent statesman has produced a profound sensation.

LISBON, June 5.—The steamship Cordillera, from Rio Janeiro, May 17, arrived here this evening. The yellow fever had entirely disappeared from Rio Janeiro and the cities on the Rio de la Plata. The number of cases in Bahia was also daily growing less.

The insurrection in the province of Entre Rios, Argentine Republic, continued, notwithstanding the vigorous efforts of the government to crush it.

LONDON, June 6.—Dispatches from Melbourne report that a panic prevails in New Zealand over the frequent and terrible assassinations by the mountaineers. The settlers are organizing for defense, and another Maori war is probable.

MADRID, June 8.—The Constituent Cortes reassembled at ten o'clock this morning, and passed a resolution definitively proclaiming the Federal republic by a vote of 210 yeas against 2 nays. The motion to make the day a national holiday was rejected.

LONDON, June 9.—Alexandria Palace, in north London, is burning. Additional fire brigades were called, but it is feared they will not arrive in time to save it from entire destruction.

Later.—Alexandria Palace is entirely destroyed. Seven lives lost.

A FAMISHING TRAVELER who had run down a salamander made a fire and laid him alive upon the hot coals to cook. Wearied with the pursuit which had preceded his capture, the animal at once composed himself and fell into a refreshing sleep. At the end of half an hour the man stirred him with a fagot, remarking: "I say! wake up and begin toasting, will you? How long do you mean to keep dinner waiting, eh?" "Oh, I beg you will not wait for me," was the yawning reply. "If you are going to stand upon ceremony, everything will get cold. Besides, I have dined. I wish, by the way, you would put on some more fuel; I think we shall have snow." "Yes," said the man, "the weather is like yourself—raw and exasperatingly cool. Perhaps this will warm you." And he rolled a ponderous pine log atop of that provoking reptile, who flattened out and "handed in his checks."

Hurry-Upers.

I have just been reading Olive Thorne's trials with a Put-offer, and I cannot resist putting in a word on the other side of the question, and telling something of life with a Hurry-uper.

If the "habit of putting off is frightfully common," the other extreme is frightfully dangerous. For while a slow, easy person usually enjoys a long life, one of those go-ahead drivers will hurry himself into the grave and drive his friends there before him. For the last eight years I have been daily, yes, hourly, prompted by such precepts as "Take time by the forelock," "Procrastination is the thief of time," "Delays are dangerous," "Time is money," etc., by a husband who is a model in every respect, except that he is always in a hurry. Some of you may sigh with envy, perhaps, at the thought of a husband with only one fault; but if there is anything else so wearing to both body and soul as being constantly hurried, I do not know what it is.

"Hurry up, hurry up, Em., it's almost seven o'clock, time breakfast was ready," is often the first greeting I have in the morning. But long ago I learned that "most seven o'clock" means from five to ten minutes after six, and as David always keeps our clock a half hour ahead of the right time, why, I gain still another half hour, and reckon that the real time is only half-past five. I do protest against the idea of gaining time by having the clock too fast. When our clock is ahead of time I am always thinking, Well, the clock is too fast, I need not hurry so; and I go a little slower, and then am too late; when, if the clock had been right, I would have planned accordingly.

Now I hope no one will think I am one of the Put-offers, for I am not. I never am late to church, and in my school days I used to pride myself on my punctuality—would go term after term without getting a single tardy mark—never used to miss a train of cars, though I never had to sit an hour on the hard seats in the depot waiting for a train, as I have sometimes done since David the hasty became my guide.

Shall I ever forget the last time that we went to visit grandma? I am certain the worry and hurry and excitement of that one trip must have shortened the span of my earthly career by some hours at least.

I was in a very happy frame of mind that morning, thinking how pleased grandma would be to see us, and how she would admire baby Bennie (her only grandchild,) and whether she would agree with me in thinking it best not to cut his gums to let the little teeth through, etc. With a great many such things running through my mind, I was very leisurely getting Bennie ready for his bath, stopping to admire his dimpled shoulders, and give him a hug and kiss, when I heard the front door open and shut hastily. The next moment David called up the stairs: "Emma, how near are you ready? It is time we were off."

Now I knew better. I knew the train did not leave for a good hour at least, but somehow, when David gets in one of his hurrying fits, it is always contagious, and in a few minutes I was flying around the house at a rate that was a caution to all slow folks.

Bennie's bath, of course, must be omitted. I would only have time to wipe off his face and hands a little, which, of course, he resisted with all his force of fist and foot. A regular bath in his bath-tub he always enjoys, but a wash-rag! he'll fight it to his last breath. Under the circumstances I did not wait to put much of a polish on the chubby cheeks, but hurried his clothes on, and to keep him out of mischief seated him in the middle of my nice clean bed. He must have something to amuse himself, anything to keep him still, I thought, as I crowded the cover tight in the pomade jar, and handed it to him, greatly to his delight, for it was a new plaything.

Bennie disposed of, I hurried to get myself ready. I had just taken down my hair when another call came from below. "Come, Em., hurry up." Now Nature has given me a switch only a yard and a quarter long, and thick proportionately—not like a chignon that can be pinned on at a moment's notice, but with shaking fingers (for the hurry was already beginning to tell on my nerves) I twisted it up in about two minutes, and was hurrying on my clothes when again from the lower regions came a call. "Why, wife, what are you about? You surely will be left; do hurry!" Oh, wasn't that exasperating! When every nerve and muscle I possessed were strained to their utmost in my efforts to move fast, to be told to "hurry." My emotions were indescribable, but certainly my strongest desire was to get my fingers around that man's throat, and, if possible, choke off, for five minutes at least, that everlasting "hurry up."

A noise from Bennie attracted my attention, and I turned to him to find the little mischief had taken the cover off the pomade jar, and with his little fingers had taken out dabs of pomade and spread them all over the counterpane, pillows and everything else within his reach. Never mind, we must not wait now to fix things, for just then came another call. "Do hurry, Em.; are you never coming?" and I hurried down stairs, wiping Bennie's fingers as I went, and we hurried into the carriage; and the horse hurried to the depot at a rate that sent people flying across the street crossings, for David always will keep a horse that goes like the wind; he can't wait for a slow horse.

When we reached the depot I trembled, so that Bennie's heavy weight fairly dragged me down, but we were there in time, surely, for no train came for forty-five minutes. Weary minutes they were to me, for I was ashamed of my dirty baby, and tears of vexation would come into my eyes when I thought of the room I left in such disorder, when there was plenty of time to make it neat and tidy.

And yet, my dear, old, kind David, I am already conscience-smitten to think I have been complaining at his having even one fault.—Elinor Brooks, in Christian Union.

The President's Proclamation.

The proclamation of the President in regard to the difficulties in Louisiana, containing seven recitals in its preamble, commands "certain turbulent and disorderly persons" in that State, alleged to "have combined together with force and arms to resist the laws and constituted authorities of said State," "to disperse and retire peaceably to their respective abodes within twenty days from" the date thereof. This supposes an armed insurrection in the State against the authority of William P. Kellogg, recognized by the President as its lawful executive, and that, too, so strong as to demand the interposition of the Federal power for its suppression. If no such fact existed at the date of the proclamation, then we do not see how it can apply to the actual condition of things in Louisiana. It is true that there have been local disturbances of the public peace in two instances, which have already subsided; yet these are very far from constituting what the law terms an insurrection. And, so far as the public are informed, there were no turbulent and disorderly persons "combined together with force and arms to resist the laws and constituted authorities of the State," who can, according to the President's command, "disperse and retire peaceably to their respective abodes." There is not and there has not been at any time an organized and armed rebellion against the de facto government of Kellogg. The state of things in Louisiana may be perilous; yet the constitution and laws of the United States contemplate an actual insurrection, and not simply one that may be, as the condition precedent to the interposition of Federal force. It is absurd to command insurgents to disperse and retire peaceably to their homes when there are no such insurgents "combined together with force and arms" and actually engaged in resisting the laws and authorities of the State.

The practical import of the proclamation is that of a technical, formal and official notice given beforehand that the President intends, if in his judgment it shall be necessary, to employ Federal troops for the purpose of sustaining Kellogg as the executive of Louisiana and putting down all insurrectionary resistance to his authority. He recognizes him as the lawful Governor of the State and means that his authority shall be maintained. He means that the public peace shall be preserved by submission to what more than half the people regard as an outrageous usurpation, and what, moreover, the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections declared to be such upon the most ample array of evidence. He tells the people that, if Kellogg cannot sustain his own authority by State power, he will sustain it by the use of Federal troops. This is a foregone conclusion. So far and so long as the question of Kellogg's authority rests with him there can be no resistance to it which he will not promptly put down.

Such being the President's position, whether right or wrong, nothing is clearer than that the people of Louisiana must submit to the de facto government of Kellogg. Forcible resistance by any portion of the people would not only put them in the wrong, but result in their certain defeat. While we believe that the Kellogg government is a monstrous usurpation of power, and that the President is entirely incorrect in the view which he takes of its legitimacy, we nevertheless advise every person in Louisiana to submit to it. It is the only government which the State can now have, and it is certainly better than none. There is practical sense in the motto that "what can't be cured must be endured."

The action of the President is, however, not the final solution of the question, unless Congress chooses to make it so. When it meets, next December, the whole subject will come before it; and it will necessarily be compelled to decide whether the present government of Louisiana, recognized and sustained by the President, is a lawful one. This point ought to have been settled by the last Congress. Its attention was called to it by the President, while the whole merits of the question were fully presented in the voluminous report of the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections, with the recommendation that Congress should take measures to provide for a new election. It was a most shameful omission on the part of Congress that it did not at once meet the issue and correct the wrong in the manner recommended. The duty that was then dodged still remains to be performed; and when the next Congress assembles it will find itself faced by the same duty, not at all changed in its character or modified by the President's action.

Louisiana cannot be represented in either house of Congress without a lawful State government, and it is the business of Congress to decide whether it has such a government, and, if in its judgment it has not, then to provide for a new election. The President will, of course, keep the peace until Congress meets, and then we hope to see an end put to this Kellogg-McEnery muddle by a special election under national authority. Both the facts and the law of the case point to this course as the only proper remedy to secure a final settlement of the question. The spectacle of a State government neither elected nor legally declared to be elected, yet sustained by Federal power, is possible only by an enormous blunder. Congress ought not to allow such a blunder to become a precedent.—New York Independent.

Sir Samuel Baker's Expedition.

A correspondent writes from Alexandria (on April 26) as follows:

That England should feel great interest in the probable fate of Sir Samuel Baker's expedition is most natural. The expedition, consisting in all of three thousand men, well equipped, was at first most successful. Its commander pushed on into the heart of Africa with only a few trifling encounters with badly-armed savages, who might harass, but could not offer any serious opposition to his advance. Disease and desertion, however, soon thinned his ranks, and when he reached Darfur he had only with him one hundred and sixty-eight men of his original forces. In his former travels in Central Africa Sir Samuel Baker had met with much kindness from the Sultan of this place, but he found now that the old man was dead, and that the new sovereign was like the Pharaoh who knew not Joseph. Sir Samuel Baker asked for provisions and porters. "Only in exchange for arms and ammunition," was the reply. Baker refused, and joined some of the revolted tribes whom the Sultan was endeavoring to reduce to submission. There was a battle, disastrous to the allies of the Englishman, who with great difficulty succeeded in gaining the town of Gondokoro with only thirty-two men. Here, however, he was in comparative safety; his force was augmented by the rear guard and by some convalescents whom he had left behind, and some defensive works were constructed, which sufficed to check the assaults of the hostile Africans. But there was no great supply of provisions and ammunition — a siege. Still Sir Samuel Baker's agent telegraphed about October, 1872, that the position could be held for six months; at the same time he earnestly begged that supplies should be dispatched without delay.

After this communication everything connected with the fate of Sir Samuel Baker and his companions is mere surmise based upon reports circulating in the Soudan. At one time certainly it was greatly feared that all the survivors of the expedition were massacred in their attempts to cut their way to Egyptian territory from Gondokoro, which Sir Samuel Baker had left in despair at the non-arrival of succor. Why something was not done is a question much debated. There were and are twelve battalions of regular troops in the beleaguered garrison; but they do not appear to have moved. But it is only just to the Khedive to state that immediately upon the receipt of Sir Samuel Baker's last dispatch an expedition was to be sent out with supplies of all sorts, by way of Zanzibar, to Gondokoro. Three American officers of known energy and intelligence were selected for the command, and these were to be accompanied by a contingent of native commissioned and non-commissioned officers, who were to organize a land transport service, with Mombas as a place of supplies. Colonel Purdy and Lieutenant Colonels Long and Mason were ready in October last; they were ordered to hold themselves in readiness to start at a day's notice. Provisions, clothing, sporting guns and ammunition, and costly presents for the native chiefs, were purchased and stored, and the members of the expedition are still here, and are likely to remain, as the season is so far advanced that a journey south would be death to the foreign officers. Every one wonders at the delay, yet not one voice blames either the Khedive or his ministers.

To whomsoever the blame may fall at last, it certainly seems strange that when the lives of Sir Samuel Baker and his companions depended upon the dispatch with which relief should be afforded them, so much time was lost in sending to Europe for instructions and chronometers and all the appliances of a strictly scientific voyage of discovery. With the innumerable matters of importance coming under the Viceroy's immediate attention, it is by no means strange that he should forget whether he had or had not given the final orders for the departure of the expedition which was to revictual Gondokoro nearly seven months ago, meanwhile the Americans chafe at the delay and at the increase to their expense by an enforced life at the New Hotel. Sir Samuel and Lady Baker, if not dead, are enduring all the agonies of suspense, and the chief of staff is preparing Prince Hassan Pasha for the future position of minister of war and commander-in-chief, by a daily course of military, of which the Campaigns of Hannibal and the Parisian au Caire are the text-books.—Boston Globe.

From the Work.

WOODVILLE DISTRICT CONFERENCE.—Last week we gave an account of the conference, furnished by Bro. Brown. Since we have received a communication from the secretary, G. H. Wiley. From his report we take the following items:

"The claims of Centenary College were briefly but ably set forth by its excellent president, Rev. C. G. Andrews, and the interest of the brethren enlisted in its support. The following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this conference that our regular Wesleyan Catechism should be used in all our Sunday schools, and that no other publication should be allowed to supersede said book.

Resolved, That we are thankful to Providence for the preservation of the life and health of Bishop Kavanaugh, so that he has been able to visit our district, so remote from his home, and to inspirit us by his presence and ministry.

The following-named brethren were elected lay delegates to the next Annual Conference: John McVea, Josiah Nettles, J. E. Jagers, L. K. Barber. Alternates—W. G. Longmeyer, Isaac Pipes, B. W. Sewall, G. H. Wiley.

The thanks of the conference were voted to the citizens of Woodville for their generous hospitality during its session.

MADAM, allow me to prescribe for you. I have had a long experience in the management of delicate women, and believe I can give you some important advice. For the present I prescribe only for your feet.

1. Procure a quantity of woolen stockings—not such as you buy at the stores under the name of lambs' wool, that you can read a newspaper through, but the kind that your Aunt Jerusha, in the country, knits for you, thick as a board, that will keep your feet dry and warm in spite of wind and weather.

2. If you want to be really thorough, change them every morning, hanging the fresh ones by the fire during the night.

3. Procure thick calf-skin boots, double uppers and triple soles, and wear them from the first of October till the first of May. Make frequent applications of some good oil-blacking.

4. Avoid rubbers altogether, except a pair of large rubber boots, which may be worn for a little time through snow-drifts or a flood of water.

5. Hold the bottoms of your feet in cold water half an inch deep, just before going to bed, two or three minutes, and then rub them hard with rough towels and your naked hands.

Now, madam, go out freely in all weathers, and, believe me, not only will your feet enjoy a good circulation, but as a consequence of the good circulation in the lower extremities your head will be relieved of all its fullness, and your heart of its palpitations. Your complexion will be greatly improved, and your health better in every respect.—Dio Lewis, in To-day.

PÈRE HYACINTHE presented to the large congregation in Geneva, recently assembled to hear him, three plans for building up a Reformed Catholic Church. The first, on a basis of simple Deism, he rejected, because Deism is a philosophy and not a religion, its abstract God not being the sympathetic God of the gospel. The second plan was to accept Protestantism as a solution of the problem. He acknowledged Protestantism to be a religion and not simply a philosophy; but it was not sufficiently a church for him; symbols were necessary. He wanted the efficacious sacraments of the church, which embraced the whole life of man from baptism to extreme unction. He wanted an historic hierarchy and a visible center of unity, such as was now at Rome, but which might at some future time be elsewhere. The third plan, therefore, was to reform the church without separating from it. To separate from the church at once would be to repeat the harm which the Protestant Reformation inflicted upon Catholics by withdrawing from them all the elements of liberty and deepening the tendency to narrow centralization.

RETURN OF DR. PUNSHON TO ENGLAND.—Rev. Dr. Punshon, president of the Canada Wesleyan Conference, sailed for England on the twenty-fourth ultimo. He is announced to preach in London, on behalf of the new Westminster chapel, on the tenth of June. The presentation of the "testimonial," gotten up by his numerous Canadian friends, took place at a farewell meeting held in the lecture-room of the Metropolitan Wesleyan church, Toronto, on Monday evening, May 19. Dr. Punshon's administration in Canada seems to have been one of remarkable usefulness and success from the beginning, and he leaves his brethren of the Dominion enjoying their fullest confidence. His great ability, manifested everywhere, in the pulpit, on the platform, and in the executive chair, has won for him the admiration of the whole people without respect of denomination.

PRAYER AND POTATOES.

"If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful for the body, what doth it profit?"—James ii, 15, 16.

An old lady sat in her old arm-chair,
With wrinkled visage and dishevelled hair,
And hunger-worn features;
For days and for weeks her only fare,
As she sat there in her old arm-chair,
Had been potatoes.

But now they were gone—of bad or good
Not one was left for the old lady's food,
Of those potatoes;
And she sighed and said: "What shall I do?
Where shall I send and to whom shall I go
For more potatoes?"

And she thought of the deacon over the way—
The deacon so ready to worship and pray,
Whose cellar was full of potatoes.
And she said: "I will send for the deacon to come;
He'll not mind much to give me some
Of such a store of potatoes."

And the deacon came over as fast as he could,
Thinking to do the old lady some good,
But never, for once, of potatoes;
He asked her at once what was her chief want,
And she, poor soul, expecting a grant,
Immediately answered: "Potatoes."

But the deacon's religion didn't lie that way;
He was more accustomed to preach and to pray
Than to give of his hoarded potatoes;
So, not hearing, of course, what the old lady said,
He rose to pray, with uncovered head,
But she only thought of potatoes.

He prayed for patience and wisdom and grace;
But when he prayed, "Lord, give her peace,"
She audibly sighed, "Give potatoes;"
And at the end of each prayer which he said,
He heard, or thought that he heard, in its stead
That same request for potatoes.

The deacon was troubled—knew not what to do;
'Twas very embarrassing to leave her so
About "those carnal potatoes,"
So, ending his prayer, he started for home;
But as the door closed he heard a deep groan:
"O give to the hungry potatoes!"

And that groan followed him all the way home—
In the midst of the night it haunted his room:
"O give to the hungry potatoes!"
He could bear it no longer—arose and dressed—
From his well-filled cellar taking in haste
A bag of his best potatoes.

Again he went to the widow's lone hut;
Her sleepless eyes she had not yet shut;
But there she sat, in that old arm-chair,
With the same wan features, the same sad air,
And, entering in, he poured on the floor
A bushel or more, from his goodly store,
Of choice potatoes.

The widow's heart leaped up for joy,
Her face was haggard and wan no more.
"Now," said the deacon, "shall we pray?"
"Yes," said the widow, "now you may;"
And he kneeled him down on the sanded floor,
Where he had poured his goodly store,
And such a prayer the deacon prayed
As never before his lips essayed;
No longer embarrassed, but free and full,
He poured out the voice of a liberal soul,
And the widow responded aloud: "Amen!"
But said no more of potatoes.

And would you, who hear this simple tale,
Pray for the poor, and, praying, prevail?
Then prelude your prayers with alms and good deeds;
Search out the poor, their wants and their needs;
Pray for peace and grace and spiritual food,
For wisdom and guidance, for all these are good;
But don't forget the potatoes.

Regeneration and Salvation of Infants.

MR. EDITOR: I saw in a recent number of your paper a communication concerning the regeneration and salvation of infants. Reference was made to an article by W., the sentiments of whom were not only acquiesced in, but heartily approved.

The ground taken by both gentlemen we believe to be erroneous. The Scriptures nowhere reveal that all infants are born into the world regenerated. And so to teach opens the door to most dangerous and fatal errors.

In order to clear the way for a brief examination of the subject let us say:

1. This is an entirely new doctrine. None of the great students of the Bible and instructors of the church, in things pertaining to eternal life, have, as far as we know, made this great discovery. And though ordinarily new things are not necessarily suspicious, a new doctrine purporting to be discovered in the Bible should be received with the greatest caution, and not believed except in view of most incontrovertible evidence. "Be not carried away by every wind of doctrine." If Wesley, Whitby, Watson and Adam Clarke, by the most diligent and patient study of the word, never heard of nor taught that all infants come into the world regenerated, the presumption against it is very strong indeed.

2. Methodist ministers have heretofore been conspicuous for urging upon all, both young and old, that they must be born again; and the immense power which has always attended such preaching seems to have obtained the divine sanction. But if this doctrine be true they have been laboring under a most egregious error, and should no longer frighten men, women and children with the tremendous thought that they "must be born again."

3. If all children have been regenerated, they have a very faint recollection of it. Dr. Edward Beecher, in his Conflict of Ages, sprang the absurd idea that we had an existence anterior to our birth, and in that pristine and happy sphere we fell, and so became "totally depraved." The great difficulty of establishing this theory was that memory fails to carry us back to a period so remote. So the same difficulty presses with equal force upon the theory now under discussion. Methodist preachers have always insisted upon the fact that they do know or ought to know the day, if not the hour, of this great transaction. But this doctrine not only does away with the necessity of this knowledge, but it actually impeaches the veracity and sincerity of those who claim to know the very day and hour of their new birth.

4. Regeneration in young or old is always attended by appropriate fruits. A good tree bringeth forth good fruit, but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit. This is just as true of the infant as of the old. If there be any difference, it is largely in favor of the infant, because it is comparatively uncorrupted by actual transgression.

Now what are the facts of the case? Do children always or ever exhibit the meekness, sweetness, purity, amiability, sincerity, faith, humility, patience and love of Christ? There may be a few very notable exceptions; but the universal law is an exhibition of the very opposite of these virtues and graces. I have been a teacher of children for ten or fifteen years, and have had them therefore with me almost day and night, and my experience is that they are depraved—they are cruel, unjust, selfish, full of hate, revengeful, disobedient, unthankful, lying, thievish, blasphemous, proud, deceitful, treacherous, full of envy, not lovers of God, implacable and unmerciful. I do not affirm that this hideous list is found catalogued in every child's heart, but several or more are always found. Neither are these sins seen all at once, but each new year develops some new sin. The inevitable conclusion is that if children bring forth such fruit they must be corrupt, and so born; for Christ declares that a "corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit."

Let us now pass to an examination of those passages of Scripture quoted to prove this doctrine. Reference is made to Romans v, 17, 18: "For if by one man's offense death reigned by one, much more they which receive abundance of grace and the gift of righteousness shall reign in life by one, Jesus Christ." The eighteenth verse is only a new statement of the same thought, ending with: "The free gift came upon all men unto justification of life."

It seems to me to require extraordinary powers of mental vision to discover the regeneration of all infants in these words. Paul in this chapter is stating the influence of Adam's "one offense"—that is, one sin—and fall upon the human family in contrast with the abundant provision of redemption and righteousness secured to this same fallen and sinful race by the one man Christ Jesus. By one man's sin and fall we all fell and became corrupt, infants and all; but by the abundance of grace and the merits and righteousness of Jesus all true believers in him are made to "reign in life." And when it is said, in the eighteenth verse, that free pardon came upon "all men unto justification of life," we are to understand the pardon to be granted only to those who repent and believe. Elect infants dying in infancy are pardoned and saved, but this question is not touched upon here, the apostle alluding to adult believers. The proof of this is from the fact that he declares such as receive this abundant grace "reign in life"—that is, reign in eternal life.

This is the idea Paul always attaches to such expressions as "reign in life" and "justification unto life." And lest he might be misinterpreted here he recurs to the same thought in the twenty-first verse, adding: "So might grace reign unto eternal life by Jesus Christ." Again, unless we so limit the phrase "all men," we make Paul teach that justification is universal to the whole race, and not confined to believers; and this is the ground the Universalists take—a gross and shameless perversion of the teaching of Paul.

The other passage relied upon is from Matthew, where Christ takes a child in his arms and pronounces a malediction upon those who offend one of these little ones "that believe in me." The act of believing is here urged as evidence of the child's regeneration. Three interpretations may be put upon these words:

1. That such little believers arrive at the age of responsibility, and the obligations of faith are laid upon them and accepted.

2. That such believers are only the baptized children of the church who have been carefully trained up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

3. That they are truly regenerated and their faith cometh from the Holy Ghost.

Either of these interpretations may be adopted without at all establishing the doctrine that all children are regenerated by the Holy Ghost. We are to judge of the regeneration of infants as we do that of adults. They are believers in Christ, they are lovers of God and his holy word, they are meek, gentle, merciful, patient, pure-minded, truthful, obedient to parents, thankful, and in fact adorned with all the Christian graces found in adults, only heightened and beautified.

From the regeneration of one infant or a hundred we can no more make the sweeping deduction that all are regenerated than from the salvation of one man, by a free justification, we can bring the whole world into heaven.

We must add, even at the risk of wearying the patience of the editor, that this new doctrine represents God as doing a vast amount of foolish and useless labor. All infants (and more) born of heathen parentage, except those "elect dying in infancy," are regenerated, justified and sanctified with the certain knowledge, on God's part, that they will grow up in sin and die in sin. To use the horticultural figure: suppose you were to see a man planting ten thousand fruit-trees with roots so injured as to make it morally certain that every single tree would die before the summer ended, would we not come to the inevitable conclusion that he was an idiot? And suppose, further, that he were to go to the same labor and expense year after year, with the same anticipated result, this conclusion would be fastened in our mind past all doubt. And yet this has been the employment of the great and holy God for thousands of years. We are disposed to think the "crude notions of the Calvinists" far preferable to such unmitigated nonsense.

But again, it is not the weakness of this new theory which stirs our pen; it is the distillation of a deadly poison from high places. Already it has blotted out of the mind of one writer the "crude" notion of original sin. We thought the Discipline compelled all preachers to believe and to preach the doctrine of original sin. He quotes that old saw, "Just as the twig is bent," etc., and tells us this applies to "infant-culture" as well as to tree-culture. The old Arians and Socinians have been telling the world the same thing from time immemorial. They boast that sin is only a mental disease, and good cultivation will entirely eradicate it, but Methodists have heretofore held that it was a fatal heart disease, and nothing but the omnipotent power of the Holy Ghost was an effectual remedy. The denial of original sin leads inevitably to the denial of regeneration and the necessity of Christ's blood. If infants have no corrupt nature they have no actual sin, and hence are entirely sinless, and sinless beings do not need the Holy Ghost. What need have infants of the blood of Christ if sinless? This blood "cleanseth from sin," but where there is no sin it is of no value. Paul represents the unrenewed as being in the flesh, in darkness, dead, carnal, etc., and the old man as corrupt, sinful and in a state of condemnation, and the great transition from sin and death to a state of spirituality and life is wrought by the Holy Ghost.

"They that are in the flesh cannot please God." But ye are not in the flesh, but in the spirit; for "if any man have not the spirit of Christ he is none of his." All this is as clear as sunlight, if by flesh we mean our inherited sinful nature as applicable to infants as to men; otherwise we plunge "into a labyrinth" not only "dreary as Hades," but leading us headlong into the bottomless gulf itself.

In conclusion we would say that the force of prejudice should never lead us to tamper with the word of God. Fools rush in where angels stand aghast. The senseless prayer of a preacher should be: "O Lord, help me to believe all of thy precious word, and just as it stands, however much it may conflict with my stupid notions or evil heart of unbelief." There is nothing that I have so little respect for as the ecclesiastical shams and humbugs of the day. Preachers had better stick to the old crudities of their fathers. They have proved the wisdom of God and the power to the salvation of millions, and the infinite wisdom of the nineteenth century will give us nothing better.

The Alabama Conference Appropriates Its Funds.

MR. EDITOR: In the ADVOCATE of March 6 I ask Bro. Shores:

"1. Why does the Alabama Conference propose to pay the tuition of the sons of the preachers of the North Alabama Conference? 2. Is the Alabama Conference so generous as to educate, out of its funds, the sons of the preachers of another Conference?"

Bro. Shores has not yet answered these questions. Kappa reviews Bro. Shores' article, and discriminates between funds held in trust by the Conference and funds held for the benefit of its members, and says: "This, by the way, answers Bro. West's inquiries in your issue of March 6. The Alabama Conference does not propose to give any portion of the funds it holds in trust to the preachers of the North Alabama Conference. But, having settled the interest of $10,000 on the Southern University, the faculty of that institution and the Alabama Conference are willing that it should be considered an equivalent for the tuition fees of the sons of the members of both Alabama Conferences. * * * * No offense was intended to our North Alabama brethren by extending to them this privilege."

I cannot see that this answers my questions. I cannot see how the Alabama Conference could extend to the members of the North Alabama Conference "this privilege" in funds held "in trust." At any rate, there are a few other points which I wish to bring out. There is a point in connection with the funds of the North Alabama and Alabama Conferences which I think may be involved in the matter. Upon this point I wish information. In the formation of the North Alabama Conference and the Alabama Conference out of the territory of the Montgomery Conference and a part of the territory of the Mobile Conference, the funds which belonged to the Montgomery and Mobile Conferences were to be divided pro rata between the North Alabama and Alabama Conferences. The North Alabama Conference appointed Bro. Roberts its agent to settle with the agents of the Alabama Conference, and receive the funds coming to the North Alabama Conference. The Alabama Conference had all the funds in hand. I have never heard that the Alabama Conference has settled with the agent of the North Alabama Conference. I have never heard that they have paid over to him the pro rata of the funds. I have never heard that they have taken steps to do so. But I find them instructing "the Legal Conference to invest the sum of $13,000, in their hands, in good and productive securities," and I find them appropriating the interest accruing from these invested funds to the Southern University and the Tuskegee Female College. I want to know if these are the funds in which the North Alabama Conference has a share, and, whether they are or not, why does not the Alabama Conference take steps to pay to the North Alabama Conference that part of the funds which does belong to her? If these funds are the funds which belong in part to the North Alabama Conference, she certainly will object to her part of them being invested by the Alabama Conference, and will object to the Alabama Conference directing and appropriating the proceeds. The North Alabama Conference would like to have her own funds in her own hands, and to have the disposition of them under her own control, especially as the Alabama Conference seem to differ so widely about their own investment. If the Legal Conference of the Alabama Conference has so much money to invest it could certainly pay over to the appointed agent of the North Alabama Conference whatever amounts are due her out of the funds which belonged to and were held by the Montgomery and Mobile Conferences. Will those concerned give us information upon these points?

A Plea for Centenary College.

MR. EDITOR: For the information of any who may not know, we will first say that Centenary College is located in the instep of the boot-like picture of Louisiana presented to the eye on the map of the United States, twelve miles east of the Mississippi river, leaving the river at Bayou Sara or at Port Hudson. It is situated in the town of Jackson, among the first rolling hills or high lands as you come north from the gulf. This location is retired, beautiful and healthy.

It is true that Jackson, Louisiana, is but a small inland town; but this is all the better for the site or location of the college—all the better for several reasons that will suggest themselves to all reflective minds. The massive college buildings stand upon the gentle elevation north of the town.

Before the war, as many know, the college was in a most flourishing condition; but the buildings were rifled and racked by time and by the times of this fearful scourge, until its doors were closed, and the silence of death reigned in its heretofore thronging halls. But God has put it into the hearts of its surviving friends and liberal others to resuscitate this useful institution. Large-hearted men gave money, the preachers and people gave prayers, kind words and their sons, and the result is that the main college building is repaired, the wings are going through the process of renovation, and more than a hundred students pursue their daily and nightly studies on and around these consecrated grounds.

The college has a president, the Rev. C. G. Andrews, who is indefatigable in his teaching, traveling, toiling and care, and who is every way the man for the place. Let all the readers of this get acquainted with him, and send their sons to be under his instruction.

The college has also a worthy, laborious faculty; but it needs more men of the same stamp to fill up their ranks, and teach the many more who will in all probability come to receive instruction in coming years. In order to do this all should give their countenance, patronage and money. Now that the spring-time of the college has come, and it is reviving, who will not give it a helping hand? Will not all the preachers of the two Conferences do their best? Will not all the fathers and all the mothers take this subject into consideration for their sons and future generations?

Shall we not do something for the college in memory of the past? Shall we not remember the labors of its founders—a Winans, a Drake, a Lane, a Campbell, among those who are gone?

Come to its next commencement, and thus give it your countenance and support. The Rev. C. K. Marshall is to address the two literary societies. Come and hear him. He delivered the address when the corner-stone of the college was laid. Many of you who read this heard him then. Come and hear him again. Fathers and mothers, move to Jackson and educate your sons. Many have done this, and now their children occupy useful positions in all the honorable professions and callings of life. Have you daughters? Bring them along. They may be educated here too, for Jackson has two good female colleges. And last, but not least, let editors continue to speak often and well of the college, for Centenary deserves it, and your "say so" has power and influence in it. Use it for the college.

AN OLD FRIEND.

Cicero's Views of the Creation of the World.

"For what purpose," says he, "was the fabric of this world constructed? Was it merely for the purpose of perpetuating the various species of trees which are not endowed with sensation? The supposition is absurd. Was it for the exclusive use of animals? It is not at all probable that the Deity would have produced so magnificent a structure for the sake of beings which, though endowed with sensation, possess neither speech nor intelligence. For whom, then, was this world produced? Doubtless for those beings endowed with reason."

MR. EDITOR: There is something so beautiful in the above remarks of Cicero that we might infer that the light of revelation had dawned upon his soul. How wonderful that this accomplished scholar and unrivaled statesman and orator, the model of all schools in every generation, enveloped in heathen darkness, should draw such wise conclusions! What great, what noble thoughts! throwing into the shade a certain class of modern scientific men, whose false views permeate minds absorbed in the strange philosophy of the Darwinian and other atheistical schools, while the whole civilized world is receiving the benefit of the gospel dispensation, giving an impetus to science and literature in every department of social life.

It is true that great discoveries have been made in the physical sciences which facilitate the improvements of the present age. But are they not the results of an investigating principle imparted by the divine mind, designed by God to increase our admiration of that creative power developed by the efforts of skill and genius in man? to shine with a brighter and intenser light from the attributes of divine wisdom? How great, how glorious is his power! The infidel cannot detract from it. It comes with the purple tints of the dawning day, the sunlight, and the ocean's breeze, which undulates upon the tepid air; the budding of the lovely flower, whose fragrance regales our senses and whose beauty charms the eye; in the storm-cloud and the rain, in the bow which arches the heavens. He pencils with a touch of beauty every inanimate and living thing. He not only sustains the universe, but imparts to intelligent beings the capacity of appreciating and tracing him out in all the varieties of his noble design, all of which are calculated to increase our knowledge of his goodness—to adore and contemplate the perfections of his character.

"Though dimly seen in these his lower works;"

If Cicero could form such wise conclusions of the object of creation without the light of revelation, what responsibilities rest upon us who have the word of God in our hands with his revealed will!—a brief account of the creation of the world, and of man and his fallen state, and his redemption through Jesus Christ and faith in the blood of atonement, and the resurrection from the grave, to come forth more glorious than the first creation. What a prospect the Christian has above the infidel!

The Bible is the book of books, suited to all ages, from youth to gray hairs—every capacity of mind. Yes,

"Mind, mind alone, bear witness earth and heaven,
The living fountain in itself contains
The beauteous and sublime."

This divine book has survived the anathemas of the infidel, and it still lives. Its light emanates from an inexhaustible fountain of invisible glory. It stands out in bold relief from all others, like a magnificent constellation in the heavens, where every thought shines like a star of the first magnitude, to guide the soul to the inward sanctuary near the throne of God. Every word is expressive and full of meaning—expansive, opening to a storehouse of treasures which increase in value the more they are used—a "Golden vein running through vast eternity;"

durable riches which never fail.

Give me the Bible in life's darkest hour,
I then would clasp it closer to my breast,
And with its hallowed, true, immortal power,
My faith in its divine assurance rest.

Obituaries.

REV. JOHN D. LOFTIN was born in North Carolina, July 7, 1807, and died May 13, at one o'clock A. M., at his home in Montgomery county, Alabama.

He moved to Georgia when about twelve years old, was converted when very young and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, and was ever a very acceptable member until his death. He was licensed to exhort on the Monticello circuit, State of Georgia, October 26, 1833, by Rev. W. N. Sears, preacher in charge. Soon after he was licensed to preach, and moved to Alabama and was admitted into the Alabama Conference. He was ordained deacon at Columbus, Mississippi, by Bishop Andrews, January 7, 1838, and elder at Tuskaloosa, January 5, 1840, by Bishop Andrews. He remained in the Alabama Conference about twelve years, and occupied some of the most prominent places in the Conference, as well as a high position in the estimation of its members.

During his last illness he was not able to converse with kindred and friends; but why wish for any token of Christian comfort when a long life of usefulness in the Master's cause is evidence sufficient?

He traveled a part of last year on the Rocky Mount circuit, on which he has lived and from time to time preached for thirty-five years. His wife preceded him to heaven about ten years. He leaves no children, having lived with his sister since the death of his wife.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

Preparatory to entering upon the business of the second Quarterly Conference of Kenchie circuit, Shreveport district, Louisiana Conference, the roll was called, and lo! one was not—Bro. JOHN HOLMES having gone to his reward in heaven. Bro. Holmes was called from the walks of this life on the fifth of April, 1873. He died at his own residence, in DeSoto parish, Louisiana, surrounded by an interesting and affectionate family, and many heart-stricken friends. He was a man universally beloved by those who knew him. He exemplified in his daily walk and conversation the religion which he professed.

During his illness he gave the most satisfactory evidence of his acceptance with God. Living or dying, he was resigned to the will of the Master, and, when the mortal conflict came, he died as he had lived—a Christian hero; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we sorrow not as those who have no hope.

Resolved, That as a Quarterly Conference and church we earnestly condole with the bereaved and afflicted family.

Resolved, That a suitable obituary be prepared and forwarded to the editor of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

Resolved, That a copy of the above proceedings be furnished the family, and that the same be spread upon the book of record for this Quarterly Conference.

N. M. SKIPWORTH, Pastor.

MAY 3, 1873.

DIED, at her home in East Baton Rouge, April 2, 1873, Mrs. LIZZIE A. VANCE, wife of James A. Vance.

In 1860, under the pastorate of Rev. W. E. M. Linfield, she became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Previous to this time she had been, from early childhood, an efficient worker in the Sabbath school, as pupil and teacher. Indeed we cannot better epitomize her whole life and character than in the words: "She was an efficient worker." She looked upon the world not as a place in which to stand "all the day idle," but as the Lord's vineyard, wherein there was somewhat for her to do. Reverently she accepted life's responsibilities, and faithfully fulfilled its trusts. Her whole life was a noble work of filial obedience, of wifely devotion, of maternal tenderness and Christian charity.

With womanly softness and tenderness she combined, in a wonderful degree, a strong, practical sense, which rarely erred in the management of her domestic affairs and the government of her household, and made her an invaluable assistant to her husband in matters of business. At a time when her husband was managing extensive estates, and charged with the direction of large pecuniary interests, she kept his books, and by practical suggestions and counsels aided him in the most intricate and complicated transactions. She did him good, and not evil, all the days of her life. Yet in the midst of business she never lost sight of the claims of friendship, the duties of a mother or the obligations of society. All these were fully met and conscientiously discharged.

A few weeks before her last illness she found in her neighborhood a family sick and destitute, the wife and mother dying. All were conveyed to her own home, nursed, clothed and fed. "Verily I say unto you, inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

For months before her death her failing health and the nature of her disease warned her that the end was not far off. Submissively and cheerfully she awaited the issue. She was conscious up to the last, and counseled her husband as to the disposition of his business and the rearing of her children.

DIED, at her residence in New Orleans, on the ninth of May, ARMILDA WEAVER, consort of [illegible], deceased, aged fifty-[illegible] years and three months.

The subject of this notice was born in Indiana, in 1818, from where, while but a child, she removed to the State of Illinois, where she grew up. It was there she was united in marriage to Robert Morris, with whom she lived happily until [illegible] years ago, when he preceded her to the better world. It was there she embraced religion and united with the Methodist Church, and subsequent to her marriage. She came to this city about thirteen years since, and joined the Cadiz Street station, where they continued in membership until it was transferred to the church triumphant.

For twenty-five years Sister Morris had been a consistent and useful member of the church. She was very demonstrative in her religious character, but decisive and exemplary; modest and retiring in disposition, but full of gentleness, kindness, goodness and love, confidence and discretion, zeal and devotion, and all the virtues and graces of the Christian spirit.

During the acquaintance of the writer, which has been intimate and social, her delicate health, notwithstanding her robust appearance, interfered much with her religious privileges. But when able to be present she seemed highly to appreciate and greatly to enjoy the services of the sanctuary. The inconveniences and sufferings she endured in availing herself of such opportunities exhibited the strong faith she felt in them. She was a model of domestic economy, energy, prudence, a dutiful wife, an affectionate mother, a good neighbor, and in all the relations she sustained commanded not only the highest respect, but the warmest regard.

In her last illness the expression of her faith in God, her resignation to his will, and her hopes of heaven were characterized by the same modesty and calm firmness previous to her in health. She died in peace and rests in Jesus, in full hope of the resurrection and a blissful immortality. Three surviving daughters remain to lament their loss. May the mantle of the sainted parents fall on their shoulders, and may they be inspired with grace to follow in the footsteps until the reunions of heaven renew their associations in bliss forever. Amen.

PASTOR.

IN MEMORIAM.

Died, in Port Gibson, Miss., March 24, 1873, Mrs. M. KATE [illegible] ETTS, in the twentieth year of her age.

The deceased was reared and educated in the town where she died and now sleeps in the grave. Thoughtful as a child, and with a bright, grasping mind, her mental development and development was far beyond her age. Her fondness for books and eagerness to learn made her a diligent and accurate student. In her studies, as in everything, her ruling trait was ever prominent—conscientious honesty and sincerity. Quick to discern the right, she was scrupulously exact in the discharge of every duty. She connected herself with the church in [illegible] beautifully exemplified the principles of our holy religion up to the hour of her peaceful death in [illegible]

In November, 1871, she was [illegible] married to Mr. R. S. Ricketts, who now mourns the untimely loss of a pure and faithful wife. But [illegible] knew the wealth of her affection, the depth and sincerity of her piety. As her pastor in 1871, the writer found in her a sweet, sympathetic spirit, ever anxious for the welfare of the church, and modestly yet zealously bearing every burden placed upon her. In private discipline, too, duly she was no less earnest and faithful. Her bereaved husband writes: "On the morning after our marriage she brought the Bible to me and reminded me of my promise that I would hold family prayers. We never omitted it, even when her father had already prayed with the family; and many precious hours were spent by us under the influence that surrounded our little family altar."

When the dread hour of death came she was ready—"waiting by the river." Her faith was unfailing, and her hopes as bright as the burnished throne of God. Again I quote from the above letter: "It will be grateful to you, I know, as it was inexpressibly comforting to me, to hear her readiness for death was not postponed till the dying hour. Her last days were full of suffering—were passed in almost continued unconsciousness; but she was getting ready for the change for months before it came. After our last communion service at the church she was taken alarmingly ill; and as I bent over her, trembling with fear, she spoke words so full of faith and trust in God that I shall never forget them. She said that her doubts were gone, that God had blessed her, and that she was ready to go if he willed it. And thus, buoyant with hope, her spirit winged its flight to her happy eternal home. While we are weeping and sorrowing, she rejoices amid the saints in glory. Then let me comfort the bereaved ones; for while you have lost a loving companion, a devoted daughter and an affectionate sister, she has gained the companionship of angels, and sits beneath the throne of our Father, God. Blessed be his name! May we follow her as she followed Christ.

"The soul of our sister is gone
To heighten the triumphs above;
Exalted to Jesus' throne,
And clasped in the arms of his love."

CHAS. B. GALLOWAY.

A LITTLE GIRL remarked to her mamma, on going to bed: "I am afraid of the dark." "No, of course you are not," replied her mamma, "for it can't hurt you." "But, mamma, I was a little afraid once, when I went into the pantry in the dark to get a tart." "What were you afraid of?" asked her mamma. "I was afraid I could not find the tarts."

a Jewish Rabbi Was Converted.

ABRAHAM JEAGER'S EXPERI-E, AS GIVEN BEFORE THE CON-TION AT MOBILE.

who were in the Southern Bap-onvention on the tenth instant deeply interested in the address n. Jeager (pronounced Yeager,) was recently converted from sm to Christianity, in Mobile. a member of the St. Francis church, in which the con-on met. We are indebted to teemed young brother, George ger, for a report of the address, ken down by him while Bro. r spoke. It will be read with st, and the more so as Bro. r has been greatly persecuted Jewish brethren since his con-n to Christianity.

ccordance with a generally ex-d desire, Mr. Jeager was in-ed to the convention, and be-crowded house of eager listen-proceeded, after some becoming ssions of embarrassment at ap-ng before such a body on such asion, in substance as follows: give thanks to the living God el that I am to-day permitted tch forth my arms to this Bap-nvention and say: 'Ye are my ren!'" n, with a dignity and power of er and thought that have left a nd impress upon all who heard e proceeded to enforce the im-ce of labor for the conversion Jews. He claimed that all the ents urged the night before, alf of European missions, up-with greater, sublimer force to orld-neglected enterprise, and ore might be added. Said he: y are at your own doors; they your own language; they take n your own enterprises; but, all, they worship the same Jehovah—and yield credence same Scriptures of truth. Is ted that the Jews will not re-the gospel? Show me an un-r that will! You have not them. You have sent mission-others—oh! why not to these? ll you why. It is for lack of n God. You do not believe the ne and immutable promises of ah; you disobey the commis-f your Lord: 'Go preach the to every creature?' You preach Chinese, but not to the Jews. Chinese don't know the Bible; ews do. I tell you, brethren, name of God, only teach the their own Bible, and they will the gospel themselves. They know their own Scriptures. them into, first, the law, then ophets, then readily will they you into the gospel, and y will they see the Holy One el in the despised Jesus! The is full of assurances to this end. s not assure us of the conver-of all the Gentiles; but we do 'All Israel shall be saved.' Is conversion hard? So is that of heathen. Is their conversion de? Appeal to facts. In Great in there are two hundred Jews hing the gospel of the Messiah, everal thousands trusting in Christ; and why? Because have missionaries. In Berlin are two thousand converted bankers, officers of State, doc-of universities—of all classes of y; and not for money, else why it not so before? but because have missionaries! Christians, ren, you do not trust, you do bey the word of your Master. do you not 'begin at Jerusalem' and ever dare go to a city and h the gospel without preaching the synagogue?—to the Jew then; not till then, to the . Imitate him. Oh, brethren rist! preach the good news to or, neglected, but still beloved d!) Jeager then left the stand, saying his heart was "too full ell on the state of his people." e was called back and requested e his experience of conversion ristianity. He then proceeded as follows:)

was brought up a Jew, to look word of God—the law—as my hope. I expected salvation from her source than my own obe-e—the works of the law. To do w I must know it. Then 'know w and be saved' was my motto. eligion was in the brain. But e course of my searchings I was led to feel that I had just as try to love the air in breath or eam that moves the locomotive el (now I do not mean Christ,) s is a Spirit. You can't love es a Spirit! Now, to find satis-n—peace in doing the will of that was my constant longing effort. But never, never could it. It was like trying to fill a without a bottom. Man is just a thing, with no good motive—inciple of love—as bottom for orks. At last I became wearied, tired out of this. My resolu-and my works were all in vain. ceived a distaste, a disgust, for ewish law, as unable to meet my wants. Here, brethren, let me say, the law—the Pentateuch—is surrounded by wrappings and warpings of traditions which not only conceal but often go contrary to the will of God. So I soon found no reason for not rejecting the law of the rabbis. I lost all respect for this, and so also for the law of God. But at the same time a voice within—the voice of eternal truth—told me it was still the word of God. I could not blot out or get over the history of Israel—that wonderful, wonderful history of God's dealing with his chosen race. This confirmed the voice within. I was perplexed; I was sorely troubled; I knew not what to do. I tried to master and explain it all—all the wonderful history and the sublime doctrines of the Scriptures. But there were mysteries too high for me. I couldn't reconcile the freedom of man and the sovereignty of God. I tried to make it out: 'God does it all, and hence I am not responsible.' But oh! the mysteries, the impossibilities, that met me! And right here, brethren, let me say, nothing now seems to me more inconsistent than Judaism is holding, that nothing is to be believed that cannot be comprehended. I tried rationalism—that curse of Germany today; tried to make out the New Testament (for I had read it and found it a difficulty) and the whole Bible a legend, a myth or a series of myths; but I couldn't—I couldn't force myself to believe it. I tried to silence my heart in this way, arguing that the spirit of the times was above and ahead of the Bible; that the science of the world had outstripped it. But this failed me. I turned to the history of civilization—to the history of the nations of earth. I saw that the golden age of Greece and of Rome had come, had shed its glory and had been acknowledged by the world to have departed. Not so with Israel—God's nation. Its golden age was yet to come. Its only and acknowledged teachers; the prophets, still declared: 'The golden age of Israel is yet to come.' I saw that notwithstanding Israel is a small, despised people, yet their God is to be the God of all the earth, and they the glory of the world. I turned again to the Bible with the new zest and relish of abstinence. But I found it still a stubborn thing and full of difficulties. I tried to spiritualize it away; I studied and wrote extensively to this end, but I soon found myself failing. I was weak, and was warring against my highest interests. I found I had no greater enemy than Mr. Jeager himself. I thought I would thus become happy—compel myself to be happy. But God deliver any man from such happiness as I found. I went to a Christian in this city—a lady teacher—to talk with her. I told her I was miserable; that while I was the recognized rabbi of the Jews here, I was the meanest and most miserable of them all. Shortly after I saw a dog lying tranquilly in the sunshine. I wept and wished myself a dog. Oh, the agony of that period! I can't tell it to you. Still the idea strangely clung to me that a man must be good of himself—that the will was everything; the will was my only salvation. I still looked, longed and labored for happiness. If happy once in fancy I was soon miserable again. I grew loathsome to myself. I hated myself. However terrible I thought hell was, I thought it not enough of hell for me! And, O brethren in Christ, believe me, this is no exaggeration! The more I tried to be good the more I couldn't, and the more wretched it made me. Had Pharaoh hardened his heart? I thought I was worse than a Pharaoh. 'Surely, surely,' I thought, 'there is no chance for me.' I cried to God. I prayed: 'Lord, thou art all right, but I—I am all wrong. Lord, there is no hope for me, but let me not, oh! let me not sin against thee any more! Surely the past will suffice!' Do you ask why I did not embrace Christ? Ah! I looked upon embracing Christ as idolatry. There had not dawned upon me any light from above to see him as he is. But here I must revert several years. I had read the New Testament; I had studied history, and from its very foundation I found Christianity ruling in history—a sublime world-power. I had studied the character and work of Christ. I had been forced to conclude that the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah predicted no other than the Christ. I read the rabbinical commentaries; they applied it to the Jewish people. 'But how can they?' I asked. 'No, it cannot be! A man is there predicted.' Some said it was Jeremiah. 'But how?' I asked. 'Was Jeremiah wounded for our transgressions and bruised for our iniquities? Is it with his stripes that we are healed? It cannot be. It can't be predictive of any but Christ.' I said this to my brother-in-law. He told me I was crazy. We turned to the chapter. I explained it to him. He turned pale before me; was frightened almost to death. 'What shall we do?' he cried. 'Why, nothing; do nothing,' I replied, for I was still too proud to acknowledge; I was not wise enough to devise means of escape from the difficulty. 'If this chapter speaks of Christ,' I continued, 'then all the Bible speaks of the same Christ. What then?' 'Why, reject this—reject all! It is all an imposture.' Up to this time I say I had only seen in Christianity something that exercised a sublime influence on human character and human civilization—nothing more; but now I saw more. I turned to the New Testament for comfort. Before I read it as I read a novel, for its interest. I always admired the character of Jesus. Years ago a rabbi in San Francisco rebuked me for this. But now, I say, I went to it for soothing, for peace; yet not with intent to believe it. But its truths forced themselves upon me. I began to feel that Jesus was not only good, but holy, and that the holiness of Jesus was the holiness of God, and the power of Jesus the power of the living God of Israel. A few weeks of this earnest reading of the New Testament wrought a great change in me. My mother saw it and spoke of it—a great change in my character and life; everybody saw it, but little did they know the cause. I had at last been brought mysteriously but surely to the conclusion that nothing could help us up to God but Jesus. One evening I went home tired out—so tired of seeking—and sighing for rest. I lay down in this state of mind, and began thinking of Jesus, when suddenly and involuntarily I exclaimed: 'Jesus Christ, my Redeemer!' I was startled. My soul had at last declared its faith. The scales fell from my eyes. A burden bigger than the house rolled from my shoulders. My brethren, I can't describe here. It was as a sweet, strange dream. I began to think of Elijah and the still small voice. Light fell from heaven upon that wonderful story. I had realized what it was to hear God speak in the storm, but now, for the first time, to hear him in the still small voice. Like Elijah, I bowed with my head between my knees before God—the God of Israel. I felt, I understood, I believed. I knew it was the sacrifice of all things—almost my death—the disgrace and more than death of my poor mother and family; but I couldn't hesitate. God called me! I went forward; I fell at the feet of Jesus; I called him my Savior. Oh, that my people would follow me! Oh, that they might see Jesus as the promised Messiah—the Holy One of Israel! Thank God they must some day, for he has promised it."

As Mr. Jeager closed, tears were seen trickling down the cheeks of many a war-worn veteran of the cross. It was a solemn moment—such as the world has seldom known. With a voice tremulous with emotion, the Rev. J. M. Wood, of Georgia, moved that the convention engage in prayer for that people of whom the Master declared, "Salvation is of the Jews," after which Rev. M. B. Wharton offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That we have heard with great interest the address of Bro. A. Jenger on missions to the Jews, and the relation of his Christian experience, and that we recommend his appointment through the Board of Domestic Missions as a missionary to the Jews in this country.

A substitute was offered, and afterward the whole matter referred to a committee of five. This committee made a report before the close of the session, assuring him of countenance and co-operation if he should at any time feel it to be his duty to preach to his Jewish brethren.

Conversion of the Santals.

The Lucknow Witness says: "We rejoice to hear that a gracious and indeed glorious work of grace is going forward among the Santals (devil-worshipers) in connection with the Indian Home Mission, best known to the public as Mr. Boerresen's mission. Since May last a spirit of inquiry has been spreading among the people, and two hundred and twenty adults have been baptized. Seven villages have, in whole or in part, embraced Christianity, and the interest is spreading widely in all directions. Many inquirers are coming to the missionaries, and these excellent men are greatly straitened for help. The most hopeful thing about this movement is that it is being mainly pushed forward by the people themselves. Not a single man among the converts is put upon mission pay. A few teachers are paid very small salaries, and of the former native helpers the highest salary paid to any one is six rupees, and that to an ordained native preacher! All the converts are learning to read, and the best spirit prevails among them. One of the most successful assistants in this work is a woman about sixty years of age. She has been known to go on foot seven miles to talk—if she were a man we would call it preach—to the people, and her word is attended with power. Mr. Boerresen, who is a Dane, is assisted by a Norwegian brother, the only representatives of their respective nationalities, we believe, in India. They are connected with no missionary society, and depend chiefly on friends in India for their support. The work among the Santals mentioned above began in connection with a man whose conversion was brought about in a singular way. He had been for some time somewhat anxious about his spiritual state, when about midnight he dreamed that he should go and sit in the midst of a certain field and wait until an order was sent to him as to what he should next do. He awoke from his dream, and at once rose and went out to the field, where he patiently sat till morning. As it became clear he noticed a tiny scrap of paper lying at his feet, and, picking it up, he concluded that this must be his 'hukm,' and, not knowing where else to go with it, he carried it to the missionaries and told his story. He was more perfectly instructed in the way, and soon after baptized. He then left, but in three weeks returned with half a village of inquirers, and he has since brought over an entire village of devil-worshipers. He is still full of zeal, and doing a great work for his Master."

PERMANENT EFFECT OF A SHOCK. We have all read in our history how one of the Brunal presses burst when raising the middle span of the Britannia bridge, and how triumphantly the enormous span bore the shock of falling several inches. Recent investigations into the magnetic condition of the Britannia and Conway bridges show that although the strength of the structure was apparently unaffected by the accident, there are still indelible marks of the occurrence remaining after a quarter of a century. The magnetic condition of the span in question is different from that of the others. The shock produced molecular mobility for a moment, and permanent magnetization was the result. Similar results can be produced in a small way with a hammer and a bar of iron; but the striking fact disclosed by the examination of the Britannia bridge is the permanence of the impression made by the one accident in the bridge's history—a permanence that may fairly give rise to the supposition that whatever could produce such a fixed change in the structure of the iron may one day prove to have been a greater injury than was supposed.

Scientific.

PETERS, of Hamilton College, is responsible for two more asteroids—Nos. 129 and 130—discovered respectively on February 5 and 17.

THE ascent of Fuzi Yama, the highest mountain in Japan, was made September 9, by a British military captain, a civilian and a lady. They climbed through the snow, reached the summit, and made—what has not been made before—as far as possible, a perfectly scientific measurement of its height. It was found, after all necessary corrections were made, that the summit of Fuzi is thirteen thousand and eighty feet above the sea-level. The next highest mountain in Japan is Hakusar, or Shiro Yama, in Kaga and Yetsizen provinces, which was first ascended by the correspondent of the Independent, Prof. William E. Griffis, in August, 1871, and its height calculated to be nine thousand two hundred feet. Like Fuzi, Hakusar (White mountain) is an extinct volcano and its crater always contains snow. No other foreigner has yet made a second ascent.

A HONEY-PLANT.—We extract the following from a recent discussion in the National Bee-Keepers' Convention: "Is the Rocky mountain bee-plant profitable, and how should it be cultivated?" Mrs. Tupper said she planted one-half acre in the fall. It blossomed in May, and continued till frost. It came up again the next year. Its botanical name is Polanisia purpurea. It is an annual, but reseeds the ground each year. She considered it valuable, even as an ornamental plant. She planted it in drills, and also broadcast, with equal success. She had planted borage, and could say as much in its favor as a honey-plant, but it is a bad weed. M. L. Dunlap—The plant is Polanisia purpurea of the Western plains. In Colorado it grows from three to four feet high; has large seeds, and makes good chicken feed. He had sent out seeds all over the country. It blooms all summer, from the middle of May till frost. It promises to be more valuable for honey than any other plant. It is native to the dry plains, and in favorable situations the stalk attains a diameter of one inch. It would be a bad weed if so used, but can be easily eradicated. It grows best in damp locations, and grows vigorously all along the waterways in Colorado. It is described in the botanies as only growing a foot high. A. J. Pope has had it growing for two years. Cattle will browse on it. Is easily eradicated, and is not dangerous as a weed. It produces an abundance of seed.

A NEW PROCESS OF GRAINING OR IMITATING WOOD.—According to a patent recently issued to Mr. John Johnston, of New York, graining or imitating wood may be accomplished in the following manner: "A glass plate, preferably a thick even plate, has wrought upon it with a pencil or brush, with asphaltum, wax, grease or fatty substances, such figures and configurations as shall form the design seen on the surface of planed wood. The glass is then etched by the use of hydrofluoric acid. When the etching is sufficiently deep the plate is cleaned with spirits of turpentine, and the whole surface is spread over evenly with oil-graining color. The plate is then scraped with a scraper of soft wood, which, drawn over the surface of the plate, leaves the colors only on the etched spots. A printer's roller of the proper circumference and width is then passed over the whole surface of the prepared plate, by which the design is transferred to the roller. Then this roller is rolled over the surface of the wood to be grained. It is claimed that the method is equally applicable to metal, paper or any substance or composition, and that any desired number of impressions can be taken quicker, cheaper and more readily even by inexperienced hands, and that therefore the skill of the experienced grainer can be expended on a series of plates, without requiring his time or services in copying, thus making the process cheap, rapid and perfect. In adapting the process to printing on paper, the plates are etched out in the places not desired to be transferred. The plate is then mounted on the wood and is printed from it in the ordinary manner."—American Artisan.

CHLOROFORM.—The history of chloroform illustrates the value in science of seemingly isolated and unimportant discoveries. In 1774 Scheele, of Sweden, discovered chlorine. In 1796 an association of Dutch chemists mixed chlorine gas with an equal volume of heavy carburetted hydrogen (olefiant gas—ethylene) over water, and found that the volume of the mixed gases rapidly diminished, with a notable elevation of temperature and the appearance of a dense oily-looking liquid, collecting on the sides of the bell-jar and the surface of the water, and sinking quickly to the bottom. This oily liquid, of highly agreeable ethereal odor and sweetish aromatic taste, was long called the "oil of the Dutch chemists," and afterward chloric ether. It is properly the chloride of olefiant gas; and it is not the same as chloroform, which was accidentally produced in attempts to manufacture the former substance more cheaply and conveniently, by distilling together alcohol and chloride of lime (bleaching powders.) This was done by Mr. Samuel Guthrie, of Sackett's Harbor, New York, in 1831; but the name chloroform was not bestowed by Dumas until 1834; and it was not till about 1849, when chloroform had long been known and manufactured in large quantities, that its use as an anæsthetic practically began. Ether was a still older name in the materia medica. It is believed to have been known to Raymond Lully in the thirteenth century. But in 1846 Dr. Morton was the first to administer it by inhalation up to the point of insensibility to pain. Nitrous oxide has come still more recently into use. The reader will find much interesting information of this kind in a lecture delivered last year by Prof. B. Silliman, M. D., to the medical class in Yale College, entitled A Century of Medicine and Chemistry.

Religious Intelligence.

THE first wedding according to evangelical rites, which has been celebrated in Rome, was solemnized at the Wesleyan place of worship.

THERE are now nearly 600 children in the six Sunday schools of Cawnpore, India. Five of the schools are native, and the sixth is English.

THE Herald of Truth, Elkhart, Indiana, reports the arrival of a deputation of Mennonites from Russia, who come to this country to select a home for their people.

THE Board of Missions of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church have decided upon South America and the West Indies as the best fields for beginning the work of establishing missions.

AT THE late meeting of the convention of the Episcopal Church in the State of Florida, the constitution of the diocese was so altered that wherever the word presbyter occurs it was stricken out, and the word priest substituted.

THE Baptist Union for Ministerial Education, which held its meeting at Rochester, New York, May 15, has an endowment fund of $250,000, soon to be increased to $300,000. John M. Bruce, of New York, has just given $25,000 for a library.

THE Presbyterian General Assembly at Baltimore, on Monday, resolved to take part in the celebration of the centennial anniversary of American Independence at Philadelphia, and appointed a committee of arrangements for the purpose.

THE Board of Foreign Missions of the Reformed Church in the United States have decided to establish a mission in Japan. They will immediately endeavor to select a suitable base of operations, and take steps to secure proper persons to engage in the missionary work.

MANY small Protestant congregations have sprung up in Mexico, near the capital, where the people meet and are led in their public service by some layman of the congregation. Thirteen laymen in the City of Mexico have been appointed to preach in the surrounding villages.

TEN million one hundred and fifty-four thousand pounds represents the annual sum required to sustain the Church of England, including the maintenance of the clergy, education of the poor and miscellaneous expenses. These figures have just been published, with the approval of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

AT THE fifty-seventh anniversary of the American Bible Society, held in Philadelphia, May 15, Prof. Allen, who presided, stated in his address that there were 3,000 auxiliary societies in the United States, and that more than 30,000,000 of Bibles had been distributed through the agency of the society, which is printing and distributing 3,000 Bibles every day.

BISMARCK seems to have no intention of discontinuing his proscription of the Roman Catholics in Germany. The government of the empire, it is said, has resolved to expel the Redemptorists, Lazarists and the Congregations of the Holy Ghost and Sacred Heart, as well as the occupants of close convents, from the country within the coming six months.

A LAYMAN, for the first time in its history, presided at the recent anniversary of the Baptist Union in London, which is one of the largest and most influential of the May meetings held in the metropolis. This gentleman was Dr. Underhill, who in his younger days was a merchant, but gave up his business and devoted himself to religious literature, in which he gained distinction. He subsequently became secretary of the Baptist Foreign Mission Society, visited the various fields and stations in India, Ceylon, Africa, Jamaica, the United States and Canada, and now, by reason of his labors and treatises, his high character and great prudence, he stands "among the foremost leaders of his denomination."

The Methodist Recorder (London,) in an editorial on the sermon preached by Mr. Spurgeon at one of the Wesleyan missionary meetings in Great Queen Street chapel, London, Friday, May 2, says: "His sermon was singularly characteristic—earnest, practical, appropriate and soul-stirring. In his early ministry he gave great prominence to the more rigid peculiarities of Calvinism, and sometimes denounced rather mercilessly the peculiarities of Arminianism; but now he has become an eclectic, and takes the common essentials of the two systems. We can forgive a Calvinist who finds the marrow of the gospel in 'Christ crucified.' Methodists repudiate merit in every form, but they believe in good works. We hail these pulpit interchanges on public occasions with devout thankfulness. They are the signs and precursors of closer unity and fellowship among the churches."

THE Catholic Review represents that the mission founded for the conversion of the Southern negroes to Roman Catholicism is in a growing and healthy condition. "At present there are six American students at the College of St. Joseph, at Mill Hill, Middlesex, England, making the preparatory studies for this mission, besides five Englishmen, six Irishmen, three Germans, two Hollanders and one Belgian. The Americans are: John H. Green, Washington, District of Columbia; Dennis Hurley, Baltimore, Indiana; Theophilus Meyer, Syracuse, New York; John R. Slattery, New York city; Michael M. Walsh, Boston; Edward Delaney, Pennsylvania. Like all other priests, these young men bind themselves to chastity and obedience to their ecclesiastical superiors; but they add another obligation, which binds them for life to the negro mission, where they will be 'the fathers and the servants of the blacks.'"

THE eleventh General Conference of the Seventh-Day Adventists was held in Battle Creek, Michigan, March 11. This denomination reports for 1872 51 ministers, 239 churches, 5,875 members, and an increase over the preceding year of 11 ministers, 37 licentiates, 35 churches, 1,074 members, and of $4,731.07 in its systematic benevolence funds. It prosecutes mission work actively in various Northern States, among the French, German and Scandinavian settlers, and in Switzerland. A denominational school is talked of, with chairs for instruction in the languages of the people to whom the missionaries will preach. The preachers were advised to avoid controversy. "Health reform" is one of the moral principles of this people. They exhibit a strong tendency to make Battle Creek a denominational headquarters. So many families are moving to that place that the attention of the General Conference has been drawn to the subject.

YOUNG PREACHERS IN OUR SEMINARIES.—The late New Hampshire Conference adopted a measure for the relief of young preachers who are preparing for the ministry in our theological seminaries. These young brethren have now to pursue two courses of study—that of the seminaries and that of the Conference. Of course the former is much more comprehensive than the latter; but the latter has peculiar or technical forms, which render it a superadded and somewhat laborious task. The New Hampshire Conference proposed to exempt them from it. Its resolution is also important in another respect. It reads thus:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this Conference that a three years' satisfactory connection with either of our theological seminaries, which are recognized as such by the General Conference, should be an equivalent and substitute for the first three years in the Conference course of study; and further, be it

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this Conference that those who desire to attend said schools of theology for one or more years should, if already members of an Annual Conference, receive to those schools a regular appointment, as in the traveling connection; and we hereby humbly petition the next General Conference to make such changes in its rules and regulations as shall secure these results."

It can hardly be doubted that the Conference has thus initiated a relief for our theological students which will be generally adopted. It is said that two of the Bishops present at the session approved the resolution.—Methodist.

REV. R. H. MORETON, of Oporto, Portugal, an English Wesleyan minister, writes that the work of evangelization in that country is not at a standstill. The number of Protestant places of worship in that city is the same as at the beginning of the year, since additional rooms which had been occupied during the year were at length abandoned, through the pressure of violent persecution. At the two principal places of Protestant worship the congregations average 65; but the mission feels greatly the want of a suitable chapel, with rooms for classes and schools. Their church-membership is 78, with nine on trial, an advance of 25 per cent. on the preceding year. Mr. Moreton records a disgraceful scene as having occurred during the past year at the burial of a member of his church, whose body was followed to the preaching hall by a crowd, hooting, shouting and throwing stones. The same scene was repeated as the burial train left the cemetery. The Ultramontane papers which took notice of this outrage hinted their approval, though the insult was strongly deprecated by the Liberals. Other instances of persecution were cited, such as the arrest of peaceful worshipers on their way from chapel and their temporary detention in ward, which shows that Portugal is yet without a free gospel. Through the agency of the Wesleyan Missionary Society (English) and the Portuguese Reformation Society a boys' and girls' day-school have been kept in operation in Oporto the past year, besides a night school. In Lisbon the Presbyterians have purchased at public sale the "convent" of a suppressed religious body, and, in spite of some threats of violence, they have already, under protection of government, taken possession and held services in the building. Thus the quasi legal status of a Protestant church has been recognized, though full religious liberty has not yet been granted by the government.—Independent.

THE protracted debate in the English House of Commons over what is known as the "burials bill" has not been without interesting and significant speeches, the interest being heightened by the religious character of the question. The bill is a measure of the Dissenters, and simply provides that when a Dissenter is buried in a graveyard belonging to a parish of the Church of England, the burial service may be conducted by a Dissenting minister and not by a clergyman of the national church, as now required by law. The whole debate appears to have turned upon the point whether the great nonconforming body in England has any rights which the Established Church is bound to respect. Some members were evidently of the opinion that they had none. Sir H. Croft declared, in a somewhat amusing speech, that, for his part, he did not wish to keep the Dissenters out of the churchyard. He agreed with a clerical friend of his, who, being asked if he would bury a Dissenter, said that he would bury them all. (Laughter.) But the majority of the House have been found upon the side of equal rights, as the bill has passed to a second reading by a considerable majority. Among the notable speeches thus far has been Mr. Disraeli's, who places himself against the bill, and appeals to his Dissenting fellow-countrymen not to make war upon the ecclesiastical institutions of the land. He tells them that in spite of the superficial aspects of the religious life of the people of England, they are essentially a religious people and full of reverence and affection for the church. He wishes the Dissenters to desist in their opposition to the national establishment, and find in it a faithful and sound ally. He would leave both sides united against the common enemy of infidelity and irreligion that is marching boldly over the continent, and whose poisonous distillations have already found their way into Great Britain. This speech was received with great cheering, but it did not turn a vote against the measure.

How It Is To Be Done.

One source of weakness and inefficiency in our missionary operations grows out of the fact that we do not expect to spread the gospel by the ordinary means and instrumentalities. Many are looking for some mighty demonstration out of the usual course—something that shall overcome all opposition, and bring the Jews, heathen and infidels at once to the faith of Christ. Some great thing is looked for—a personal advent and millennial reign, a coming of the kingdom with observation, a startling crash of some sort, a breaking forth of forces miraculous and spiritual, and an extraordinary power dispensed in a sovereign manner. It is perhaps thought that God can convert the world when he pleases, and that when the set time comes he will open the eyes of the Gentile and tear the vail from the heart of the Jew. We have occasionally detected a sentiment of this kind: that when God is fully ready the thing will be brought about, and that he is keeping back a reserve of grace and power for this final and complete overthrow of the unbelief of the world. If we do not expect that Christ's kingdom is to be extended and established by the means now exhibited, it is natural and almost inevitable that they should be wielded with a feeble hand and with a languid faith. It is, in fact, an ad interim arrangement—a holding and preparing, or a condition of waiting for that sweeping and irresistible cataclysm. There is much of this enthusiasm of expectancy in the minds of Christians. They are looking for signs and wonders, for the trumpets and vials, for the breaking loose of elements hitherto restrained, and for some startling outburst of forces which have not as yet been brought into action.

We believe this to be a most damaging delusion, especially in its bearings upon the work of missions. The spiritual forces and the material instrumentalities are to be the same to the end. They were all exhibited at the beginning of the gospel, they were present at Pentecost, and they have continued to the present day. The preaching of the gospel and the work of the Spirit are the real dependence. Christ, as presented to a sinful world, was to be glorified by the spirit, and not by a personal parousia. "He shall glorify me, for he shall receive of mine, and shall show it unto you." The gospel is the power of God unto salvation, and the world, as far as it is ever saved, must be saved by the foolishness of preaching. We have no warrant to look beyond the means already recognized, nor to suppose that other processes than those now going on will be developed. The Spirit is given, the volume of revealed truth is completed, and the church, with the promised presence of the ascended Savior, has been qualified and commissioned to proclaim the gospel to every creature. As the kingdom has been in the past, so will it be in the future. The same means, the same Spirit, the same truth, the same faith and consecrated zeal which have gained past victories must secure the triumphs yet to be achieved. There is ever an augmented impetus as the church advances, and the discoveries of science, and all the elements of human progress and civilization contribute to the greater momentum and the more rapid spread of the gospel. And as the number of believers increases, and the assimilating leaven widens its sphere among the nations, the more powerful is the march of Christianity. Every century adds its millions to the household of faith, and brings its store of knowledge and consecrated material to the aid of the gospel. The evangelization of the world may—in the last times advance with wonderful rapidity, compared with the slow and partial conquests of the past. But there will be no new means, no power, no demonstrations in kind differing from those already given.

The responsibility of giving the gospel to the world rests upon believers. With the Spirit already abroad, the atonement made, it remains with them to carry and send the glad tidings to the ends of the earth. It is to be done by hard work, generous and self-denying giving, and by agonizing prayer, and a faith which looks to the cross as the fountain of all life and power. The valley of death, as seen by the prophet, was awakened and revivified by the word of prophecy and by the breath of the Holy Spirit. All the divine forces are already operating, all the human are in hand, and with these the grand result must be reached. We are not to wait, under the fatal delusion that other and more potent means are held in reserve for the appointed hour; but to labor with our might and in the might of God to save the world, with the assured conviction that it can and will be done in no other way.

The National Centennial.

The centennial celebration of American Independence in 1876 is already occupying the attention of the country. Congress has taken action, commissioners from the several States have been appointed, and there is a plan on foot to have a grand national and popular demonstration at Philadelphia. The churches are invited to take part in the festival, and several of the leading denominations, through their highest representative bodies, have decided to do so. The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church and the General Assembly of the Northern Presbyterians have taken measures to be represented and to participate. The Baptist National Anniversary Convention, which met at Albany, New York, in May, also took action in the same direction.

In these several bodies the matter was discussed, and there was more or less opposition. Some opposed on the ground that it involved the church in politics, and that it was calculated to lead to further entanglements. The dissent, however, was in the minority, and the two leading denominations, Methodists and Presbyterians, besides others, probably, who have not yet acted on the subject, are to co-operate and participate in the celebration of the national independence. That there was considerable sharp opposition to this meddling of the church in State affairs shows that there is some conscience left, and that there is a certain amount of misgiving about this patriotism which easily runs into partisan and political perversion. The subject, we believe, has not been brought before the Southern churches and perhaps will not be. It would perhaps be well, where no scruples about the political drift of the course exists, to consider whether we have any liberties left worth talking about; and whether, if the churches act at all, it would not be more appropriate to observe the Fourth of July, 1876, as a day of fasting, humiliation and prayer.

Such is the national degeneracy, the fearful extremes of political corruption, and the obliteration of constitutional restraints on the lustful tyranny of the majority, that it looks like a farce, at best, to commemorate an event which in a hundred years has led to the utter loss of honesty and civil liberty. Possibly it may exert a wholesome influence upon the nation to recall the political deliverances of 1776, and to revive the memory of principles which have practically lost their hold upon the public mind. It is doubtful, however, whether the people who are most zealous in the centennial will either see the lesson or apply it. They are judicially blinded, hardened, we fear, beyond the hope of recovery. Think of the old Continental Congress, from whom the Declaration issued, and then call to mind the late Congress voting themselves back pay, and the President signing the bill which doubled his own salary, and gave an extra $5,000 to the members! Seventy-six and seventy-six, with a hundred years between! Look on this picture and then on this. It will be well to compare the "lives of the signers" with the lives of these plundering patriots, who, in making provision for the centennial demonstration, did not forget to provide most handsomely for themselves.

What are they to do with the utterances of that old document about freedom, "the consent of the governed," taxation without representation, and the like strange-sounding heresies? It looks very much like honoring treason and rebellion, for the Declaration was a most treasonable paper, and the signers were rebels all. The difference between the attempt in Philadelphia and that afterward made by the Confederate States was in the success that attended the one and the failure which followed the other. In the one case truth was crushed to earth, and in the other it triumphed, and flourished for awhile, however much it has become eclipsed of late. So far as we can see, the South alone has any right to celebrate that day. Their liberties are gone, but they still love the cause which was asserted and vindicated by the statesmen and soldiers who threw off the comparatively mild oppression of the English crown. Their presence there would be at least consistent with their principles and conduct, and would be above the suspicion of a hypocritical sham or a blind delusion. It would be also a protest against the degrading despotism to which some of the once sovereign States are now subjected. The contrast might serve to awaken a feeling of shame, and possibly revive a sense of justice and right in those who have sold the national birthright for power and gain.

The Southern churches will be consistent with their non-political record, and leave to those who choose, in their capacity of citizens, to contribute to the grandeur and impressiveness of the great national centennial.

The Southern Review and Politics.

The relation which the Review sustains to the Methodist Episcopal Church South is certainly misunderstood, and out of this misunderstanding have grown complaints regarding its political character. We imagine no exceptions are taken to the political utterances per se of the Review, and for ourselves we should not wish them to be suppressed. The objection, so far as we can gather, is founded upon the supposition that these articles appear in a church publication, and that they are sent forth indorsed and approved by us as a church. The conditions of the General Conference that political articles should be excluded, and that the articles published should be submitted to a committee appointed by the Conference, were rejected by Dr. Bledsoe, and the Review is to all intents and purposes his personal property and conducted on his own individual responsibility. This is the fact, but the matter has not been so understood by many. Hence the complaints.

The Review contains nothing to indicate that it is a church organ except the single sentence on the cover: "Published under the auspices of the Methodist Episcopal Church South." This may be misleading to some people. We do not know precisely what meaning Dr. Bledsoe attaches to the words, but as generally implying protection, favor, influence, patronage, they might be so construed as to involve the church in a responsibility which neither the General Conference nor Dr. Bledsoe intended. It is certain that the country wants the Review, and wants it very much as it is. The masterly exhibition of political principles, and the able discussion and defense of the great religious doctrines which lie at the foundation of our faith, are needed. The independent position which Dr. Bledsoe assumes is best for all concerned. Let it be understood that it is an independent publication, and in no sense an official organ, and the offense complained of ceases at once. As we understand the position of the editor in reference to the action of the General Conference, neither the General Conference nor the church are considered as indorsing either the theology or the politics of the Review. It is the work of an individual Methodist, who holds no appointment from the church, and is subject to no other church control than that which is extended over every member. Believing that this exposition of the case is calculated to enlarge the circulation, and to conciliate those who have taken exceptions, we ask for the following statements a candid perusal. Dr. Bledsoe, in the last number of the Review, says:

We shall improve the present occasion to make known one thing, which does not seem to be understood by all the readers and critics of the Southern Review. Some readers and critics, for example, complain that politics are not excluded from the Southern Review. This, we reply, is no longer an open question, having been frankly, freely and definitely settled long ago.

The Southern Review is edited by one who is now known as a Methodist, and even before he was so known his humble labors received a more generous support from individual Methodists than from the members of any other Christian denomination. But the Methodist Episcopal Church South has never, as such, adopted the Southern Review as one of its periodicals, or become in any way responsible either for its teachings or for its pecuniary support. The General Conference which met at Memphis did, it is true, recommend the Review to the confidence and support of Methodists, but they still left it to the private enterprise of the editor, and to such other friends as might be willing to contribute to its success. All those objections, then, which proceed on the ground that as this is a church periodical, so it should cut loose from all the great political questions and issues of the day, fall to the ground. The premise is false, and therefore the conclusion falls.

The General Conference which recommended the Review, also recommended the exclusion of all "party politics" from its pages. This recommendation was respectfully declined by the editor and owner of the Review, and he did so on the two following grounds: First, he did not believe, as he asserted in his published response, that there ever had been any "party politics," properly so called, "in the pages of the Southern Review." He was not then, and he is not now, a party man. If, indeed, he belongs to any of the political parties of the country, the fact is wholly unknown to himself. He has determined, once for all, to "leave the dead to bury their dead," and devote all his energies, such as they are, to the great moral, social, political and religious questions which have a deep and vital connection with the issues of time and eternity. If, in the execution of this design, he cannot avoid the use of every phrase or illusion which may be construed into a party sense or bearing, he must submit to the inconvenience and bear the criticism, but he cannot change his course or design.

In the second place, he explicitly declined to exclude from his Review the discussion of the great questions pertaining to the late war. He had made these great questions the study of more than ten years of severe and unrequited toil. He had, moreover, in spite of poverty, inexpressible difficulties and trials, started the Southern Review, unaided and alone, to advocate his convictions in regard to these very questions—convictions which were and still are infinitely dearer to him than life itself. Hence he respectfully declined to abandon their advocacy, no matter by whom such desertion might be demanded, preferring to fall with such loyalty to his convictions to any earthly success that might attend a different course. All this was freely and fully made known at the time, for his principles did not cave in with the Confederacy. When this determination was made known he was not deserted by Southern Methodists. On the contrary, leading Methodists, from all parts of the South, applauded the resolution, and greeted him with letters of approval. Nothing has since happened to change his purpose; all things have, on the other hand, conspired to confirm and establish it in his mind. It is, then, he repeats, a settled question that the great issues relating to the late sectional war are to have a place in the Southern Review so long as it exists, or, at least, so long as it is under his editorial control. If, by this means, the Review should lose any support from Southern men, he can only regret, he can only deplore the evil; he cannot alter his course.

The Northern press is at this moment teeming with productions of all sorts and sizes—books, quarterlies, monthlies and other periodicals—which advocate the other side of the great controversy, and denounce our heroes and martyrs as "rebels and traitors." Shall we, then, remain silent? Shall we look on and listen, "like the dumb dogs of Israel," and say never a word in reply? Shall we bury, in the grave of the grandest cause that has ever perished on earth, all the little stores of history and philosophy which not an altogether idle life has enabled us to amass, and so leave the just cause, merely because it is fallen, to go without our humble advocacy? We would rather die. May our right hand forget its cunning, and our tongue cleave to the roof of our mouth, if we forget the great cause in which our Lees, our Johnstons and our Jacksons have suffered and died. The grave, and the grave alone, can impose silence on our tongues or pens. The question is settled. Some of our readers may, and no doubt will, continue to agitate the question, but, in so far as our course is concerned, it is settled. However deeply we may deplore all differences of opinion among the friends of the South, and however anxious we may be to conciliate the views, or even the prejudices, of any of them, we must be permitted to speak the thing that is in us. We are Methodists, it is true, but yet are we "the organ" of no church, sect or party. We are Methodists, and it is as such that we exult in the glorious privilege of giving free, full and unrestrained utterance to the convictions of our own individual minds. Although, in other words, we are Methodists, we are our own organ, bound only to observe the Twenty-five Articles and the Discipline, which we believe, and which we have ex animo subscribed. Beyond this no church and no critic has any right to dictate the course we shall pursue, much less any fragment of any church or any fraction of a critic. This glorious freedom, however, shall never induce us to forget the beautiful precept of the great apostle to "honor all men," nay, to "become all things to all men," except in essentials, as the faithful servants of all; and, as far as possible, to "live peaceably with all men." This is our programme—this is our philosophy—this is our religion.

THE Methodist church, says the Brandon Republican of June 5, has been completed in all its details, inside and out, and is pronounced by all to be the neatest church, in all its appointments, in the State. No pains has been spared to render it comfortable and attractive, and, having been built of the best and most substantial materials, it will long remain an ornament to the town, as well as being most useful to that communion.

Funds are yet needed to pay the balance due on it, and it is hoped they can be raised so as to pay off the debt and dedicate it at an early day. The committee gladly receive notes payable in the fall, which they use in paying the debt.

Fraternal.

The Northern Presbyterians are a shrewd set. They still pursue their Southern brethren with the proposals of reunion. Their ugly deliverances during the war afforded the Southern Assembly good reasons for declining to consider the question until those deliverances should be retracted. But see how the Yankee duplicity and moral crookedness crops out. The Old and New School (North) have united lately, and here was a chance for a dodge. Instead of a manly retraction they proclaim that the union has rendered the action touching the Southern Assembly null and void, and therefore it cannot longer be in the way. We know, of course, that the Southern Church will not be caught with this godly trick, and that its only effect will be to expose the character of those who, in the garb of love and devotion to Christ, seek to further their own policy of absorption and power. This action was taken by the recent Northern General Assembly:

1. In view of the reunion of the two branches of the Presbyterian Church in the North, neither of which was responsible for the conduct of the other, all action before the reunion touching the Southern Assembly, or the Old School Synod of Missouri, is now null and void.

2. The Assembly expresses confidence in the soundness of the doctrine and character of these brethren, and hopes that more intimate communion will tend to remove the barriers that time has established between us and them.

3. With regard to civil magistrates and the relation of Church and State, the committee set forth the declarations contained in the "confession of faith" and form of government of the church.

4. Recommend the appointment of two committees to confer with similar committees from the General Assembly of the Church South, and the Old School Synod of Missouri.

The Good Chaplain.

We make the following extract from a recent letter of Bishop McTyeire to the Pacific Methodist:

Bishop Doggett goes to the Pacific this year, and I greet the church there on this account. I doubt not he will come to you in the fullness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ in answer to your prayers. Toward him I have borne a relation that perhaps makes me incapable of impartial judgment, else I would hint to you my estimate of him as a preacher of righteousness. You might suspect it of some undue bias and extravagance, even without having been put on your guard. When in 1841 I went to Randolph Macon College he was chaplain, and so continued for a year and a half afterward. His pastoral and pulpit influence was most happy in effect upon the students. His Sunday homilies and prayer meeting talks were in the line of our exercitations in English literature and rhetoric, and that was their least merit. Two years afterward, when Prof. Sims retired, Dr. Doggett was elected to that chair in the college, and filled it with eminent ability. A passage in the chaplaincy will be forever memorable to me. I had made a profession of religion at twelve years old, and went up to college with a church letter in my pocket. But satan had well-nigh got advantage of me at this juncture. The temptation was this: "You began too soon. You are young, wavering, undignified, unstable, inconstant and do no credit to the cause. Don't say anything about belonging to the church. You are in a new place. Behave well, be moral, pray in secret, but make no profession. By-and-by, when you are older and wiser, renew your connection with the church, and then you may be of some use to it, and there will not be so many faults in you and so many failures." That snare may be transparent to others, but to me it was specious, and I was actually revolving the dreadful experiment of a suspension of spiritual life. How careful satan is of the reputation of the church, when it can be turned into a temptation for our souls! In this state of mind, and keeping my own secret, I went into the chapel one Sunday morning (it was made our duty to attend) and the preacher announced this text: "It is good for a man that he bear the yoke in his youth." From that he showed the reasonableness and benefits of youthful piety and its exceeding great rewards. The thoughts of my heart were disclosed. My steps were established when they had well-nigh slipped. I did not try the experiment upon my soul of suspended animation. Do you wonder that I love Bishop Doggett, and that I promise much edification to those who are to be blessed with his ministry and his superintendency?

THE eleventh commencement season of Pacific Methodist College, says the Pacific Methodist, which closed on Thursday, was of a character to arouse the pride and stimulate the zeal of its friends. It closed the most prosperous year of the existence of the college, and gave promise of a still more prosperous future. Two hundred and fifty-nine matriculates were entered on the roll of the college, and most perfect discipline has been maintained. Indeed the esprit de corps has been remarkable. The catalogue before us indicates a widening of the influence of the college. Students have come from Sacramento, San Joaquin, Solano, Santa Clara, San Mateo, Colusa, Los Angeles, Napa and Lake counties. Two of the matriculates hail from Sonora, Mexico; two from Missouri; two from Nevada, and one from Arizona.

We are gratified to learn that over $5,000 were raised on commencement day, which leaves a debt on the college of only about $3,000. We add one more paragraph from the Methodist:

The board of trustees was out in strong force—twenty-one of the twenty-four being present. Much important business was discussed. The honorary degree of doctor of divinity was conferred upon Rev. Dabney Ball, of Baltimore, whom we all delight to honor. The degree of A. M. was conferred on J. H. Seawell and Lewis Thomas, two graduates of the college, and upon Rev. Joseph Emery, of Corvallis, Oregon. The utmost harmony and good feeling existed during all the session of the board. The preacher in charge of Santa Rosa station was elected chaplain of the college.

THE Galveston Christian Advocate of June 4 says:

Bishop Keener passed through our city last week en route for Jefferson and other points in our State. The Bishop, we are glad to note, makes the mission in Mexico the leading object of his labors this year. He expects to raise the $21,000 the Mission Board has apportioned to this work. We need not exhort our brethren in Texas to co-operate in so important a work. Providence has broken down the barriers which have resisted the establishment of evangelical Christianity among that people. The way is open, and if our church is deaf to the Macedonian cry, which comes to us by the way of the West, the work will be committed to others more worthy of the trust. The conversion of a nation is a grand undertaking. The Bishop feels the inspiration of the mission, and we trust he will be able to impart a portion of his zeal to the entire church in the South.

DEATH OF REV. MARK W. GRAY. Mr. Gray was half-brother of R. J. Harp, publisher of this paper and Depository agent. We find the following announcement in the Nashville Christian Advocate of the seventh instant:

We are pained to record the death of the Rev. Mark W. Gray, preacher in charge of Middleton circuit, Tennessee Conference. He died in triumph, May 28, and his remains were taken the next day to Columbia for interment. Dr. McFerrin promises a memoir of this excellent minister. Bro. Shaw, supernumerary on the circuit, takes the pastoral charge of Middleton circuit.

CENTENARY COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT.—By reference to our special notice column it will be seen that the commencement exercises are to be of an unusually interesting character. The regular examination of classes begins on Wednesday, July 2. The annual sermon, by Dr. Whitfield, on Sunday, the sixth. Meeting of the board of trustees on Monday, the seventh. On Wednesday, the tenth, Dr. Marshall delivers the literary address, the graduating class will speak, degrees will be conferred, and the president will deliver the baccalaureate. We doubt not an immense crowd will be there.

OUR READERS are referred to the special notice column, on the eighth page, for notices of college commencements, District Conferences, and Quarterly Conference rounds. It is understood that everything in that column is published conspicuously. We call special attention to that column, that our readers may know where to find some of the most important announcements.

MERIDIAN FEMALE COLLEGE advertises for a teacher to take charge of that institution. Prof. Rice, the former principal, has been elected to the presidency of the Alabama State Normal School. Meridian is a growing place, the college is under the patronage of the Mississippi Conference, and the opening is a good one for a man of enterprise and capacity.

IT WILL BE SEEN from the order of the exercises that the commencement of Centenary Female College, Summerfield, Alabama, promises a most attractive entertainment. We wish Bro. McVoy and all concerned a most happy and successful time. We learn that thirteen young ladies are about to graduate from this old and most excellent institution.

BISHOP KAVANAUGH and wife, on their way from the District Conference at Ocean Springs, reached the city on Tuesday, the tenth instant, and left on Thursday for Beauregard, Mississippi, where the District Conference for the Brookhaven district meets on Friday, the thirteenth.

WE STILL RECEIVE occasional communications without the name and address of the writers. The name and postoffice must be sent, though not published, if such be the wish of the writer.

REV. R. ALEXANDER, D. D.—We are instructed by Bishop Keener to announce that Dr. Alexander has been placed in charge of St. James church, Galveston. The numerous friends of Dr. Alexander will rejoice that his health has been so far restored that he is able still to render efficient service to the church he has served so long and so faithfully. "Faint, yet pursuing," he maintains his course till the Master sends him his release.—Galveston Christian Advocate.

"A PRUDENT MAN," says a witty Frenchman, "is like a pin—his head prevents him from going too far."

Periodicals.

GOOD WORDS for May has: The Prescotts of Pamphilion; Devotional Readings from the Manuscripts of the Late Norman Macleod, D. D.; The Faithful Sayings of the Pastoral Epistles; William the Silent; Spectrum Analysis; and other articles.

THE SUNDAY MAGAZINE for May has a number of excellent articles, among which we note: On Maintaining a High Ideal; Keep thy Foot; Mrs. Mary Fletcher; The Future of the Working Classes, and The Leper's Lesson.

GOOD THINGS FOR THE YOUNG OF ALL AGES is filled with articles adapted to young people, some of them amusing, some instructive, and some not altogether wholesome. The illustrations add to the attractiveness of this sprightly periodical.

THE RURAL ALABAMIAN for June is an excellent number, and abounds in information adapted to the season and climate.

THE Methodist Episcopal Church Missionary Advocate for May contains a large amount of the latest intelligence from the mission-fields. We are glad to welcome the Little Corporal to our table. The June number is excellent. Published by John E. Miller, Chicago, at $1.50 per annum. Appleton's Journal is not to be commended for some things which appear in its pages; but for freshness, variety, and, in the main, for instructiveness, there are no literary publications of the lighter and more popular order to be compared with it.

WINTER IN THE WHITE MOUNTAINS.—The winter at this favorite summer resort has been long and dreary. The older people say it has been the toughest here among the mountains for over a quarter of a century, and only equaled in severity by the experience of the lamented Kane in his sledge journeys among the ice fields of the arctic. In some localities in this section the thermometer has ranged for several days forty degrees below zero, and several instances are related of the freezing of springs that were never before known. The quantity of snow fallen during the winter has been almost unprecedented, and is estimated by some of the observing farmers to have been no less than one hundred and forty-four inches. There can be but little doubt of this from the fact that even now the snow is four feet and six inches on the level, and the sleighing is done on an elevation nearly equal to the top of the fences and walls. The winter months here are dull and monotonous, but very little doing save what is barely necessary to keep the wheels in motion, and prepare for the army of tourists and pleasure-seekers who make their annual visits to this most beautiful mountain resort. The proprietors of the various hotels are brushing up and making preparations for the reception of their guests. The Portland and Ogdensburg railroad company are pushing with commendable energy the completion of their road through the White Mountain Notch. The road will be completed and trains running as far as Sawyer's Rock, about twelve miles above North Conway, in season to accommodate summer travel, which continues to increase in the same proportion as railroad facilities are extended.—Correspondence of the Boston Journal.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Missouri Republican, writing from Galveston, Texas, gives us the following:

Rev. Francis A. Morris, D. D., the distinguished Methodist clergyman of St. Louis, and son of the venerable Bishop Thomas A. Morris, of Ohio, was in 1832 attorney-general of the republic of Texas, in President Mirabeau B. Lamar's cabinet. At that time Mr. Morris was a brilliant and eloquent lawyer, but shortly afterward abandoned the practice and he entered the ministry. Had he continued in his first profession there is no doubt but that he would have been the recipient of the highest honors that the people of the State could have bestowed. Mr. Morris should attend the next annual meeting of Texas veterans, which takes place at Houston in May, 1874.

The first Methodist meeting for religious worship held in the State of Texas was at the residence of Mrs. Lucy Kerr, in Washington county. The services were conducted by her brother, Alexander Thompson, who had been a class-leader and steward before moving here.

The Texas Conference was organized in 1840, the late Beverly Waugh, D. D., the presiding Bishop, and Rev. Thomas O. Summers, D. D., now at Nashville, secretary. They are now the largest denomination in the State, and the Christian Advocate, their church paper published in this city, is one of the ablest papers of the denomination in the United States.

DEATH OF A VETERAN PREACHER. The Rev. T. G. Rundle writes from Prairie Station, Mississippi, May 25, and announces the death of the Rev. John Young, the oldest member of the North Mississippi Conference. The venerable man of God, long superannuated, died at the residence of his son-in-law, Mr. John Campbell, Calfax county, Mississippi, May 23, aged ninety-three years—a member of the Methodist Church seventy-one years, and a traveling preacher fifty-nine years. He died as he lived, in the faith. A memorial of the old patriarch, we are assured, will appear in due time. The church on earth may now say: "Servant of God, well done!" The great Head of the church will say in the last day: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant!"—Western Methodist.

CHIEF JUSTICE CHASE left an estate of nearly $200,000. Among the bequests in his will are $10,000 to Dartmouth College, and the same amount to Wilberforce University, Ohio.

WE CAN all see at sunset the beautiful colors streaming all over the western sky, but no eye can behold the final hand that overturns the urns whence these streams are poured.

THE GREATER FOOL.—In a sermon preached by Bishop Hall upon his eightieth birthday he relates the following story: "There was a certain lord who kept a fool in his house, as many a great man did in those days for their pleasure. The lord gave him a staff, and charged him to keep it till he should meet with one who was a greater fool than himself; and if he met with such an one to deliver it over to him. Not many years after his lord fell sick, and indeed was sick unto death. His fool came to see him, and was told by his sick lord that he must now shortly leave him. 'And whither wilt thou go?' said the fool. 'Into another world,' replied the lord. 'And when wilt thou come back again—within a month?' 'No.' 'Within a year?' 'No.' 'What then?' 'Never.' 'Never! and what provision hast thou made for thy entertainment there, whither thou goest?' 'None at all.' 'No?' said the fool, 'not at all? Here, take my staff then; art thou going away forever, and hast taken no order whence thou shalt never return? take my staff, for I am not guilty of any such folly as this.'"—Penny Post.

IF YOU perceive that anything in your ways makes your parents unhappy, you ought to have no peace until you have corrected it; and if you find yourself indifferent or insensible to their will and wishes, depend upon it yours is a carnal, disobedient, ungrateful heart. If you love them, keep their commandments, otherwise love is a mere word in the mouth, or a notion in the fancy, but not a ruling principle in the heart. They know much of the world, you very little; trust them, therefore, when they differ from you, and refuse compliance with your desire. They watch over you for God, and are entitled to great deference and cheerful obedience. You may easily shorten the lives of affectionate and conscientious parents by misconduct, bad tempers and alienation from their injunctions. Let not this sin be laid to your charge.—Leigh Richmond.

A DASHING FELLOW, who seemed to think he manifested his superiority by the disdain he exhibited of anything like courtesy to the humble, was driving his gig one rainy day, when he came to a toll-bar, and haughtily asked what he was to pay. "Ten cents, if you please," said the civil gate-keeper. Instead of handing the money to him, our grandee threw a quarter of a dollar carelessly on the wet and muddy ground. "There, take your change out of that." The keeper stooped for the silver, and, placing the change exactly on the same spot, walked coolly into his cottage.

TIME is the prologue to eternity; the great weight of eternity hangs upon the small wire of time; whether our time here be longer or shorter, upon the spending of this depends either the bliss or the bane of body and soul to all eternity. This is our seed-time, eternity is the harvest. Whatsoever seed we sow, whether of sin or grace, it cometh up in eternity. "Whatsoever a man soweth, the same shall he reap."—Galatians vi, 7, 8.—Brooks.

MR. FELKER, who was forcibly ejected from a railway car between Norwalk and New York because he had stopped over at the former place on a through ticket which the conductor (though requested to do so) had omitted to indorse, has been awarded $500 damages by a Bridgeport court on account of the excessive force used in ejecting him, the judge declining to decide whether it was lawful under the circumstances to eject him at all.

THERE are men in Amoy whose regular profession it is to murder female infants for a small fee. There is a place there filled with water, called the "Girl's Ditch," where the dead bodies are thrown. A dozen or more have been seen in it at one time. Few families in Amoy have more than two girls alive.

The Child's Corner.

MATTIE'S TROUBLES.

My Hepsey's got the measles
The very worstest kind;
And Cæsar's in the closet,
Because he wouldn't mind.
By playing Marbles Taylor,
And spoiled her waterfall,
And spilled out all the sawdust,
And wasn't sorry 'tall.

I'll spank Miss Rose this evening,
And tell her papa too;
She poured her cup of coffee
Right into Mabel's shoe.
Fred, bit his tongue so awful—
I don't know what I'm 'bout—
I'll send for Dr. Scissors,
And let him cut it out.

To-morrow's Topsy's birthday—
She's twenty-five, I guess—
I'll have to go to Boston
And buy her 'ception dress.
I haven't any pennies, though—
I threw 'em down the well:
I wish I had n pocket full,
Like Tom 'n' Sister Nell.

I went down in the kitchen
To make poor Hepsey's tea,
And Bridget wouldn't let me—
She's cross as she can be.
I wish she'd get the measles,
And whoopin' cough, 'n' chills;
I wouldn't give her nothing
But peppersauce 'n' pills.

My finger's hurting dreffful—
I pinched it in the door;
I wish they'd get my needle—
I dropped it on the floor.
There's Topsy's dress to finish,
And heaps of work to do;
I guess I'll collect my family
And move in grandpa's shoe.

Youth's Companion.

Idle Words.

"Come to me, Edin, my boy," said Mrs. Ashworth to her son. "I want you to listen to me for a few minutes while I speak to you about your besetting sin. Almost unconsciously you are daily guilty of falsehood."

"Oh, mamma," exclaimed Edin, "I am sure I could not be so mean as to tell an untruth."

"You say things sometimes that are not strictly true, my son, and mimic actions in a very exaggerated manner. Who can ever say how much mischief has been caused in the world by such idle words. Many homes have been rendered miserable, many true friends separated simply on account of words spoken at random."

At that moment Mrs. Ashworth was called away, and the conversation thus interrupted was not renewed. Edin had the gift of mimicry to an extraordinary degree, and in this amusement he was encouraged by his schoolfellows. There was, however, one of Edin's companions who used to expostulate with him on the danger of the habit he had acquired. Little Charlie Elmore was an only son. Early in life he had lost his father, and it was only by exercising the strictest economy that Mrs. Elmore was able to provide the means for sending Charlie to school. Owing to an accident he was crippled for life. A gentle, quiet, diligent little fellow was Charlie Elmore; and yet with all his gentleness and yielding disposition he could be very firm in the cause of right. Not the gay, high-spirited Edin could resist temptation nearly so well as did his little companion. Between the two boys had sprung up a friendship that was encouraged by Dr. and Mrs. Ashworth, for they wisely judged that Edin could not have a better companion. The school clock was striking twelve as the boys came rushing out into the playground attached to Dr. Graham's house. Edin was among the number of those who were about to enjoy an hour's recreation.

"Here, Edin," cried Harry Frier, "do come and tell us what Charlie Elmore was saying to you before school."

"Do tell us what he said," repeated Harry. "Here, boys, Edin is going to act Elmore."

If Edin had paused a moment to reflect, that which followed would never have happened. As it was, he gazed at the little group around, "waiting for the performance to begin," as Harry remarked, and his pride was gratified. There were boys much older than himself there who wished to be entertained by him. Urged on by the merriment of the thoughtless group around him, Edin forgot every other consideration, and exceeded far beyond the bounds of truth as he caricatured Charlie, putting himself into the most ridiculous postures and bobbing about in imitation of the little cripple. Suddenly the shouts of applause that greeted him on every side died away, and a dead silence followed. Edin looked up hastily to ascertain the cause, and encountered the fixed, strong gaze of Charlie Elmore himself. He stood just opposite to him. One glance at the little boy's pale, agitated face told Edin but too truly that he had been a witness to the whole scene.

For a moment Edin stood silent, then he cried: "Charlie, don't look like that; speak to me, do speak to me!"

The strange, unnatural expression vanished from Charlie's countenance, but he shook off the hand that Edin laid on his arm, and, merely casting one sad, reproachful look, he moved hastily on. Long afterward that look followed Edin; there had been no anger depicted there, only intense surprise and grief. In the secret retirement of his own room Edin called to mind his mother's words, and wept many and true tears of repentance. On the morrow he determined to seek Charlie and implore his forgiveness; surely when he knew how Edin grieved for his misconduct he would overlook his fault, great though it had been. With these reflections Edin fell asleep. Charlie Elmore did not make his appearance at school the following day, and the next he did not come. As Charlie was a delicate boy, and was often kept away from school by illness, his non-appearance did not occasion Edin much uneasiness, though he longed very much to see his friend and make his peace with him. A week had passed away. Edin knew that his father attended Charlie, but he did not believe him to be very ill, until he was startled one evening by Dr. Ashworth observing that "it was a bad case with little Elmore this time."

"I cannot account at all for this last illness; he appears to me to have received a severe shock to his nervous system. I questioned him about it, but he seemed to wish to avoid the subject, and I was afraid of agitating him."

"Papa," said Edin the next morning at breakfast, "it is a holiday today; may I go and see Charlie Elmore?"

"Yes; I do not think it will do him any harm, only let your visit be a short one, and do not talk too much."

With a very troubling heart an hour later Edin knocked at the door of Rose Cottage. Mrs. Elmore herself let him in, and thanked him, with tears in her eyes, for coming to see her boy. "How is he this morning?" Edin asked.

"Not much better, thank you," the widow sorrowfully replied. "It is Dr. Ashworth's opinion, and my own too, that he has something on his mind. I have no doubt he will be delighted to see you; he often mentions your name in his sleep."

Ah! little did Mrs. Elmore think why the vision of Edin troubled her boy. Edin followed the widow noiselessly to Charlie's room. They opened the door and softly entered. Edin was deeply shocked at the alteration that had taken place in his friend's appearance in that one short week. His pale cheeks were almost as spotlessly white as the pillow on which his head rested. As Edin walked to his bedside Charlie opened his eyes languidly. He immediately recognized Edin, and a faint flush rose to his cheeks, his lips trembled, but he held out his thin hand. Edin seized it eagerly, and, bending over it, burst into tears.

"Oh, Charlie, Charlie," he cried, "do you really forgive me? You cannot think that I ever intended to grieve you so. I know how wicked and cruel it was, but I never thought, until I saw you, how wrong I had been."

It was a long, long time before Charlie Elmore got strong again; but his illness had not been without at least one good effect—it effectually cured Edin Ashworth of his sinful habit of indulging in heedless conversation, and giving way to exaggeration. And he who had once been the first to amuse himself at the expense of others was always after remarkable for his consideration for the feelings of his companions.

"Yes, mamma," he exclaimed, when Charlie was better, and he was giving his mother a relation of the whole affair, "yes, mamma, you were quite right when you said that no one could ever tell the misery caused by the utterance of a few idle words."

Church and State.

"How Much Do I Cost?"

A little daughter, ten years old, lay on her death-bed. It was hard parting with the pet flower of the household. The golden hair, the loving blue eyes, the bird-like voice, the truthful, affectionate, large-hearted, pious child! How could she be given up? Between this child and her father there had always existed not a relationship merely, but the love of congenial natures. He fell on his knees by his darling's bedside and wept bitter tears. He strove to say, but he could not: "Thy will be done!" It was a conflict between grace and nature, such as he had never before experienced. His sobs disturbed the child, who had been lying apparently unconscious. She opened her eyes, and looked distressed.

"Papa, dear papa," said she at length.

"What, my darling?" answered the father, striving for composure.

"Papa," she asked in faint, broken tones, "how much—do I cost you—every year?"

"Hush, dear, be quiet," he replied in great agitation, for he feared delirium was coming on.

"But please, papa, how much do I cost you?"

To soothe her he replied, though with a shaking voice:

"Well, dearest, perhaps £10. What then, darling?"

"Because, papa, I thought may be you would lay it out this year in Bibles, for the poor children to remember me by."

With what delicate instinct had the dying child touched the strings of comfort! A beam of heavenly joy glanced in the father's heart, the bliss of one noble, loving spirit mingled with its like. Self was forgotten, the sorrow of parting, the lonely future. Naught remained but the mission of love, and a thrill of gratitude that in it he and his beloved were co-workers.

"I will, my precious child," he replied, kissing her brow with solemn tenderness.—The Child's Paper.

WHY HE SMOKED.—George Coleman, in his Random Records, tells a comical story of school-boys, in the time of James the First, of England, who smoked to excess:

"This, of course, was concealed, as much as one can conceal a smell, from the dominie, till one luckless evening, when the imps were all huddled together round the fire of their dormitory, involving each other in vapors of their own creation, lo! in burst the master, and stood in awful dignity before them.

"'How now?' quoth the dominie to the first lad; 'how dare you be smoking tobacco?'

"'Sir,' said the boy, 'I'm subject to headaches, and a pipe takes off the pain.'

"'And you?—and you?—and you?' inquired the pedagogue, questioning every boy in his turn.

"One had a raging tooth, another the colic, the third a cough, the fourth—in short, they all had something.

"'Now, sirrah,' bellowed the doctor to the last boy, 'what disorder do you smoke for?'

"Alas! all the excuses were exhausted, when the interrogated urchin, putting down his pipe after a farewell whiff, and looking gravely in the dominie's face, said in a whining, hypocritical tone: 'Sir, I smoke for corns.'"

A LITTLE BOY, reading to his mother about the lion, in a book on natural history, said: "Mamma, the lion is a noble animal, but I love the lamb better, and I will tell you why; because Jesus Christ is called the Lamb of God which taketh away the sins of the world."

Farm, Garden and Household.

Thoughts for the Month.

The principal work for the present month will be to keep the land in good tilth. In the cotton fields particularly these ep, cultivator or harrow should be run as frequently as possible. It is especially important that cotton should make "weed" very rapidly now. There is no danger of overgrowth or shedding in June, and the plant ought to have every facility for growing and making "forms." The bottom crop is in some respects the surest, and the sooner the plant acquires size the larger that crop will be. It has better chances to escape drought, and is never cut off by caterpillars. It is useless to add that keeping the surface stirred and free from crusts promotes continuous healthy growth. Under the old extensive system so large a number of acres were allotted to each plow that it was impossible to "get around" the crop very often. He was regarded as an excellent manager who did not allow more than three weeks to elapse before beginning over again. Let it be remembered, however, that that interval was not fixed upon as the shortest which would benefit the crop, but the result of necessity when such large crops were planted. No rule can be laid down, but the oftener the better.

PLOW SHALLOW.

Where land has been properly prepared and cultivated up to this time there is little danger of its "running together" again, and all deep-running plows may be laid aside in the cultivation of the crop. A plow running one inch deep will answer every purpose, all that is necessary being to kill grass and weeds and keep the surface well pulverized. Keeping open the pores of old mother earth is all that is needed now. Let in the air and the dew, and permit the roots to go everywhere without being disturbed; these are the leading considerations.

GETTING THE CROP CLEAN.

Now is the time to get rid of grass. The earlier workings may with safety be done rapidly; those in the early part of June ought to be done thoroughly. Every pains should be taken to get rid of grass now. This done and enough dirt may hereafter be thrown to the plants by the plow to do away almost entirely with the use of the hoe. All old farmers know that if the "May grass" is conquered the battle is easily won.

Early in this month—if not already done—cotton should be brought to "its final stand." No superfluous plant should be allowed to remain any longer, to withdraw food from those which are to make the crop. What a proper stand is each one must decide for himself. The wider the rows the greater the crowding in the drill possible.

LAYING BY CORN.

More or less of this will be done during the present month. Where corn has had proper cultivation, and the land is clean and in good tilth, it may receive its last plowing when in the "bunch." It is well to throw some dirt to the plants, that the "spur" roots may be well buried in the soil. These roots play a very important part in the final development of the plant, penetrating the soil to considerable depths and sending off immense quantities of fibrous roots to act as feeders. Late, deep and close plowings injure many of these and do great harm.

Where corn is laid by early, it is particularly important that it should be perfectly clean, as once it is likely to become very foul before the close of summer. The best plan is to sow peas broadcast (one to two bushels per acre,) and let these keep down the grass and weeds. They injure the corn less than grass, give some return for the seed and labor of sowing, and greatly benefit the land. This last consideration alone ought to make the practice general.

PEAS.

The main crop of these should be planted this month, whether among corn or by itself. We have always warmly advocated the planting of a large crop of peas to themselves, regarding it as one of the best and cheapest crops grown. The seed may be drilled by a planter very rapidly, and one hoeing, and at most two plowings with sweep, will make the crop. It may follow oats or wheat, or may be planted even in an old sedge field. Stock may harvest the crop, or scythe or reaper may cut it down, and the seed be gotten out with a thresh. With oats and peas the stock on a farm may be kept in the best condition without corn, and at greatly less expense than when fed on corn alone. Oats are rapidly gaining in public favor; would that we could give a similar impulse to peas. The speckled or whippoorwill pea, planted early in June, may be taken off the ground in time to sow oats in September, leaving the land in splendid condition for the latter crop. Moreover, the roots, stems and leaves of the pea will furnish nitrogenous matter, the very thing which, above all else, the oat-plant needs in most of our soils.

HARVEST.

It requires great judgment and energy to harvest small grain crops well (if of any size) without interfering seriously with the corn and cotton crops. Many a farmer has gotten badly "in the grass" by stopping the plows and hoes to cut small grain. Work should be arranged weeks in advance in reference to the harvest. As hands are in unusual demand at that time, it is best to hire extra hands in advance and get the crops in such condition that the regular hands on the farm may do the harvesting. No exorbitant prices will then have to be paid. Cut and shock, and as soon as well dried stack or house; it is extremely bad policy to let grain remain in the shocks for weeks or months after it is cut. Remember that oats to be fed to stock make best feed when cut some time before it is fully ripe; that for seed should be allowed to mature perfectly.—Southern Cultivator.

MEANS are good only in the order of God. They injure us if we rest in them.

MACHINERY, TIES, ETC.

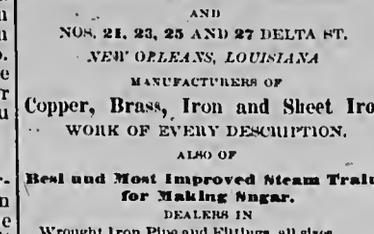
THE DUBOIS FLANGE COTTON GIN.

By the Flange the Cotton is kept in contact with the teeth on each side, until the fiber is taken from the seed, without allowing them to be taken up by the return motion of the roll, as in other Gins.



The Flange prevents hulls, stems, sticks and hard substances from being cut, consequently making a better sample out of roughly-picked cotton than other Gins.

We have sold more from this point than any agency of any other Gin for the crop of 1872-73; consequently we can furnish more and better references, and they are warranted to come up to all that is said of them.

We keep constantly on hand all sizes, from 40 to 80-SAW STANDS, left or right. Price, $5 per Saw.

IMPROVED

EAGLE COTTON GINS.

The great popularity of the EAGLE COTTON GINS is established from the well-known fact that they are the most reliable, strongest and best-built Cotton Gins ever made. The Eagle Cotton Gin runs lighter than any other gin, thus having a great advantage for planters who wish to run by horse power. All the numerous planters who use the Eagle Cotton Gin will certify to the fact that when their cotton is sent to market it always brings the highest market price, as no other gin can produce a finer or a better sample of cotton than the Eagle Cotton Gins. Over seventeen thousand of the Eagle Cotton Gins have been made and sold. During a period of twenty years the undersigned has had the agency of the Eagle Cotton Gin in New Orleans. He has never had a gin returned or rejected out of the immense number sold. The saw cylinders of all the Eagle Cotton Gins are twelve inches in diameter, which is two inches larger than most other kinds of gins, thus giving our forty-saw gin more teeth, and they are more than equal to the fifty-saw gins of other makers, who use only a ten-inch cylinder, and the same great advantage of the twelve-inch cylinder in larger-sized gins can be easily estimated. Planters who wish a reliable cotton gin, with an established reputation, can purchase an Eagle Cotton Gin with a certainty that they are not making an untried experiment, but will obtain a cotton gin which is indorsed by the oldest and largest planters in the country as the best in use. A large stock of the Eagle Cotton Gins is always kept on sale in New Orleans, ready for immediate shipment. Planters should be particular to state if they want right or left-hand motion gins.

MR. A. HARRY GRANGER: I have been using the Sherwood Steam Washer—bought of you—every day for six weeks. The clothes get whiter every time they are steamed. The "Woman's Friend," so called, sold by Mr. Hayes in this city, I used for over four months. I prefer the Sherwood Steam Washer, as it costs less money, takes less fuel to run, and takes less time to cleanse the clothes.

On Saturday the market exhibited very little animation, but no [illegible] buyers took 2,200 bales the sales, not including 90 bales withheld on Friday, summed up 2,850 bales at prices showing no improvement, good ordinary being still quoted at [illegible], but with sales of average lots shown to 14¾c., and even 14¾c., and at street at 15⅛@15¼c., the outside rate of [illegible] being regarded as extreme. At the same time the quotations of low middling were reduced to 16⅜@16½c., that is, ⅜@⅝c. for average, and 1⅞@⅛c. for street, while the former had sold as low as 16½c. On Monday buyers came forward with more spirit, and the demand being stimulated by more encouraging dispatches from Liverpool and an advance at New York of ⅛c. in spots, the first change quoted on intermediate deliveries there for five weeks, while futures have been subject to daily fluctuations. The movement became quite active and resulted in sales of 5,[illegible] bales. A part of the business during the morning was at previous rates, but later in the day the advantage was manifestly on the side of the factor, and while at the close the quotations of low middling were raised to 16⅞@17⅛c., and of middling to 17@17½c., there was none to be had of either grades at less than previous inside figures. On Tuesday the demand continued good throughout the day, and although the movement was checked by the supply on sale having been unfavorably reduced, especially of the better qualities, which are becoming scarce, yet the business summed up 4,[illegible] bales, at prices still more in favor of factors, reporting a further advance of ⅛@⅛c. in low middling, and a revision of the other grades, as given below.

The above, not including 2,[illegible] bales omitted on Friday, makes an aggregate for the past three days of 11,[illegible] bales, against 4,800 for the corresponding time last week and 8,500 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the 11,[illegible] from Mobile, Florida and Texas, and 15,[illegible] since August 30th, 185 bales in the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 789,228 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 355,962 to Great Britain, of 95,126 to France, and of 170,940 to other foreign ports. ## News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

NEW YORK, June 11.—Imposing honors were paid this morning to the remains of the late Minister Orr. The remains arrived at eleven o'clock and were escorted by a cordon of police, together with the deputation appointed to receive them. Flags on all the public buildings were at half mast during the procession. The streets were crowded, and as the hearse passed up Broadway nearly every head was uncovered. The remains are in a magnificent rosewood casket, silver mounted, with wreaths on the top composed of laurel leaves and white roses. The roses are faded.

MEMPHIS, June 11.—One of the severest rain and thunderstorms ever known here raged about ten o'clock last night, accompanied by immense sheets of electricity. In an hour and a half 2 17-100 inches of rain fell.

It is feared that great damage has been done the planting interests in the adjacent country, but the sanitary condition of this city is greatly improved.

The Hon. Jacob Thompson is recovering from his attack of cholera.

There were twenty-four interments to-day, against eighteen yesterday. But little excitement prevails in regard to cholera, and few persons have left the city. It is generally believed that the severe rain of last night will have a beneficial effect.

A painter, named E. A. Jackson, committed suicide to-day by taking laudanum. It is said that fear of the cholera was the cause.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 12.—A band of Apaches have started south, probably to invade Sonora. Another band is reported five miles over the border, besieging Santa Cruz, in Sonora.

Advices from General Davis' camp report only three or four Modocs at large.

The Pitt river Indians delivered eleven Modoc refugees to-day to General Davis.

WASHINGTON, June 12.—Governor Davis, of Texas, telegraphs that he will send Santanta and Big Tree, the two Kiowa chiefs, to Fort Sill, to be released in accordance with the request of Secretary Delano; but hopes that the Indians will be held by the military until after he can make an official visit to Washington, which will be in a very few days.

WASHINGTON, June 13.—A dispatch says the refugees from the Polaris were sent north with instructions to make no communications. The dispatch states that enough has been hinted around the navy-yard to indicate that the report of the Secretary of the Navy will show that jealousy and intrigue prevailed on the Polaris from the day she sailed. Captain Hall found that Buddington opposed him; and when the Polaris reached the farthest point north, with everything favorable in prospect, Buddington requested to go farther, when Hall became discouraged. Buddington, after Hall's death, was constantly drunk.

Hall's widow arrived at Washington yesterday from Cincinnati, and was surprised to find the crew gone, as she desired to talk with them about her husband's death.

NEW YORK, June 13.—At two o'clock this afternoon the municipal offices were closed as a mark of respect to the memory of the late Minister Orr. Among those who called at the Governor's rooms to-day to view the remains were Major General Hancock and staff, who accepted the invitation to participate in the funeral ceremonies.

President Grant telegraphed from West Point regretting that his engagements would not permit him to be present. Wilmot DeSaussure, ex-grand master of the Masonic fraternity of South Carolina, telegraphed that he was on the way to this city to attend the funeral.

Twenty Masonic lodges reported at the City Hall this morning that they will join in the funeral and escort, and about forty more lodges from this city, Brooklyn and Jersey City will participate. As the City Hall clock struck high noon to-day the band of the New York Commandery played a dirge from "Lucia de Lammermoor."

The funeral took place this afternoon at half-past two. The arrangements for the procession to the church with the remains were perfect. The City Hall park was crowded to excess, looking for a sight at the splendid coffin which inclosed the body. The band played some solemn and mournful dirges. The pall-bearers, with uncovered heads, took up the coffin and carried it down to the hearse. The Sir Knights formed on either side as the coffin was borne past and then filed into marching order. Mayor Havemeyer and the Common Council, with crape rosettes and wand of office draped in mourning, occupied carriages in the rear of the procession.

The Knights made a most imposing spectacle drawn up in the park, five deep, with their gorgeous uniforms, the sun brilliantly reflecting from their swords and other ornaments. Henry Clay Preston, grand marshal, headed the procession, accompanied by Major Edward H. Kent, chief of staff. The procession started up Broadway to Twenty-third street, then up Madison avenue to the church of Dr. Hepworth, where the funeral services were performed. The Fifth and Seventh Regiments and the Washington Grays were already at the church in full uniform. After the services were over the cortege moved down Fifth avenue to Fourteenth street, where the remains were placed on board a steamer and taken to Jersey City and put on the train for the South. The eldest son of the deceased accompanied the remains, also many friends and brother Knights. The remains will reach Charlotte on Tuesday morning.

GALVESTON, June 14.—The fire at Navasota, this morning, laid in ashes the larger portion of the business part of the town. Originating in the rear of Smith's saloon, it swept Washington avenue from Brossig's to the postoffice.

WASHINGTON, June 15.—At St. Petersburg the war office has received dispatches from Central Asia, which report the division of the expedition advancing on Khiva by way of the Sea of Aral has made satisfactory progress. General Weremkir occupied Kungrad, one hundred miles north of Khiva, on the twentieth of May. The Khivan forces had abandoned the place. General Weremkir continued his march along the line of the Oxus to Khajalli and Kunia, the enemy flying before him.

An Aral flotilla had entered the Bay of Alogir, the southern arm of the Sea of Aral, and sailed as far as Kungrad, where its progress was stopped by the shallows. Efforts would be made to reach Kizil Kala, at the southern extremity of the bay, where a depot of supplies was to be established for the troops advancing under General Weremkir.

The Secretary of the Navy does not hesitate to say, in advance of his official report, that the testimony elicited shows that Captain Hall died a natural death, and that the separation of those on the ice-floe from the Polaris was accidental. He is desirous, however, of having the story of Captain Buddington and his party, so that both sides of the story may be fully known.

NASHVILLE, June 16.—Thirty-two interments are reported from cholera since Saturday. A large percentage of those attacked have recovered. The deaths were for the most part among the colored population.

MEMPHIS, June 16.—The weather to-day was very unfavorable for the improvement of the health of the city, as during last night the mercury fell twelve degrees, and to-day was rainy and hot.

The interments to-day were nineteen, fifteen of whom died of cholera and cholera infantum.

The City Council this afternoon passed an ordinance to establish a Board of Health.

NEW YORK, June 17.—The sanitary police were clearing out the dwellers from the cellars in the fourth ward to-day; the women are indignant, but the authorities are inexorable.

WASHINGTON, June 17.—The total amount of back pay returned to the United States Treasury is $192,021.34, and the number of senators and representatives who declined to receive it is forty-six.

BALTIMORE, June 17.—The graves of the Confederate soldiers at Loudon Park Cemetery were profusely decorated to-day, and a formal address made by James Franklin, of Annapolis; after which ex-Senator Wigfall, of Texas, delivered an address. During the ceremonies the statue of a Confederate soldier, by the artist Valcke, standing in the center of the Confederate graves, was unveiled. Generals George H. Stuart and Trimble, and Commodore Rollins, of the Confederate service, took an active part in the ceremonies.

NASHVILLE, June 17.—There were fifty deaths to-day, thirty-five being from cholera. The disease is evidently spreading. Dispatches from Gallatin, Lebanon, Greenville and other points show that the scourge is carrying off a great many at those places.

CINCINNATI, June 17.—A case of sudden death of a woman with cholera symptoms is reported in this city to-day. The old cases mentioned in last night's dispatch are improving. No new ones have been reported, except the one above mentioned.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 17.—It is stated that there are twenty-seven steamers in China waters waiting to bring Chinese, to the number of twenty-nine thousand, to California.

MEMPHIS, June 17.—The weather continues bad, with almost incessant rain.

There were fifteen interments to-day, of which ten were from cholera.

FOREIGN.

HAMBURG, June 13.—The band of the Prince George Regiment of the Saxon army sailed from this port on the steamship Vandalia, for a concert tour through the United States.

MADRID, June 14.—During the session of the Cortes last night it was announced that the separation of Church and State is part of the programme of the government.

ALDEN, via London, June 14.—The Sultan of Zanzibar has signed the treaty with Great Britain for the suppression of the slave trade, which was negotiated by Sir Bartle Frere.

LONDON, June 17.—The second cable from the coast of Cornwall to Spain has been opened for business. This increase in facilities for the transmission of dispatches between England and Spain has led to a reduction of tariff.

ROME, June 17.—The Senate to-day passed a bill for the suppression of religious corporations, by a vote of 68 to 20. The measure now awaits the royal sanction to become law.

"We want it fresh," replied the ingenious child.

The Spiritualists' Convention.

On Friday, May 16, there assembled at Thoms' Hall, in this city, about fifty people, to consult as to the means of organizing Spiritualism into a working force. Some were from remote sections of the country, but five-sixths of the assemblage were from Cincinnati and its immediate vicinity, though the call was for a mass convention of the Spiritualists of America. The plan was to adopt a platform of principles upon which all "true Spiritualists"—a favorite phrase with the convention—could unite. The movement was designed by most of its initiators to be in opposition to the "American Spiritualists' Association," at whose head stands the scarlet woman, Woodhull; but it was soon developed that Woodhull had earnest sympathizers, if not followers, in the convention itself, and that one, at least, of the signers of the call for the convention was an open-mouthed, zealous advocate of that notorious woman and her abominations.

The first day was occupied principally in conference. The speeches made were all rampant with the idea of liberty, which, to some of the speakers, and to the majority of the convention, apparently meant unrestrained license. A bitter antagonism to the Lord Jesus Christ characterized the speeches, which, with a few exceptions, were, to a wonderful extent, free from logical coherence, free from rhetorical excellence, free from the tyranny of grammatical rules, and free from the trammels of purity and religion. Many of the ideas paraded were better suited to infidel clubs and candidates for Botany Bay, than for the people of a city in a Christian land. They talked with an audacity of wickedness proportionate to their weakness and ignorance.

One young man, with the first down barely off his cheeks, announced that no religion, from that of Confucius to that of Christ, sufficed for him. The blood of Christ had no power to keep him. Only an angel mother and a sainted daughter could work such a miracle! A woman, in whose speech and bearing was noticeably apparent the lack of that refinement and purity without which woman is repulsive, advocated, with great vehemence, the cause of George Francis Train and Woodhull, and denounced the action of the Young Men's Christian Association in causing the incarceration of those individuals for sending obscene literature through the mails. This speaker also said: "Those members of the Spiritualistic party who suppose that table-turning and rapping and seeing faces come out of dark curtains, is Spiritualism, are wholly mistaken. The spirit of Spiritualism is freedom. Some of the sympathizers of the movement are too anxious to be respectable, to remember to be manly and womanly. While you are trying to make Spiritualism respectable, to put white garments on it, you are letting human sympathy and the dear objects whom the spirit friends commend to your love, suffer. Free thought allows us to ascend to the full bent of our aspiration, and to descend as low as a desire to confer happiness on others will permit." Of course this address closed with an apostrophe to freedom!

On the second day the Spiritualists elected the officers of the convention, and passed several resolutions:

Resolved, That freedom of speech, both from the platform and through the press, is the only basis upon which we hope for a permanent advancement of all reforms.

Resolved, That any or every violation of the liberty of speech, as defined by the foregoing resolution, in any part of the country, shall receive, as it merits, our entire disapprobation.

This was all that was accomplished at the three sessions on Saturday, the time being mainly spent in wrangling and profitless debates.

We learn that on Sunday morning addresses were made by two speakers, one of them the woman mentioned above, who seemed to be quite an authority among the clan. Here is her meaningless definition of the religion of Spiritualism:

"Our religion, then, is this: The grand ultimate of all thought to bring all to a higher ultimate. Hence we are brothers."

In the course of her remarks she made the following fatal admission: "If I stood on the sill of Spiritualism, and looked down into the vortex and saw things I have seen, in positions where I have been behind the scenes, and wished to oppose Spiritualism, I could tell things which are worse than any of our opponents have dared to dream of."

In the afternoon a lyceum meeting was held—the Spiritualistic substitute for an evangelical Sunday school. The programme of exercises consisted of songs, musical readings, recitations, dialogues, lyceum discussions, piano solos, lyceum budget and a march. The "march" was probably the most interesting part of the exercises. Old and young, each with flags, marched through different figures, following file-leaders, while some one played a lively tune on the piano. In the evening the hall was crowded to witness an advertised seance by Miss Lizzie Keyser. A spectator furnishes us the following particulars:

"After an address or two, a collection was taken up, after which the séance began. The seance was, of course, the main feature of the evening's exercises. The front of the stage was cleared for action, and Miss Lizzie Keyser advanced to the front. She is a tall, masculine-looking woman, with a large neck, in which the cords are very apparent. Her complexion is dark and sallow, and her large eyes have a strained, unnatural, unhealthy look, as though seeing spirits were bad for them. She was dressed plainly, in a mouse-colored dress with a cape, the tout ensemble being intended to be decidedly Quakerish. She held in her hand a handkerchief, limp with moisture, and was continually fingering it during the seance. She walked nervously about, and often her neck and shoulders twitched convulsively as she walked.

"As I gazed at the remarkable scene it brought forcibly to mind another, which, in the days of my earlier Bible-reading, took a strong hold on my young imagination. The ragged, dreary outlines of a wilderness can be dimly seen, half wrapped in the murky darkness of a wild Judean night. Ever and anon the lurid lightnings cleave through the storm-clouds a brilliant path, along which roll the thunders. The vanishing light of the lightnings at once reveal and give a weird appearance to a group of four gathered before the mouth of a cave. A woman with long, tattered hair streaming back on the wind, like a nest of writhing serpents, is stretching out her bony arm toward three men standing immediately before her. This is Endor; and the gray-haired man, close-wrapped in a mantle and leaning on the other two, is Saul, the King of Israel. 'And the woman said unto Saul, I saw gods ascending out of the earth. And he said unto her, What form is he of? And she said, An old man cometh up, and he is covered with a mantle. And Saul perceived that it was Samuel.' Precisely after this fashion did Miss Keyser describe the spirits which she pretended to see. Here is an example: 'I see yonder, by that old man standing in the back part of the house by the pillar, the spirit of a young man. He is tall, well knit, with brown hair and blue eyes. He has been in the spirit-world about ten years. He gives his name as ——. Do you recognize such a spirit?'"

It is sufficient to say that the so-called "spirit manifestations" on this occasion were, as usual, utterly aimless and senseless. An observer could, however, but be impressed with the evidence before him that the minds which discard true religion become the victims of superstition; those who reject God as Creator and Sovereign will people earth and air with demons. They who disbelieve in an Infinite Spirit can yet believe in the existence and manifestations of earth-born spirits! Unbelief and superstition alike have their birth and home in an impure heart.

On Monday, after a good deal of discussion, the convention adopted the following action; thus bringing itself into fitting relationship with the Woodhull wing:

WHEREAS, It is the earnest desire of this convention to promote harmony among the Spiritualists of America, and at the same time accord to every one the entire right of private judgment on all matters of faith; therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is not our right or duty to persecute individuals or associations because of a difference of opinion, and hold that Spiritualism or Spiritualists, as a whole, are in no way responsible for the opinions of such individuals or associations.

Resolved, That this convention appoint ten delegates to represent us at the next annual meeting of the American Association of Spiritualists.

A crazy man from Philadelphia, who seemed to be the only one there who had any respect for the Lord Jesus Christ, tried to get a resolution passed recognizing Christ, but it was hooted down. When the convention was tired out with speeches, he managed to get the following passed:

Resolved, That this convention recognize the Golden Rule as the best embodiment of all the codes of morals which the world has yet known, and should be practiced by all Spiritualists; and that this rule recognizes charity for all honest difference in opinion among men.

The following, from the committee on resolutions, were also passed:

Resolved, That the co-operative method of distributing papers, pamphlets, books, etc., in the interest of Spiritualism and free thought should be established.

Resolved, That we most heartily oppose, and shall use our united efforts to defeat, the present and any and all efforts that may be inaugurated to insert a recognition of God in the Constitution of the United States. (Received with applause.)

WHEREAS, We believe that capital punishment is an evil, a relic of barbarism, is dangerous to society, is only legal murder and fraught with a thousand other objectious; therefore,

Resolved, That we most heartily oppose its continuance as a law of the land.

Resolved, That this convention invite all societies and organizations of Spiritualists throughout the country, and urge upon them the necessity of sending delegates to the next annual meeting of the American Association of Spiritualists.

The convention wound up with a social entertainment and a dance in the evening—a finale in harmony with the previous proceedings.—Western Christian Advocate.

The Japanese Act of Toleration.

The following is the text of the charter of Japan, giving religious liberty to the people of that empire:

WHEREAS, In matters of conscience and religious faith it has been justly observed that the manner of exercising them can be properly determined only by reason and conviction, not by force or violence; and

WHEREAS, No man or society of men has any right to impose his or its opinions or interpretations on any other in matters of religion, since every man must be responsible for himself; and

WHEREAS, We have no other purpose than that of avoiding for our nation the misery which the experience of the world shows has followed the patronage by the State of any particular religion;

It is now solemnly resolved and declared that the imperial government of Dai Niphon will make no law prohibiting, either directly or indirectly, the free exercise of conscience or religious liberty within its dominions.

And it is further solemnly resolved and declared that the organization of any religious order shall not be interfered with by either local or national authority, so long as such organization does not conflict with the laws of the State.

And it is further solemnly resolved and declared that the law of the empire shall recognize no religious institution as special or different from any other kind of social institution.

And it is further solemnly resolved and declared that no special privilege or favor shall be granted by either local or national authority to any particular sect or religious denomination without extending the same at once to every other.

And it is further solemnly resolved and declared that no religious or ecclesiastical title or rank shall be conferred by the State upon any person belonging to any religious association.

And it is further, and in conclusion, solemnly resolved and declared that no action which may promote religious animosity shall be permitted within the realm.

Strange Revelations.

Bishop Coxe, of the Protestant Episcopal Church, has recently visited Hayti, and he reports strange things which he found there. The Episcopal mission there is now devoting its energies to the evangelization of the natives of the island, five hundred thousand of whom are heathens, though nominally Roman Catholics. The condition of most of the natives is like that in Central Africa—that of barbarism of the lowest type. They take their children to the Romish priests for baptism, and worship the spirit of evil. In many parts of the island the cannibalism of religious superstitions very largely prevails. Children are stupefied by giving them a root or bark, and thus prepared for the rite. After being fattened for the sacrifice, the deluded worshipers feast upon their bodies. Both the Episcopal and Wesleyan missionaries testify that this practice is systematic, not occasional. The government has attempted to suppress the practice, but failed. Bishop Coxe met the excited President Gefrard in Jamaica, and reports some conversation with him on the subject. "I did my best," said the president, "to put down this cursed bandon worship." In answer to the question of the Bishop, whether they thus sacrificed children to their heathen god, the president replied: "Alas, I was obliged to shoot eight men for cannibalism to strike terror into those whom I could not reach. Cannibalism is strong there; and it was for that reason I am here an exile, because I made war upon it." As might be expected, marriage is almost entirely neglected. Is it not time that the Protestant Church should give special attention to civilization and Christianization in Hayti?

From the Work.

FLOYD AND DELHI CIRCUIT.—Mr. Editor: This is a beautiful country, made pleasant by the many happy faces of its cheerful citizens, and the bright smiles of the many children as they enter the Sabbath school every Sunday morning, with bright hopes of soon being rewarded for an excellent lesson.

We have a Sabbath school at each appointment, well officered and in a very thriving condition. Perhaps never before has there been so much interest manifested by parents and children in the use of our own Sabbath school literature, instead of the union books. We do not particularly oppose the union books, but simply prefer our own, as we think they are far superior. We have long desired to see a small hymn and tune-book for the use of our Sabbath schools in patent or shaped notes. Our desire is more than realized in the Gem, published at Nashville. Hope it will meet with great success.

"BURLEIGH" writes to the Boston Journal that Commodore Vanderbilt's donation of half a million to the Southern University does not please his family. They think it is too much money to send down South, and that the commodore would have done better for his own fame, and better for the cause of education, to have founded a university in New York, where he made his money.

New England and the South.

It is the strictly received opinion in certain quarters that, when the South has improved in religion and morality up to the New England standard, a wonderful revolution will have passed over the character and lives of the Southern people. It is assumed that gambling, drinking and dueling make up a large share of Southern life. Its people are supposed to be given over to horse-racing, card-playing, chicken-fighting and other abominations; the pistol and bowie-knife are considered emblems of the character of the people; while the church and the schoolhouse are accepted as the representatives of the moral and religious States of New England.

The New York World calls attention to certain facts brought to light by the census of 1870, which do not harmonize with this theory, so pleasing to our Northern friends. The following, for instance, discovers the fact that the New England States, in point of churches, are far behind the older Southern States. The six New England States have a white population of 3,445,043. These are furnished with 5,421 churches, containing 2,202,677 sittings. The States of Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia, with a white population of 3,440,903, have 11,567 churches, containing sittings for 3,660,984 persons. When the churches of New England look over the map of the world to select a field for their missionary labors, they turn instinctively toward the benighted South, which already has more than double the number of churches that New England has built for her own people. The churches in these Southern States provide sittings equal to the entire population, while New England has over 1,000,000 of inhabitants for whom no provision whatever has been made.

These same New England States return 12,673 paupers, or one in every 217; and 2,097 criminals, or one in 1,330; while the white population of these same Southern States return 7,062 paupers, or only one in every 468; and 1,174 criminals, or one in every 2,816. Here, again, the balance is decidedly in favor of the South.

From the same source we learn that among the negroes in the South there is one pauper in each 656, and one criminal in each 716 of their number; while among the negroes of the North there is one pauper in 143, and one criminal in each 204 of their number. From these figures we may conclude that the moral influences surrounding the colored people in the South, and the religious privileges provided for them, are far better than those which surround their race in the North.

If figures will not lie, then our friends in the North will have to reconstruct their estimate of Southern character, and the church-going people of New England must provide missionaries and church accommodations for over 1,000,000 of her own people, before they can resume their former tone when speaking of the moral degradation of their Southern neighbors.—Christian Observer.

A Stringent Civil Damage Law

The New York State Legislature, before adjourning, a few weeks ago, passed a bill which, if signed by the Governor, as it probably will be, will produce a sensation. It is aimed less to punish drunkards than the landlords whose premises are used to sell liquor, and the parties who sell liquor. Here is the text of the act now before the Governor:

SECTION 1. Every husband, wife, child, parent, guardian, employer or other person who shall be injured in person or property or means of support by any intoxicated person, or in consequence of the intoxication, habitual or otherwise, of any person, shall have a right of action in his or her name against any person or persons who shall, by selling or giving away intoxicating liquors, cause the intoxication in whole or part of such person or persons, and any person or persons owning or renting or permitting the occupation of any building or premises, or having knowledge that intoxicating liquors are to be sold therein, shall be liable, severally or jointly with the person or persons selling or giving away intoxicating liquors aforesaid, for all damages sustained, and for exemplary damages, and all damages recovered by a minor under this act shall be paid either to such minor, or to his or her parent, guardian or next friend, as the court shall direct; and the unlawful sale or giving away of intoxicating liquors shall work a forfeiture of all rights of the lessee or tenant under any lease or contract of rent upon the premises.

SECTION 2. In any action arising for violation of the provisions of this act, any justice of the peace in the county where the offense is committed shall have jurisdiction to try and determine the same, providing the amount of damages claimed does not exceed $200, in which case, and where the damages claimed do not exceed $500, the justice of the peace before whom the action is commenced shall associate with himself any other two justices of the peace in the same county, who shall have jurisdiction to try and determine the same.—Christian Advocate.

THE University of Virginia has recently been presented by Mr. Isaac L. Cary, of Richmond, with a tract of land in that city having a present valuation of $10,000, which is likely to be greatly enhanced in value by the rapid growth of the city.

The Christian Advocate.

THURSDAY, JUNE 19, 1873.

I GO.

Dost thou call me, Jesus, Master,
Forth to go and preach thy word?
Buckling on the Christian's armor,
Battling with the Spirit's sword,
Wouldst thou have me tell to sinners
All the meaning of thy birth?
Tell to men the blessed story
Of thy sojourn on our earth?

Why sufferedst thou, the sinless,
All that human hate could bring?
Why wast crucified, thou pure One?
Why thus died high heaven's King?
Ah! fathom, could I, all its depth,
Height or breadth—its measure take—
My tongue were double then to speak,
Swift the bread of life to break!

Jesus, born 'neath Bethlehem's star,
Jesus, on the sacred tree,
Jesus, ever for us pleading,
Thou, O Savior! art the Key
That unlocks the heart of Him
Whose love flows round us as a flood,
And, changing rebels into sons,
Gives us all things through thy blood.

This leading sinners to the cross,
'Tis indeed a blessed task!
Holy Spirit, come in power;
Jesus, save the souls I ask!
Yes, dear Lord, I'll work for thee,
Constant in thy grace abide,
Preaching Jesus all my days,
Guiding souls across the tide.

The Southern Review and the Temperance Cause.

MR. EDITOR: Those of your readers who also read the Southern Review, and who are advocates of total abstinence from the use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage, have no doubt seen with surprise and sorrow the extraordinary charges preferred against the class to which they from principle belong by the writer of the ninth article in the April number of that periodical for the current year. Since the Review has been published under the auspices of our church, many of our people who are also identified with the temperance movement have become subscribers to it, and have read with pleasure and profit many of the articles which it contained. But certainly they never expected to find within its pages a bitter assault upon principles which they hold dear, and upon themselves as the promoters thereof; and they claim the privilege to be heard in their defense, and to repel an attack which seems to them groundless and out of place.

The article in which the objectionable paragraphs are found is entitled "The Model Republic—Credit Mobilier," and seems designed in its main purpose to expose the venality and corruption which prevail among the public men of the country, especially as these were developed in the investigations made in relation to the Credit Mobilier. With this object of the writer we can all sympathize and wish him the fullest success in his undertaking, for certainly the political atmosphere seems to be tainted, and those who occupy public stations exhibit far too often a deficiency in that stern virtue and unbending integrity which are essential elements in all true statesmanship. It is, then, to be lamented that our reviewer descended from his high purpose to disparage men who are the peers of any in the land, and that he turned aside from the true path of his discussion to asperse a movement which he must excuse us for considering among the noblest and most philanthropic of the age.

It so happens that two of the prominent individuals implicated by the developments made through the Congressional committee appointed to investigate the affairs of the Credit Mobilier—Schuyler Colfax, the late Vice President of the United States, and Henry Wilson, the present Vice President—have been staunch and active supporters of the temperance cause for many years. It was this circumstance which seems to have given occasion to the fearful tirade pronounced by the reviewer. Now the simple fact of the connection of these men with the total abstinence enterprise, though they were guilty of all that has been charged, cannot create any legitimate presumption against that enterprise in the judgment of any fair-minded man. They are but two; the temperance host, thank God, numbers its thousands and its tens of thousands. To condemn and repudiate a cause on account merely of the sins of the smallest fragment of its supporters is out of the question. By such a test the noblest enterprises in which men have ever embarked could be proved to be wicked and worthless. Where would Christianity itself stand in such a trial? Every year, and in every country of Christendom, men who occupy the highest places in the church, and have even secured a reputation for piety, are excluded from its pale for immorality and crime. The mere connection of a few bad men with the church cannot create a presumption against its principles, and subject it to suspicion and aspersion. Messrs. Colfax and Wilson are both members of the church, it is presumed, and of course are prominent in its councils; then, if a connection with any system and an active interest in it are sufficient to render that system responsible for the moral obliquities of its adherents, then Christianity must take from the temperance cause a part of the burden which has been placed upon it by our reviewer.

It is not necessary to that defense which we wish to make to question the guilt of the parties implicated; we do not appear as their apologists in any respect. Yet this much may be due to justice: the committee of investigation, if I remember correctly, exonerated Mr. Wilson from blame in connection with the Credit Mobilier affair; and since the adjournment of Congress the editor of the Louisville Courier, a man of great mental vigor and acumen, and of unquestioned integrity, and a political opponent of Mr. Colfax, has declared in a double-leaded article in his journal that he had given to the testimony affecting Mr. Colfax, and to his explanations and defense, the most thorough analysis of which he was capable, and that he had no hesitation in expressing the conviction of his entire innocence in reference to the matters alleged to his detriment before the Congressional committee.

The writer of the article in the Review to which objection is made, at the conclusion of what he has to say of temperance men and their cause, affirms that "the precepts and practice of any sect which can so blunt the moral sense of its members as to cause them to accept as teachers such men as Harlan and Wilson and Pomeroy and Colfax, must be inherently wrong in their nature, vicious in their tendencies, and inevitably lead to harm." In this quotation there are several assertions made which it will be well to notice. It is declared that Messrs. Harlan, Wilson, Pomeroy and Colfax are teachers in the temperance movement, that their being such is proof that its supporters are blunted in their moral sense, and that this is the result of precepts and practice inherently wrong in their nature and vicious in their tendencies. Until recently there was nothing material alleged affecting the moral character of these men. They occupied high places in the councils of the country, they were beloved and honored in their respective States, they were accredited and influential members of the Christian church, and moved in the best society of the land. In addition they were men of talent and speaking ability, and consistent in their adhesion to temperance principles. Where was the harm in their advocating before the public any cause which they might choose to adopt, or in others listening to the arguments which they might present? There is no cause in the land, it is to be supposed, which would object to having among its advocates vice presidents and senators, especially if they were men of unimpeached character and fine ability. No conclusion can be drawn, then, as to the effect of temperance principles upon the moral sense of men from the fact that before the investigations of the Credit Mobilier committee certain men implicated thereby were recognized and honored advocates of those principles.

Where is the evidence that since the recent developments these men have been received as teachers in the temperance cause? Is it found in the fact that Mr. Colfax was invited to address a temperance meeting in the city of Baltimore and was "received with rapturous applause?" Well, it must be admitted that Baltimore is a great city, and I trust that it has many temperance men of character and influence within its limits; but it is only one city out of very many, and it is not to be presumed that it arrogates to itself authority to represent and speak for the temperance hosts of the world. It does seem to be a violation of all the rules of common sense to judge of the views of temperance men and the tendencies of the temperance cause by the action of one meeting in one city, and toward one man.

But our writer tells us in the same article that, after the facts affecting Mr. Colfax had been brought to light, he went to Philadelphia "to lecture on morality before a Christian association," and was received there also with "rapturous applause." Shall we judge of the tendencies of Christianity or of the views of its followers from the action of this one association in one city, and in regard to one man? We are also informed that, in the midst of these developments, Mr. Wilson was invited to deliver an address before the Christian Union of New York, but was prevented from attending by having to appear before the committee; and that the Rev. Dr. Tyng, the eminent Episcopalian clergyman of New York, in representing Mr. Wilson on the occasion, said that "to stand in the place of that honored layman was a great honor, as well as surprise. Such laymen as Henry Wilson, Schuyler Colfax and General Howard were entitled to all honor." Our reviewer himself, it is presumed, would scarcely affirm that, because Dr. Tyng and the Christian Union indorsed Mr. Wilson as a teacher of religion, all Christians received him as such, and that Christianity has a tendency to so blunt the moral sense of its professors as to make them receive as teachers loose and impure men; yet such is the legitimate result of the reasoning presented in the quotation made from the article under consideration.

Mr. Editor, temperance men are not ashamed of their cause or of their associates. They are perfectly willing to be judged by the general effects of their principles, and by the character and standing of the great body of those who profess and practice them. It may happen, as it has often happened to the church and to all benevolent institutions, that a man here and there, who has been prominent as a temperance advocate and has occupied high position in the temperance communities, may dishonor his profession and turn out to be a thief, or a receiver of bribes, or the perpetrator of some other offense; but we declare that all such are exceptional cases, and that neither our principles nor ourselves are responsible for them, and we do protest against any judgment founded thereupon.

It will be ascertained, I think, upon inquiry, that a majority of those enlisted in the temperance organizations, and who profess the temperance principles, certainly the most active and effective among them, are members in good standing of the various evangelical Christian denominations. This the writer of the present communication gives as the result of his observation after thirty years' connection with temperance societies in different States of the South. At this time, in the presiding elder's district of the Louisiana Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church South, in which this is written, every preacher in charge of a work is a pronounced temperance man, and in connection, I presume, with some temperance organization; and the same can be said of very many of the official and other members of the church. And a similar state of things, to a greater or less extent, prevails, doubtless, wherever the temperance reformation has made any substantial headway.

I will not here dwell upon the great names in Church and State who lived and died in the temperance faith. Stuart, Nott, Beecher and Potter, Walworth, Frelinghuysen, O'Neal and Greeley were certainly among the purest and most illustrious of their day and generation, and their memories will be honored and cherished in all the circles of the good to the latest day of the republic; yet they were not ashamed of the precepts and practice of the temperance cause, and consecrated their great talents to its promotion. If the identification of great and good men with any enterprise, if their cordial and energetic support through long years be any proof of the deservedness thereof, then temperance occupies the highest ground.

In conclusion, it is a matter of surprise that in the present day, with its light and knowledge, in view of the gigantic evils entailed by intemperance, and the imperative call made upon good men to combine and labor for their arrest and removal, a writer should be found, as intelligent as the one in question, to give utterance to the allegations contained in his article, and that our Review should give them currency.

With your permission, Mr. Editor, I will resume the subject in another communication. S.

MANSFIELD, Louisiana.

Ministerial Support.

MR. EDITOR: It is amazing to contemplate the quantity of ink and paper that is expended to enlighten the people on this subject. And when we have the patience and fortitude to read what is written, we frequently come to the same conclusion at which a certain young man arrived after having listened to a certain Bishop's sermon: we conclude the writers do not know what they are about. The light they cast on this subject is as bewildering as any ignis fatuus that ever misled a belated traveler. The last deliverance on this subject is in the ADVOCATE of May 8, and signed H. B. Smith.

The article of this Bro. Smith is a pretty fair sample of the articles generally published on this theme. I think it may be classed "strict middling." Let us look at this article. Bro. Smith commences thus: "I read a great deal in our Advocates and hear a great deal said upon this subject, and many plans are suggested as a remedy." That is a luminous beginning, and gives promise of luminosity all the way through. In my ignorance I always thought, before that sentence was indited by Bro. Smith, that it was the lack of ministerial support which needed doctoring. To apply the remedy to the thing itself is a new feature of this interesting subject. Our financial doctors have been diagnosing the wrong body, and of course have been physicking a system perfectly sound and well. After this they will see to it that they apply their remedies to the right thing.

Bro. Smith says: "As long as the preacher tells the church he is dependent upon them for a living, and tries to beg a support out of them, he will fail." This is a hard sentence to construe. What will he fail in? It seems to be clear that if a man tells the church he is dependent on it for a living, that there is no failure. The people can certainly understand such plain talk as that. If a man "tries to beg a support," how can that trial be called a failure? We have heard men beg, and it never entered our minds that their begging was anything else than a most glorious success. Bro. Smith says: "If he urges the stewards to more zealous exertions in his behalf he soon finds it difficult to get stewards." I have a secret notion that every man who writes on the subject of church finance gives us a chapter from his own personal history. And I am fearful Bro. Smith's stewards have not been men who "both know and love the Methodist doctrine and discipline." Why, sir, I have known stewards to listen to these "urgings to more zealous exertions in behalf of the preacher" with as much delight beaming on their faces as they ever exhibited when he was thrilling their souls with his pulpit eloquence. This is the thing they take pleasure in, and no preacher ever had a sleepy listener in a board of stewards when he dilated on this absorbing theme. Bro. Smith looked through the wrong medium when he wrote that sentence. It is not the appeal of the preacher for "exertions in his behalf" that causes stewards to quit their office, for that they like. It is the injustice of the people who refuse to pay the preacher for services rendered that disgusts them so much; hence they vacate the office.

Bro. Smith says: "Never will the ministry succeed until they withdraw their hopes from churches, stewards, financial schemes and all other worldly appliances, and, in humble supplication before a throne of grace, go to God and ask him for daily bread." "How great minds will differ." A few years ago Bishop Keener, in an article in the ADVOCATE, said that the conversion of the world was simply and purely a question of stewards! And now comes Bro. Smith and says that the ministry will never succeed with them. As he has shown our financial doctors their error in doctoring the wrong subject, it was reasonable that, after showing them the right subject, he should point out the remedy to be applied. This he has done in the plainest words. The success of the gospel depends upon the ministers "withdrawing their hopes from churches, stewards, financial schemes and all other worldly appliances," etc. Here is an item worthy of the gravest consideration of the next General Conference. "In humble supplication before a throne of grace, go to God and ask for daily bread!" Here Bro. Smith touches the core of the question. So that "the conversion of the world" is, after all, a mere question of bread. But the difficulty lies in the stubborn fact that preachers will not be satisfied with bread. "Bread alone" is exceedingly dry eating. A little butter occasionally makes it very palatable. This writer knows whereof he affirms when he says that bread is dry eating when taken by itself, and he don't believe that it is in the human stomach to be satisfied with it. It is a narrow view of human nature even to think so. I believe that Bro. Smith has pointed out the true remedy; but can he prevail on the patient to take it? If he can, then the problem that has puzzled the brains of nineteen centuries is solved. If the ministry resolves to live on bread alone, the support will never again be deficient.

Bro. Smith says: "If God has called me to preach, he has also pledged himself for my support." It is true I never heard of a preacher starving, though I have heard of one who had only clabber for breakfast! I think this statement of Bro. Smith's is too strong. It seems to me the history of Paul contradicts it flatly. He was evidently called to preach, yet he frequently worked with his own hands to support himself. In Paul's case, what became of the Lord's pledge? The Lord made no pledge for his support. On the contrary, the Lord said: "I will show him how great things he must suffer." Paul himself said: "Even unto this present hour we both hunger and thirst, and are naked, and have no certain dwelling-place, and labor, working with our own hands." In regard to support, the Lord has given no pledge to ministers which he has not given to others.

Bro. Smith says: "We have had our Quarterly Conference to adopt this resolution: 'That the stewards do not ask anybody for anything for the preacher.'" That resolution is a gem, and should be placed by the General Conference among the duties of the stewards.

Now why does Bro. Smith, after giving us these views, say: "I used to be ashamed to speak about my claim under our rule, but now I can stand up and preach about my support with as much grace as I can preach salvation to a ruined world?" After that "resolution" the pertinency of this last remark is on the wrong side. Having withdrawn all his hopes from churches, stewards, etc., what does he mean by his "claim under our rule?" Having taken the burden of his support from churches, stewards, etc., and laid it upon the Lord, what does he mean "by preaching about his support" to the people? Why talk to people about a thing in which they can have no interest?

Now, Mr. Editor, as I said, Bro. Smith's article is a good sample of the articles that are published on this subject. They are full of contradictions and inconsistencies, and false deductions from still falser premises. My dear brethren, take the advice of one who has thought much on this subject. Read carefully all the Bible says on it; then read all you can find that has been written since the canon of Scripture was closed; then write down with great care your matured thoughts; then do with that writing as Jehoiakim did with the writing of Jeremiah. I am satisfied this course will be very beneficial. OUTIS.

Romish Reasons.—Beards.

MR. EDITOR: Bishop Jewel, in his "Defense of the Church of England," thus gives the reasons alleged by Romanists for withholding the cup from the laity:

"The danger of shedding" (spilling;) "the carrying from place to place;" "the fouling of the cups;" "the trouble of men's beards;" "the turning of the wine into vinegar;" "the corruption or putrefaction;" "the impossibility of providing one cup that may be sufficient for all people," etc.

Most of the above objections, as will be perceived, are based on Romish notions respecting the condition of the wine after consecration, it having taken on such sacredness that it must be treated entirely out of the ordinary course. Others are very frivolous. But there is one that deserves more than passing attention—that is, the one that relates to beards.

Who is there that administers the holy communion nowadays that does not witness things that are highly repulsive? No man who wears a mustache of any length can well avoid dipping it into the wine when he partakes; and that is a very slovenly and indecent act; it is impious. No man has any right, human or divine, to sop his unclean appendage in the "cup of the Lord," and especially when others are to drink after him. Thousands would not take the cup after seeing such a thing. I would not. Perhaps one of the last things done by the bearded brother before approaching the altar was to pass a quantity of tobacco-juice out through his mustache, without either time or opportunity to wipe it dry before he dips it in the consecrated wine! I protest against this whole thing. It is unbecoming the sacredness of divine things, and due reverence to God and his worship. It is bad enough for clean men to have to take the sacred symbol after lips soiled and scented by tobacco; but to add this enormity is too much.

I see but one relief at hand. Let those who will wear a long, unclean mustache, and still wish to take this sacrament, wait until the last, and take it by themselves. The cups will be washed before the service. H.

NOW WHEN we are told by a scientific magazine that "the temperature of the pole is equal to the freezing-point of mercury," and we have found that mercury has frozen very recently in Minnesota, why is not an expedition organized to seek the pole in our own territory? It would be greatly cheaper and less dangerous than these trips up the Greenland coast, and besides the thing might be done in the summer-time, when linen coats are very pleasant in the Northwest.—Hearth and Home.

"AN UNKNOWN one among the crowd
That thronged the busy mart,
Let fall a word of hope and love,
Unstudied from the heart;
A whisper on the tumult thrown—
A transitory breath,
It raised a sister from the dust,
And saved her soul from death.
Oh, word! oh, germ! oh, fount of love!
Oh, thought at random cast,
Ye were but little at the first,
Yet mighty at the last."

MEN plant prayers and endeavors, and go next day looking to see if they have borne graces. Now God does not send graces as he sends light and rain, but they are wrought in us through long days of discipline and growth. Acorns and graces sprout quickly, but grow long before ripening.

Obituaries.

MRS. ANN M. P. ROGERS, nee Vincent, was born in Lunenburg county, Virginia, February 3, 1814, and died, at the residence of her son-in-law, Mr. William Whitsbue, Autauga county, Alabama, April 4, 1873.

Sister Rogers came from Virginia to this State some time in her youth. She professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1836, and from that time until her removal to the church triumphant she continued a faithful member of the same. She was married to Mr. Mills Rogers, January 16, 1840, and he is now left to travel life's journey alone. I did not get to see Sister Rogers during her sickness, but from her life and the testimony of her friends I feel confident that "all is well." God grant that her husband and only daughter may follow in her footsteps and meet her in heaven.

W. A. MONTGOMERY.

DIED, at the residence of Mr. James Duncan, near Covington, Louisiana, on the twenty-fourth of April, 1873, MOLLIE A. ARTHUR, wife of Captain E. Burns, and daughter of Jonathan Arthur, late of New Orleans.

She is gone—one more lost to the community in which her life was a testimony for truth and peace and gentleness. One more beloved friend—one whose kindness cheered the poor and lowly; one more that shed the light of love on the household, and made it a home indeed to all who entered it. Yet not altogether lost, for the thought of her will be a pleasant memory, and the remembrance of her cheerful and gentle virtues, and the example of her courtesy and goodness, will not soon cease to be a power with those who knew her. Not altogether lost, for her pure and gentle spirit at once winged its flight to the eternal God who gave it. She was the victim of a lingering and painful disease, that dread emissary of death—consumption—having long marked her for his own. Throughout her protracted illness she bore her suffering with that meekness, humility and patience characteristic of the true Christian, murmuring not, but submissively bowing her head to the will of that supreme Being in whom she had placed her faith.

A FRIEND AND SCHOOLMATE.

MRS. MARTHA WEATHERLY was born in Elbert county, Georgia (date unknown;) removed with her father, John Heathcock, to Madison county, Alabama, where she grew up, and was married to her first husband, Granville Glaze, who died A. D. 1828, leaving her an afflicted widow with a family. She was married in 1836 to her now aged and bereaved husband, A. H. Weatherly, who is left in his old age to tread life's pathway without her, who had been his companion for nearly forty years.

Soon after her first marriage she embraced religion, and united with the Methodist Church, in which she continued (with the exception of a few years, when she had no settled home) to live an acceptable and faithful member. In the relations of life, as wife, mother and neighbor, she tried to perform with fidelity all her duties. She was industrious and frugal, kind and charitable to the poor. In her old age, pressed down with many infirmities, she willingly consented to have a tent at the Bethel camp-ground, where she cheerfully entertained those who went up to worship God. For many years she had been a child of affliction, but with Christian fortitude endured her sufferings. On Sunday evening, April 24, 1873, after sitting up in bed and talking cheerfully with the family, she suddenly and without a struggle ceased to live.

A. P. SAGE.

ATTALA COUNTY, MISS., May 19, 1873.

DIED, of consumption, in Smith county, Mississippi, May 22, 1873, Miss NANIE MALICA LINGLE, aged twenty-one years, eleven months and two days. She was born in Smith county, Mississippi, June 20, 1851. Sister Nanie was converted when about ten years of age. As she had been taught or instructed by her mother and by the Sabbath school in the way in which she should go, she early embraced the truth—walked in the way to the end of life. She joined the Methodist Protestant Church in September, 1868, at Caney Creek church, during a protracted meeting conducted by Bro. C. McDonald; at which time and place she was again established in the faith once delivered to the saints. She became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South by the union of the Methodist Protestant Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church South. She was confined to her room for a long period, but appeared patient and resigned—so expressed herself to the writer. When the last hour had come she called each one, and bade them all farewell, saying to her father that she was thankful to her friends for kindness received from them during her sickness. Her mother, two brothers and a sister had preceded her to the glory-land. She leaves a father, a brother, five sisters and a stepmother behind her, who were very kind and loving to her. They mourn, but not as those who have no hope. We believe that while her seat in the church and family circle here below is vacant, she occupies a position in that multitude that no man can number. May Heaven's blessings rest upon and abide with the father and family, heart-stricken as they are. May they follow her as she followed Christ. R. A. SIBLEY.

BRO. M. S. KINABREW was born on the twenty-fourth of October, 1815, in Amite county, Mississippi, and was reared by pious parents. He was married to Miss Clemantine Haines in 1830, and moved to Claiborne parish, Louisiana, in 1851, where he professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1853, and died April 23, 1873, at the residence of his son-in-law, J. C. Morton. He was a man of feeble constitution, but, being a man of extraordinary prudence, he lived to see all of his children, who survive him, grown, having been blessed with all the advantages of his Christian counsel and example, as well as his prudence, wisdom and frugality. No community was ever blessed with a more consistent, upright, tone Christian gentleman; no ally with a kinder father or better provider. Although of a urally nervous temperament, so tious and watchful was he in deportment that even his intimate acquaintances regarded him as urally lamb-like. He was so sen lously honest that he was styled straight-edged Methodist. No standing his natural timidity quiring more than ordinary effort make any public demonstration, tremblingly, wherever duty moned, he was always found, forgetting that he should so live to exercise an influence for good those around him. So exemplary he that a brother who for years has been intimately acquainted with him remarked that from time he embraced religion until death he never heard him speak word or saw him do an act he could condemn. Many of the members of the Louisiana Conference remember his kindness. His sufferings were long and severe, continued to his bed for three months, yet not a murmur escaped his lips. He talked much of future prospects. Frequently his soul filled with peace and joy few days before his death he was told by the doctor that if he had any directions or counsel to give as to his worldly affairs, or to his family, was advisable for him to do so, whereupon he calmly made known disposition of his effects as he wished. He then called his family around him, spoke of the way he had lived to live, claimed to have been active, and begged them to imitate what was good in his life and improve by his errors. During this conversation he was so filled with the love of God that he overflowed with rejoicing. As the lamp of life grew dim he occasionally became bewildered, but even then I never whispered a word of promise into his ear, which frequently did, but that instantly the mind became rational, and he would whisper back, or, if unable, would aloud. J. H.

DIED, at her residence near Woodville, on the twentieth of November, 1872, Mrs. VERONA R. HOARD, widow of the late Colonel Daniel Hoard, in the seventy-third year of her age.

It is something gained in a world of selfishness to have enjoyed the society and friendship of one in whom piety had subdued nature's rebellious downments into obedience to the laws of Christ; and although, while living, a seeming ostentation would have grieved the spirit of this noble Christian woman, it is not fit that she should permit her silently to pass from her place in the church militant to her place in the church triumphant. The memory of a character so Christian, of a life so affluent of good works and of godly counsel, ought to be cherished by the church.

Sister Hoard was born in Brecknock June 17, 1800, and in early womanhood sought a home in the better world. Nature had endowed her with strength of will, ease of manner and amiability of disposition, so that could be neither a stranger nor the sport of chance. Worth gave her social position and multiplied her friends. In 1822 she became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church in New Orleans. She sought the forgiveness of sin and the witness of acceptance with God, and in a short but long experience realized peace with God through Jesus Christ. She was married in 1827 to Baker Trieber, was widowed in 1835. In 1838 she was married to Colonel Hoard. At that time was at that time superintendent of the New Orleans and Nashville railroad. Of her first marriage a single daughter was born; of the latter two sons, William Winans and Daniel Steele, both of whom preceded her to the grave. The chastisements of a Father's hand were grievous, but his grace was sufficient for her. The family subsequently removed to Woodville, where Colonel Hoard died in 1869, honored and loved by the community.

Sister Hoard's religious character controlled her whole life. It was manifest in the varied fortunes which befell her—in domestic and in social life; in her zeal for the church, in the adornment of her home; in her kindly offices to the poor, and in her liberal hospitality to her guests. The gentle spirit which won the confidence and love of the young, in the meek remonstrance which checked the resentment of the old. Never were guests more welcome than at her door, and never were they mind more at ease than in her presence. Stately in her mien, generous in her spirit, generous in her sympathies and in the multitude of her good deeds, her face was as the face of the sunshine of heaven had rested upon it. In the season of prosperity she had indulged her benevolent nature in generous giving, and in the adversity came her lavish hand bestowed as God gave her all. Frugal, thoughtful, prayerful, she of life's relations—mother, friend—she was an example to others. As a Christian she had the good word of God, and had the power of the world to come. In the cheerful, joyous assurance of the divine favor she had learned to be patient, forgiving and true. Decided in her preferences for her own church, she had cultivated generality toward others. In deed, earnest sympathy with every interest of the church, the weight of years abated nothing from her. A light shone upon her path, and she hastened forward until her journey ended. God seemed to have granted her prayer, that she should be spared the agony of a lingering death. She slept softly and sweetly to the fruition of her long-sought heaven.

To the writer she was a mother and a friend. Her gentle hand bathed his fevered brow in boyhood, and her cordial hospitality had cheered him when he was a mid gray-headed.

... were mostly fair, sandy-beard-

... Under an old "southwester"
... softer eyes—the hazel eyes of a ...ooking lassie, drenched and dripping like the men. Further from the light, another girl turned to look; she was fair, and freckled with the sun, and had her wet yellow hair bound not ungracefully about her head. A red cravat, a yellow oilskin jacket, a white handkerchief, gave dashes of color to the limp figure. No art could have hit the chastened touches that faded into the blackness. At our surprise the girls smiled. Why they were there was soon explained. They were sisters to two of the crew, and had been to "keep house" for two crews at the Bolsdale fishing. For a couple of months they had lived in the boat or in the peat-built hut on shore, cooking and working for the toilers absent on the deep. Living without comfort or motherly care, their gentle voices had only softened the ways of those about them. There was no shelter in the boat but what was theirs; they had the coats and cravats of the mindful men about them; they were cared for as the gently-nurtured never are cared for, since they never risk such danger.

Chilled and cold as all the crew were, our whisky flask was handed out. "Nae, thanks," said the fisherman, in return, handing back the flask; "nane here drink whisky, and we get on brawlies without it." The temptations of a "dram" could not be stronger, but they would not be tempted. Among the wet ballast, the fire-place—an old broken pot—was set up, and with trouble the wet pents were kindled. A kettle for coffee was set over the fire, and a slender store of sea biscuit was divided. Before the meal was begun one of the men said: "We'll take the books."

From crannies behind boarding small hymn-books were brought out by the girls and the men. The books were drenched, were without boards, and the wet leaves were difficult to turn. The hymn was named and the first line sung. "Your owre heich, Wullie!" said one of the girls; to which Willie answered: "I'm nane owre heich, Mary!" and he continued to lead the tune. Under the lamp, in his red night-cap he sat, with the dull light falling on his weather-beaten cheeks, his tawny beard and worn oilskin. Beside him sat, as they best could, the other fishermen and the two girls leaning toward the light. They were but rugged people to vulgar eyes.

While they sang, through their thin music broke the storm, deadening its pathos in the thunder of the squalls. And the stricken worshipers paused betimes to listen, with their voices silenced in the blasts from Ben Eval, blanching the Minch into spray.

With fervor the old man prayed their sins might be forgiven, and their hearts softened to God and to one another. He prayed thankfully for the mercies shown to themselves; and it seemed as if that humble service, amid peril and hardship elsewhere unknown, bore another sense from the tutored words spoken in carpeted mansions.

The hot coffee was handed round in tin cans and such dishes as remained unbroken. It was some comfort in the cold and the wet, and the meal was further helped by timely supplies of bread and butter handed from the yacht by our own skipper. The fishermen laughed over the unexpected succor, and had pleasantries with the girls over their good appetites. There was no want of mirth among these Christian men; but their laugh was neither straightened nor boisterous; they were in all their ways as other men.

When their pipes were lighted we could tell them of later news than they had heard; of scant fishing at Campbelton, and of a heavy fishing at Dunbar. "That's what we have been waiting to hear," said one of the crew. "What say ye, lads, to take the Grangemouth Canal, and send the lassies home with the steamer?" "But fat ken ye of the road?" said one of the men. "Some o' us hae been to Lismore afore," he was answered. "But what about the gulf?" said the dubious speaker, referring to the whirlpool of Corryvrecken, known as the "Gulf" all about the West Coast. "It is a bad place to fa' in wi'," one said. "It's no' to be recommended;" our own skipper hinted, with some humor in his voice.

We offered them a chart; but a hand-sketch would better suit their purpose. Not a bit of paper could be found but the blank leaf of the Bible; and not without doubt of irreverence was it torn out, to prevent the sketch being made while the paper was part of the volume. But the touch was not without its own suggestiveness.

At the forecastle stove of the yacht the two girls dried their clothes and warmed themselves. It was proposed they should keep the cabin for the night. "Nae, nae," said the captain of the crew; "the lassies are well enough in their ain boat." And to press the invitation further would have been rude. But wet soldiers in the trenches were not in poorer shelter than the sisters of these fishermen, who were without thought of repining. In their own homes these fishermen's daughters are spoken of as exemplary, and we were ready to believe the fact. Hardship mates nearer with virtue than vice, and a life of fortitude grows fearless of temptation.

On their wet sacks, in their oil-skins and sea-boots, the fishermen lay down to rest with the feeble lamp swinging over their bronzed faces, and the stars of the clearing heavens shining through the open seams of their shelter.—J. D. Bell, in Sunday Magazine.

Decaying Friendships.

The friendships formed by people after they have passed their thirtieth year are by no means so sentimental, so ostentatiously thorough, as those contracted when people are younger. Middle-aged men make little if any attempt at being confidential toward each other. Their converse, instead of being of a personal character, is principally upon politics, theology and business, seasoned by a certain amount of gossip. Matured women, on the other hand, are more confidential, but they are not, so demonstrative and gushing as girls just out of their teens. They do not make protestations of eternal affection. Still, they tell as much as they know and learn as much as they can about their neighbors and their affairs, and discuss matrimony and dress in a manner which shows how much they relish doing so. Properly prompted, they will, too, enlarge upon their own affairs. Into sympathetic ears they will pour the story of how their first-born, as fine a youth as ever lived, is developing certain characteristics calculated to cause their guardians serious inconvenience; how their husband is one of the most extraordinary men in existence, and possesses the rare virtue of entertaining due affection and respect for his wife; and other similar matters of an equally important and interesting character. But these elderly friends make no pretense of being bound up in one another; they steer clear of lengthy correspondence; and they do not mourn—that is to say, beyond indulging in a few hackneyed conventionalities—when they fail to see each other except at rare intervals. Having their own families and interests to look after, they virtually concede that they have no time for elaborate friendships. This is, of course, when they are married. When they are single the case is slightly different, and it not unfrequently happens that spinsters knock up a species of lasting friendship. They go nowhere except in each other's company, and they co-operate in each other's schemes, whether it be one for the founding of a blanket club or one for the advancement of the principles of the Women's Rights Association. They perhaps say hard things of each other, they probably repeat these matters, with sundry elaborations, behind each other's backs, but they never regularly quarrel. If Miss A. is maligned, Miss B. is quick to resent the affront, and let Miss A. know what has been said of her, which last act is, however, a somewhat questionable kindness. The two keep together, and that is the main thing. It is a small matter that their motives for so doing are found, when fairly analyzed, not to be purely disinterested, but that they cultivate each other's society for the want of better, and because it is among the necessities of their nature that they should have some willing ear to pour scandal into, and some ready tongue to amuse them in like manner.

There is, then, very little really genuine friendship. The present constitution of society is unfavorable to its growth. When everything is artificial, and everything is conducted upon the high pressure principle, it is impossible for it to flourish. We may regret this, but the best thing is at once to admit the truth.—Liberal Review.

Age an Element of Strength in the Christian Ministry.

In almost all the churches the cry is: "Give us a young man." And so in the economy of to-day the old men, the fathers of experience, are put in by-places, or quietly shelved, while young men fresh from the schools, with soft fiber, minus the ripeness of experience, crude and unbalanced, are pushed into the focal light of prominent places, and burdened, and broken oftimes with what hardened manhood must carry with trembling.

This is a double mistake. It dwarfs the young; it prematurely sends the fathers into the "lean and slippered pantaloon." In these prominent places, amid these multiplied demands, the young man ripens at once. Growth is arrested, and dwarfing is almost certain. Indeed, if a man start at the top, where can he go, unless it be down? Yet this is the way the church of to-day is treating her young men.

The church also suffers. She cannot afford to put from her chief places the men of years and experience. Her situation is critical. Her demands wondrous. Her Von Moltkes, her Garibaldis, her graybeards, must lead her armies; her Farraguts must tramp her quarter-decks, lash themselves to her mast-heads, till the purple of the morning of triumph is followed by the blazing day of the world's redemption. But it is said that age brings feebleness, is juiceless and fruitless. Here ministers are faulty, though this may be partially a result of the folly of starting from the top for which the church clamors. This feebleness is not the result of continued activity; it is the result of indolence.

Dry rot begins in any man as soon as he ceases to go forward. The ministry are not exempt. As soon as one rests on accumulated sermon material, and ceases to originate, that moment he begins to die. Old sermons are good, and need not, should not always at least, be thrown away. But fresh, better things must be. It is not the secret of oratory to carry each fresh effort higher than the one that preceded it? Must not the orator always surpass himself, or suffer in reputation? This is pre-eminently true of the Christian minister. Each year must be better than the last; each year he must develop more creative power in sermon effort, more life and fire in utterance, more power of personality, more piety, more spirituality, more of every element essential to grandest success in the ministry. Living according to this rule, age would be recognized as a noble thing, and the clamor of the churches would be for the men whose silver locks are the symbols of age and power. Then the necessary limits of human life would be the only opportunity for retirement from an active, success-crowned ministry. And who can tell but here might rise a succession of Elijahs who should spurn the shroud and the cypress at the ending of their labors and days, and ride in chariots of fire into the heavens of God?—Zion's Herald.

THREE good reasons why it is best to plant small instead of large trees: They cost less at the nursery, expense of packing and transportation is less, and, losing but few roots, they are more certain to live.

Eastern Bottles.

The "bottle" is a necessary article in the tent of Arabian shepherds. It holds water and other liquids, and is frequently used as a pitcher. The Eastern bottle is made of a goat or kid skin, stripped off whole, [illegible] ling the belly; the openings made by cutting off the tail and legs are sewed up, and when filled it is tied about the neck.

The Arabs and Persians never go a journey without a small leathern bottle by their side like a scrip. These skin-bottles preserve their water, milk and other liquids in a fresher state than any other vessels they can use. The people of the East, indeed, put into them everything they mean to carry to a distance, whether dry or liquid, and very rarely make use of boxes and pots, unless to keep such things as are liable to be broken. They inclose these leathern bottles in woolen sacks, because their beasts of carriage often fall down under their load, or cast it down on the sandy desert. This method of transporting the necessaries of life has another advantage: the skin-bottles not only preserve them fresh, but defend them against the ants and other insects, which cannot pierce the skin; and they also prevent the fine dust, of which immense quantities are constantly moving about in the arid regions of Asia, from reaching them. It is for these reasons that provisions of every kind are inclosed in vessels made of the skins of animals.

These bottles are liable to be rent, when old or much used, and at the same time are capable of being repaired. In the book of Joshua we are informed the Gibeonites "took wine-bottles, old and rent, and bound up." This is perfectly according to the custom of the East; and the manner in which they mend their old and rent bottles is various. Sometimes they sew in a piece; sometimes they gather up the torn place in the manner of a purse; sometimes they put in a round flat piece of wood, and by that means stop the hole.

The liability of skin-bottles to rend will explain a figure used in one of our Lord's discourses: "Neither do men put new wine into old bottles; else the bottles break, and the wine runneth out, and the bottles perish; but they put new wine into new bottles, and both are preserved." Being made of raw hide, they are, when new, capable of accommodating themselves to the swelling of the liquor as it ferments. But when they have been once stretched out in this way, and have become old and shriveled through use, they do not admit of any further enlargement, and will therefore give way if new wine is poured into them.—Early Days.

ROBERT HALL'S OPINION OF SERMONS.—The late Rev. Robert Hall and the late Rev. D. White, of Cirencester, were fellow-students at Bristol College. Mr. Hall always cherished a high regard for Mr. White. A little before his own death Mr. Hall visited Cirencester, and renewed the associations of college days. On finding that his friend was in the habit of preaching three sermons every Sabbath; he remonstrated with him in his own characteristic style. On a former occasion, when some one said the same to the peerless preacher, who had been demurring to three pulpit engagements on the Sabbath, he is reported to have answered: "True, sir, quite true, sir; a great man may preach three times, but a wise man won't." On this occasion, just as Mr. Hall was stepping into his carriage, on shaking hands with his old fellow-student, he exclaimed: "Now, Bro. White, don't preach three times, sir—don't, sir. I wouldn't preach three sermons, sir, if I could spit sermons." Not the number, but the length of sermons seems to be the question of the hour; but it is not recorded how often the preacher was in the habit of holding possession of the pulpit, who one evening addressed a rather crowded assembly, in which the late Rev. W. Jay and Mr. Hall sat side by side. This gentleman was descanting with an interminable volubility on the different horses in Revelation—the "white horse," and the "red horse," and the "black horse," and the "pale horse." Mr. Jay says he did so "to little purpose," and he adds: "Mr. Hall sat very impatiently, and when the sermon closed he pushed out toward the door, saying: 'Let me out of this horse-fair.'"

THERE are good men of large means and large hearts who love to respond to every really deserving call. To them I go with perfect confidence that they will meet cheerfully any demand that I make in the name of the common Father of us all. They are his stewards, and they use their means as his. A gentleman in this city has again and again, within the last twenty years, sent me $25 and $50 and $100 at a time for special objects of charity, and, though he is not fifteen minutes' walk from me, I have never seen him; he is an Episcopalian, and I have $50 from him now in my pocket for a poor and sick Presbyterian home missionary, whose wants I brought to his notice. Another friend travels much, but if I write a letter to him at his store, it is forwarded to him anywhere, and the mail brings back the help that is needed. Such givers are the almoners of God. There is a spiritual affinity of such givers with the great Giver. They are governed by that principle of religious faith which makes the believer a partaker of the divine nature. Far more holy than monks or ascetics of any name, active in business, enjoying the gifts of Providence themselves, they are thankful when a genuine case of want is put before them to be relieved. And this is my idea of a religious life; it is a life unspotted from the world, and filled up with deeds of charity.—Irenæus, in Observer.

MULTIFARIOUS reading weakens the mind more than doing nothing, for it becomes a necessity at last, like smoking; and is an excuse for the mind to lie dormant while thought is poured in, and runs through a clear stream over unproductive gravel, on which not even mosses grow. It is the idlest sort of idleness, and leaves more of impotency than any other.—F. W. Robertson.

M. SAMUEL ROLLAND, the oldest of the three first missionaries sent out by the Protestant churches of France to preach the gospel to the heathen, entered upon his work at the Cape of Good Hope, Africa, in 1829, and died at Hermon, among the Basutos, on the eighteenth of last January.

AN EDITION of the New Testament in the Russian language, under the sanction of the Greek Church, is going into circulation. The agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society, at Odessa, reports the sale of 40,000 copies within the first six months of 1871, and hopes to sell 100,000 annually.

NINE hundred and ninety-three home missionaries were employed last year by the Presbyterian Home Mission Board, at average salaries of $275. This was supplemented by people on the home fields, but it shows that Presbyterian missionaries are working largely by faith and not by sight.

IN THE General Assembly, Baltimore, May 21, a resolution recommending the appointment of two commissioners to confer with similar commissioners from the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church South, and the Old School Synod of Missouri, was adopted without debate and unanimously.

LAST YEAR the Presbyterians of the United States reported 35 synods, 166 presbyteries, 767 candidates, 323 licentiates, 4,441 ministers, 4,730 churches, 28,758 added upon examination, 21,616 added on certificate, 468,164 communicants, 485,762 members of Sunday school, and a total of $10,086,526 contributions.

THE newly-consecrated Bishop, Auer, of Cape Palmas, Africa, was educated as a missionary in the celebrated mission house at Basle, and has labored several years in Africa. It is his intention to secure artisans and mechanics, as well as ministers, for his new field, who will assist him in his work of Christian civilization.

THE late Episcopal Convention of the Diocese of Florida passed a resolution condemning most emphatically all fairs, balls, festivals, concerts, lotteries, theatrical representations, and all such methods of obtaining money for religious purposes, as lowering the standard of Christianity, and contrary to the teachings and spirit of the gospel.

THE Divinity School of Yale College graduated twenty-two young ministers several weeks ago, six of whom have already received calls from churches, two intend to become foreign missionaries, and a number will complete their studies abroad. At the meeting of the alumni Prof. Day stated that the number of students in the school was ninety-nine—a number larger than in any other Congregational seminary in the country. The school has furnished 851 ministers during the last half century, of whom about 540 are still alive.

OF THE 40,000 inhabitants of Sierra Leone 14,000 are professedly members of the Church of England. The pastoral care of these is conducted by two chaplains, ten native pastors and two European missionaries, with two native curates, all under the superintendence of an active and devoted European Bishop. The pastors are supported from a church fund, aided by the society and the local government, to which the native Christians contributed last year about £950. This is an increase of more than £200 on the year previous; and the local committee attribute the advance to the Bishop's influence and exertions.

AT THE last stated meeting of the managers of the American Bible Society, May 1, communications were received from Mr. Andrew M. Milne, Montevideo, giving a favorable report of his year's labors; Mr. H. J. Maneche, Puerto Plato, as to the Bible in San Domingo; Bible agency in St. Petersburg, proposing enlarged work for the Bible cause in that country; from Rev. Dr. Henry Blodget, Peking, stating progress in printing the Old Testament in Mandarin Colloquial, the New Testament being already through the press. Grants of books were made to the amount of $2,838.15, and foreign appropriations of $6,000.

ACCORDING to the late report of the Arcot mission, referred to in this week's account of the Congregational Union, and mainly manned by the Scudders, there are in the Arnee field belonging to this mission 201 communicants and 42 catechumens. In several congregations there has been a falling off, on account of the renewed activity of the Roman Catholics and the withdrawal of some who found themselves disappointed in expected worldly advantages by joining the Christians. There has, notwithstanding, been a total gain of 43 members. One station has been abandoned, and three new ones established. In one town, where preaching had been kept up for some time after the names of adherents had been obtained, another mission society stepped in and stole the sheep.

THE Italian News notices a rumor in Rome that unless new cardinals are created any election of the new Pope made by the actual college of cardinals will be contrary to ecclesiastical laws. The present number of cardinals is 45, and it ought to be at least 70, and the twenty-fourth session of the Tridentine Council prescribes that the cardinals should be possibly chosen in equal number from all nationalities. Of the 45 cardinals, 33 are Italians, five French, three Spaniards, two Austrian, one German, one Irish. The 26,000,000 of Italian Catholics are represented by more than half the number of cardinals, while the 180,000,000 of Catholics have a number of representatives much less in proportion than the Italians.

ON TUESDAY, May 6, at five P. M., says the Methodist, Bishop Harris left the depot in Jersey City, bound for New York, by way of Japan, China, India and Europe. Drs. Eddy and Reid, on the part of the Mission Rooms, and J. M. Phillips, Esq., of the Book Concern, accompanied him to the train and bade him good-by. The Bishop was impressed with the magnitude and possible dangers of his expedition, but goes in good health and spirits. This is the third episcopal visit to the oriental missions. First was that of Bishop Thomson, the story of which he told so admirably. Next went Bishop Kingsley, to die in Beirut, on his homeward way. Bishop Harris has, of course, an intimate acquaintance with the previous history of the missions, and we believe his business inspection will be worth all the tour will cost the church.

THE toleration of converts from Mohammedanism, though nominally conceded after the Crimean war, does not practically exist in the Turkish empire. Movements toward inquiry, and even toward embracing the gospel—things scarcely known in former times—are increasing perceptibly among the Moslem population. But the same story is repeated again and again; inquirers come forward and for a time show signs of attention and interest, when suddenly they are drawn back by some invisible influence and visit the missionary no more. At Smyrna the missionaries mention proofs that the gospel is studied in many a Turkish home, and that not a few are secretly impressed with its paramount excellence. In Palestine Mr. Klein speaks of the spirit of fanaticism gradually giving way, and of Moslems inquiring into Christianity with some degree of fairness and earnestness.

THE Primitive Methodists held a great anniversary meeting in Mr. Spurgeon's Tabernacle, London, in April last. Before the meeting a social reunion took place, to which a numerous company sat down. The treasurer's report, which was read during the evening, showed that a total of about $140,000 had been contributed for missions during the year. This, with the amount raised for the building of mission chapels and schools, will raise the amount to $160,000, which is the largest amount realized by the society in one year. The progress of the church during the past twenty-two years has been as follows: 57,000 members; 443 ministers; 5,000 local preachers; 2,155 chapels; 187,000 scholars; 2,800 teachers. The increase in the number of chapels for twenty-two years has been at the rate of nearly two per week. The denomination have 6,000 places of worship, 1,000 traveling preachers, 15,000 local preachers, and nearly 300,000 children in Sunday schools, taught by over 48,000 teachers.

THE Baptists in Sweden now number about 220 churches and 9,000 communicants. The advance in that direction has been so rapid (since twenty years ago there was not a Baptist minister in the kingdom) that Mr. Wiberg, missionary to Stockholm, writes to the new Baptist Mission Rooms in Tremont Temple, Boston: "May your society long be allowed to flourish there and extend its beneficial influence all over the world. Why should not, in time, the whole world come under the influence of the Baptists? Why not, indeed? And under the influence of the Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Congregationalists, Methodists and of all good people, of whatever name, who love our Lord Jesus Christ?" From Orebo, Sweden, Mr. Backman writes that hundreds within the last few months have been converted in that vicinity. There have been 49 members admitted to the church of which Mr. Backman is pastor since New Year's, most of them young people. A remarkable revival is also reported from the north of Sweden as being in progress in January.

THE work carried on by the American United Presbyterians in their Syrian mission is reported as follows by Dr. Patterson, who has recently joined the mission: In the church at Damascus two public services are held each Sunday—one in Arabic, the other in English—with an average attendance of from 60 to 80 hearers. In the afternoon an Arabic Sunday school and Bible class meet, numbering respectively from 60 to 80 and from 15 to 20 scholars. A graded day school is also supported in Damascus by the mission, with 60 boys in attendance, the senior department serving as a normal school to fit teachers for the out-stations. There are eight schools in the other mission stations, training 244 pupils. This mission numbers 350 adherents, recognized as Protestants, 95 of whom have been received as communicants. Of this number 17 have removed to other Protestant churches in Syria or Egypt, 10 have died, three been suspended from church fellowship. The present special need of the mission is a girls' school in Damascus and a competent lady superintendent.

A Strong Delusion.

We are not sure but Paul had modern spiritualism in his mind when he wrote: "And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie: that they all might be damned who believe not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness." There is not at this hour so great and fatal an error as this one of spiritualism. It is a "mystery of iniquity" which works everywhere, and its coming "is after the working of satan, with all power and signs and lying wonders, and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish." This mystery of iniquity is organized, as will be seen by refereuce to the proceedings of a convention of spiritualists, which will be found on our first page. Societies are in nearly all the larger towns and cities, and a considerable literature, in the shape of papers, books and tracts, exists, and obtains an extensive circulation. It has assumed the form of a religion, which attracts to its singular communion skeptics, infidels, sensualists, and the unstable and ignorant of every creed, "who are tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive."

We doubt of the supernatural in spiritualism, as exhibited in any of the phenomena of table-rappings, writing mediums, planchette and the scances. The mysteries connected with a thousand other things within our daily observation are as inexplicable as those which have arrested the credulous attention of these victims of superstition and fanaticism. The advance of science will, doubtless, in time explode the supposed supernatural character of the phenomena, and show that they are owing to certain mental and material laws, which operate uniformly, and without the interposition of disembodied spiritual agents. Allowing, however, that such interposition takes place, and that the dead are permitted in some way to communicate, it is a wickedness to invoke them, which, as witchcraft and necromancy, are denounced by the Bible in the severest terms. In any case it is a delusion, a wile of satan, a snare of the devil, by which thousands are entrapped and ruined. We have seen none but evil fruits connected with it. It sends many to the madhouse; of Christians who have been engulfed in this dark and diabolical whirlpool, it makes sensualists, monomaniacs and infidels. It leads no unbelievers to Christ, it does not reform the life, it does not purify the heart. The shipwreck of faith wrought by this most pestilent error is truly alarming, while the effects on the morals and welfare of society are such as to excite the gravest apprehension. The legitimate results are seen in the abominations of free love, as in the Woodhull-Claflin development. Left to work out its full and matured harvest of results, it would bring about a state of society as imbruted and degraded as that of Sodom and Gomorrah, and make of our already sufficiently corrupt society a complete hell.

An evil of this magnitude, apparently increasing, and insinuating itself into every community, should be carefully watched and exposed.—There are many of the ignorant and unwary, and especially many of the young, who by timely warning may be kept from the abyss which yawns before them. Not with all, but with some, this insane and absurd credulity does look like a judicial visitation. After living long and rioting in sin, resisting the Holy Spirit, neglecting and opposing the gospel, and rejecting Christ, this "strong delusion" has been sent, and they have been abandoned to the refuge of lies. There is nothing more dangerous than to tamper with this snare of the evil one; and there can be nothing more offensive to God than to turn from him and from his truth to this shallow but most deceiving form of error. It is a leaven worse than that of the Pharisees, and more insidious and deceptive in its approaches.—Much of the popular literature of the day is tinged with it, and a regularly organized propagandism is at work to spread the poison.

Swedenborgianism, although the probable source, is not the vile and degraded thing which this spiritualism is, but it is a near neighbor, combining mysticism and spiritism with more culture, and usually with more Christian faith and experience. The influence and tendencies of this system—the New Jerusalem Church—are doubtless to swell and feed this lower form of error, and they are perhaps the more dangerous because of their more respectable and quasi Christian sources. We know many estimable and intelligent people who have been perverted from the gospel, and have been brought under the power of the New Jerusalem doctrines. It is sad to think of the thousands who are being carried away by this fascinating mysticism. This is the more refined of the two, is advocated by educated and refined people, and commands many graceful pens, both in prose and verse, in its propagation and defense. Swedenborgian doctrines are held in connection with many of the teachings of the Bible, and their greatest power to damage is owing to this fact. They come in this disguise as a higher and truer exposition of the gospel, and are pervaded by a subtle and most seducing plausibility. Spiritualism pure and simple, with its absurd seances, and the foolish deliverances of its mediums, draws to itself, for the most part, the coarse elements of infidelity and vice; Swedenborgianism operates upon another class, and addresses itself more to men of Christian opinions, deceiving the very elect by its affectation of regard for the Bible.

The literature of this school is already extensive, and is found in many captivating books in which there is no direct avowal of sympathy with the New Jerusalem mode of thought. Tares are being sown broadcast, and often in places where we look for no such manifestations of error. It behooves our preachers to be more on the alert, to study these peculiarly dangerous phases of false doctrine, and to administer the antidote of gospel truth with reference to this fatal spell which the powers of darkness are casting over the people. In order to silence these "wizards that peep and that mutter," the supreme authority of the law and the testimony must be invoked, and the deep and purifying spirituality of gospel doctrines and experience must be vigorously exhibited and enforced. The mystery of iniquity doth already work—it pervades the thought of the times, and, serpent-like, is creeping into our churches, and twining itself around the pillars of the sanctuary.

The Southern University.

MR. EDITOR: This institution, located at Greensboro, Alabama, with a faculty consisting of A. S. Andrews, D. D., president; Prof. Casey, ancient languages; Prof. Moore, mathematics; Prof. Summers, chemistry and natural philosophy; Dr. Peterson, medical department; and Judge Coleman, Mr. Garrett and Mr. Seag, law department, with adjunct professors, has had a most prosperous career during the present session, having matriculated one hundred and fifty-one students. Forty-five of these have been young preachers and the sons of ministers, who have been taught free of tuition in all the departments. Twenty-seven are in training for the ministry and eighteen are licentiates. The students have been industrious and dutiful to an unusual and commendable degree, and not a single one has been dismissed the last two years. Their moral deportment has been highly praiseworthy.

The annual commencement will begin on Sunday, the twenty-ninth instant. There will be eight graduates in the literary department and one in the medical, and quite a number who will receive diplomas in schools. Dr. Wheat, of Mississippi, will preach the commencement sermon; Bishop Keener will preach to the theological students; Mr. Benners, of Greensboro, will deliver the address to the alumni; General John T. Morgan, of Selma, will deliver the annual address, and President Andrews the baccalaureate. The public and all the patrons of learning, and of the University especially, are earnestly invited to attend the exercises.

It may be a matter of interest to the public to know that forty young men have boarded themselves, in a fitness department, at a cost of from $8 to $10 each per month. The education of students for the ministry free of tuition is mainly done at the cost of the faculty, for which they are entitled to the cordial and Christian commendation of the church. If the sum of $25,000 could be added to the endowment fund this burden could be removed, and the University be placed on a firm and enduring foundation—that is, if the boys and young men in this State alone, of Methodist parentage, who go to colleges, were sent to the University; and the $25,000 could easily be raised within the bounds of the Conferences which patronize the University, or by some liberal capitalist, who would as soon build up what has been almost overthrown by political convulsions as to found another University in the South under his own name. We should build up and utilize institutions which, in the providence of God, have been left to us. This a liberal and generous people will do.

This appeal is made in behalf of our beloved Southern University in the spirit of charity to all institutions of learning, and with the hope and faith that the Methodists of Alabama will see to it that the Southern University is first made self-sustaining and placed on a sure foundation before they turn their attention and means to other like institutions. Let us build on the foundations that be, and have stood the tests of war and bankruptcy.

I cannot close this report without expressing the highest commendation of the energy and efforts displayed and made by Dr. Andrews, the president, since his connection with the University, in improving the buildings and grounds, and more particularly in sustaining its character and prosperity, and principally at his own expense. The church should sustain him, and at least divide the burden. The other members of the faculty are deserving and worthy of like commendation. I make this report without consultation with the trustees, and am alone responsible for it.

WILLIAM M. BYRD,
President Board of Trustees.

Our Missionary Plan.

The Southern Christian Advocate regards our present plan as unwise, enfeebling, embarrassing. The plan already tried of two boards, and an entire separation of the foreign and domestic missions, did not give satisfaction. The present plan may be abused, and has its points of friction, but any other would perhaps be open to some objections. The Southern says:

A palpable embarrassment to our missionary efficiency as a church has been, and unless remedied must continue to be, the failure to provide a plan which commends itself to our people as equitable and judicious. The "forty per cent. plan," which has been in operation for the past four years, works with friction, and meets with an amount of opposition which tells unfavorably upon the collections. There is an element in it which alienates the Conferences from the general board, and creates between them a spirit of antagonism rather than the sympathy and concord which ought to exist, and which are essential to the best results. We look forward with solicitude to the next General Conference for the institution of some system in the management of our missionary interests more in harmony with the general sentiment of the church than the present plan. Part of the action of the board at its late meeting shows that its members feel the necessity of some change. The remedy they propose, however, will not, it seems to us, reach the difficulty, and we venture to predict will find but limited favor with the General Conference. The proposition is to give the board absolute control over all the money raised for missions throughout the several Conferences. Unless we misinterpret the reluctance with which two-fifths of their collections is yielded to such direction, there is little hope of securing their assent to the relinquishment of the whole amount. If those charges in the older Conferences which are not self-supporting are to be continued as pensioners upon the missionary fund there must always be strong opposition to surrendering any portion of the collections until the claims from this quarter are paid off in full. But would it not be better to separate this quasi missionary work from that which is so in fact, and provide for its maintenance in some other way? We believe that the self-respect of a large proportion of our so-called "domestic missions" would be so invigorated by relieving them of the name of "missions" that in a comparatively short time they would assert for themselves a self-sustaining position among the circuits or stations of the Conferences. To effect so desirable a result, the inconvenience of an additional collection, distinct from that for missions, might be submitted to for a few years. Let the domestic work be provided for by the several Conferences in such way as their wisdom may decide, and let the subject of missions proper be urged upon the Christian liberality of the church. In this way the spirit of missions, which has been rather enfeebled than fostered among our people by the present policy, will be stimulated, and the general treasury liberally supplied with funds for foreign work.

Proselyting the Converted Heathen.

We have noticed before this miserable bigotry which exhibits itself even in the foreign missionary fields. The following statements are taken from a recent number of the Independent:

From the Mahratta mission, in charge of the American Board, there comes a protest like that which has arisen again and again from the Kolapur and Madura mission in India, from the Dakota mission in the West, from Hawaii and from Madagascar, against the entering in of one missionary society to reap the fruits of another's labors. This intrusive policy, so at variance with that of the great apostle of foreign missions, whose strife was "to preach the gospel not where Christ was named," to avoid building on another's foundation, has found advocates in more than one missionary organization; but the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, the oldest Protestant missionary organization, it may be because of its advanced age, seems more than any other society to feel unable or disinclined to break and plant new ground for its own reaping or to lay foundations for its own building. To a looker-on the aim of this society would seem to be not to Christianize heathen, but to proselyte Christian converts; and the devout Bishop of Bombay is perhaps one of the most successful and indefatigable apostles of this order. It is but a few months since Mr. Wilder, of the American Presbyterian mission, read a paper at the Allahabad Conference, called forth by the Bishop of Bombay's unwarrantable interference at Kolapur, and the representatives of twenty different societies there assembled passed the following resolution:

"The Conference desires to put on record their sense of the grave importance of the principle of the mutual non-interference of missionary societies. They are of opinion that, with certain well-recognized exceptions, such as the large centers of population, it is expedient that the agents of different missionary societies should occupy different fields of labor. Without calling in question the right of every missionary to exercise his ministry wherever God may give him opportunity, it is their solemn conviction that the progress of the gospel in a heathen land can only be retarded by the missionaries of one communion receiving the converts of another church, who are as yet imperfectly acquainted with divine truth, and unable to enter intelligently into questions which separate the minor sections of Christendom, especially these who are under discipline."

And now from the region of Ahmednuggur, where for forty years the missionaries of the American Board have labored, organizing seventeen churches, containing about five hundred members, we hear that Bishop Douglas has followed up his action of 1871, when he sent a native catechist and teacher there, by at length stationing a missionary at Ahmednuggur. This catechist is one, says the Missionary Herald, "who less than four years before was dismissed from the service of our mission and excommunicated from the church for unchristian conduct. He was afterward restored to the communion of the church in Bombay. He then applied to the Bishop for employment, and was sent to Ahmednuggur on double the pay he had formerly received from us and more than double the allowance to catechists of equal ability and education now employed by us in that district. Such a fact needs no comment. Its demoralizing tendency is obvious to every one." No wonder that on another page of the same magazine we read: "We almost dread to mention the success that may crown our labors in any part of the field, lest the Philistines be upon us."

An Extract.

Dr. A. H. Redford writes to the Nashville Christian Advocate from Washington city, May 28. We extract as follows:

The claim, as you are aware, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South against the United States government, for the use, etc., of the Publishing House during the war, has already been presented to both houses of Congress.

At the recent session of the Book Committee I was requested to take charge of this claim, and give it my personal attention, and hence my business in this city.

I leave here this evening, after spending but a single day, much pleased with my brief visit, and cheered with the hope of a speedy and honorable settlement of our claim.

Whatever else, however, I have denied myself, I was unwilling to forego the pleasure of calling at Vernon Place—our church in Washington. I was anxious to see Dr. Wilson, the pastor, as well for the high esteem in which I hold him as a brother as for the desire I had to examine the church, in which my heart feels so deep an interest. He was absent, however, on pastoral duty, and I had not the opportunity of taking him by the hand, and was only permitted to examine the exterior of the church. In passing I saw other houses of worship more costly and attractive to the indifferent passer-by; but to me Vernon Place had a charm that no other in the city could claim. As I looked upon the edifice, plain but beautiful, I thanked God that energy and enterprise, under his blessing, had erected it, and wondered why any incubus should remain upon it. The preacher who conceived its erection, and the membership here who so liberally came to his aid, have done nobly, and yet a debt, though not heavy, but embarrassing, rests upon this church. Agents have been sent out; Annual Conferences have been solicited, and Bishops have appealed, and yet the debt is not paid. A small contribution from each member of our widespread connection would give all the relief that is needed, or a liberal contribution from a few men of wealth would meet every demand.

REV. E. E. HOSS, pastor of the Minna Street church, San Francisco, California, writes to the Pacific Methodist of the prospects and plans of a new church as follows:

Mr. Editor: I wrote to you some [illegible] time ago relative to our prospects for a new church in this city. Since then they have brightened very much. We are now on the ground of certainty. From a quarter which need not be mentioned we have received a donation of $5,000, conditioned upon our procuring an additional $5,000 from other sources.

Our plan is as follows: We expect to sell our present edifice, with the lot on which it stands, for enough to procure a new lot in one of the most eligible parts of the city. After that we will build at a cost of $15,000, so that it is necessary for us to raise $10,000. One-half of this $5,000 ought to be in hand by the first of October next. The congregation at Minna Street will give to the very utmost of their ability. As far as in them lies, they have a ready mind. But they are not rich. I therefore do not hesitate to come before the Methodists of California and ask them for aid. Are there not five hundred or even one thousand of your readers who will contribute each $5 for so laudable a purpose? Circulars setting forth the above-mentioned designs, and containing personal appeals, will be widely circulated. But a failure to receive one of these should not produce any hesitation about contributing.

In connection with the Colusa District Conference, proceedings the Pacific Methodist says:

Things look well on Colusa district. There is a healthy sentiment all over the work. A greater degree of permanence is felt than ever before. That perplexing "if" is almost forgotten. The financial reports were encouraging. Old debts were being canceled, new enterprises projected, and preachers' and presiding elder's salaries looked after with solicitude by the stewards. We are glad to note that all over this Conference there has been a wonderful advance in this direction during the past year.

THE Raleigh Christian Advocate of June 11 comes to us in mourning for Rev. Numa F. Reid, D. D., presiding elder of the Greensboro district, North Carolina Conference, who died in Wentworth on the sixth instant. We quote a paragraph from the Advocate's notice of this eminent and useful preacher:

Rev. Numa F. Reid was the son of Rev. James Reid, who died November 8 of the past year. He was educated at Emory and Henry College, Virginia, and was at one time a tutor in that institution. The early part of his life was devoted to the work of teaching, and he entered the traveling connection in 1830, at the session of our Conference held at Salisbury. His first pastoral charge was the Tar River circuit, his second was Front Street church, Wilmington, his third Raleigh City station, his fourth Greensboro station. From Greensboro he was appointed presiding elder, which office he held to the time of his death. He was a model presiding elder, as the preachers who were under him and the people he served will bear testimony. As a preacher he had no superior in the Conference, and but few equals in the church. He was earnest, pathetic, original, striking, impressive, and at times he would thrill his audience with his eloquence. His preaching was of the highest order. He had the wonderful faculty of gaining the attention of his congregation at the commencement of his sermon, and holding it to the close.

The Conference loved to honor him. He was four times chosen as a delegate to the General Conference, in 1862, 1866 and 1870 he stood at the head of our list. He was an able representative. In the death of Dr. Reid the Conference has sustained an irreparable loss. He was a warm friend to and a strong supporter of all our institutions and Conference enterprises.

WE TAKE the following notice of Rev. M. W. Gray from the Fayetteville Express, published at Fayetteville, Tennessee:

Rev. M. W. Gray, formerly pastor of the Methodist church at this place, died near Versailles, Rutherford county, a few days ago, with dropsy of the heart. Mr. Gray was one of the oldest ministers in the Tennessee Conference, having connected himself with that body in 1836. He was licensed to preach in 1828, and from that time until a few weeks previous to his death was actively engaged in performing the duties of his high calling. Profound piety, great benevolence, catholic charity, lofty Christian deportment and unmistakable zeal in the service of his Master were the distinguishing attributes of this truly good man. He was a fine representative of the pioneers of Southern Methodism, and in him might have been recognized that indefatigable zeal, that untiring industry and patient abnegation of self which characterized that noble race of men who braved calmly and uncomplainingly the heat of summer, the rigors of winter and the pangs of poverty to plant more firmly on the battlements of Zion the banners of their Lord. The place made vacant by such a man is not easily filled, and few are they who may wear his mantle deservingly.

MONTGOMERY DISTRICT.—Rev. Dr. E. Wadsworth writes as follows, June 9, from Montgomery:

Rev. Bishop Doggett, on his way from Eutaw to Tuskegee, stopped two days in Montgomery, Alabama. He preached to the people with much ability. He closed the District Conference in Tuskegee yesterday. This is the last he will hold in Alabama. The conference was large. The Bishop presided and preached to the satisfaction of the people. Montgomery district is doing well. The report on Sunday schools, as respects number and condition, was wonderful.

Letter from Bishop Doggett.

I desire to obtain, for our work on the Pacific coast, six or seven young preachers, to accompany me, if possible, on my trip, early in the month. I will pay two single preachers for Oregon, and will pay their traveling expenses to the Columbia Conference. I wish two for the Pacific Conference, either single or with small families; and not less than three for Los Angeles. These last should be single, or with small families. I cannot promise to pay the traveling expenses of any except of those for Oregon, as the appropriations for the other Conferences are not sufficient for that purpose. I am assured, however, that the prospect for their support, after their arrival, is encouraging. Certain it is that here is a loud call for laborers in the Lord's vineyard; in a region, though distant, perfectly accessible, and where the fields are already ripe unto the harvest. I call upon young men to volunteer for this inviting service. Those who may be moved to obey this call will correspond with me at Richmond, Virginia, from the fifteenth of June to the fifteenth of July. I propose to start from the tenth to the fifteenth of August. Let none apply who do not intend to devote themselves wholly to the itinerant work. I have reason to hope that the passage will be expeditious and pleasant.

MEMORIAL SERVICE.—On Sunday last, says the Western Methodist of June 14, at Friendship, Bishop Wightman preached a memorial sermon—a tribute to the late Rev. G. W. D. Harris, D. D. It was a noble discourse on the character, qualifications and rewards of the Christian minister—the Lord's steward, wise and faithful. A vast throng of people, many of whom had been converted, and many trained under the ministry of our revered and beloved father in Israel, listened with eager attention and profound feeling while the Bishop unfolded his subject and applied its truths to him who was so wise and so faithful in his great work. The occasion demanded a discourse of no common character, and the preacher was equal to the occasion.

Attention to This!

We are requested to say to the preachers of the Louisiana Conference that there is no money to meet the missionary drafts of the Conference Board for July and October. Will the brethren take up their collections at once and remit to R. J. Harp, New Orleans? The missionaries are suffering for the barest necessaries, and must have relief. We regret that the policy of overdrawing was permitted by the board; but, as it was done, the only present help is to take up collections and forward the money. The money cannot be advanced on the matured drafts by the publishing agent. The money must be collected.

BY THE communication which we publish this week it will be seen that the annual commencement of the Southern University begins on Sunday, June 29. Dr. Wheat is to preach the commencement sermon, and Bishop Keener preaches to the theological students. We cannot say too much in favor of this institution. The president, Dr. Andrews, and his able assistants are doing a noble and a thorough work for education and religion. We expect to be at the commencement in spirit, but in body shall be compelled to be elsewhere. We shall expect a good account of the occasion. Let all Alabama and the South rally to this center of learning and piety.

DEATH OF L. R. DAVIS.—Rev. Joshua T. Heard sends us the following note announcing the death of a prominent and useful Methodist layman:

VICKSBURG, MISS., June 12, 1873.

The many friends of L. R. Davis, Esq., formerly of Alabama, will regret to learn that he died at his residence on Deer creek, in Issaquena county, Mississippi, on the thirteenth ultimo. An obituary notice will appear.

HEALTH OF THE CITY.—The health of New Orleans was never better than at present. There were a few cases of cholera several weeks ago, but there is none at this time. There is neither cholera nor yellow fever here, so far as we can learn. We regard the city as perfectly safe for unacclimated persons and visitors.

WE ARE REQUESTED to give notice that there will be preaching at the church, corner of Louisiana avenue and Magazine street, every night during the week, beginning on Sunday, June 22. The members of the other Methodist charges are solicited to attend and aid in the meeting.

THE General Synod of the Reformed Church in America convened in the Second Reformed church of New Brunswick, New Jersey (Rev. C. D. Hartranft's,) on Wednesday, June 4, 1873.

The synod was called to order at three o'clock by the Rev. Joachim Elmenderf, D. D., of Poughkeepsie, New York, the retiring president.

Rev. A. P. Van Gieson, D. D., of Poughkeepsie, was elected president, and Rev. J. V. N. Talmage, D. D., of Amoy, China, assessor. Revs. W. W. Halloway, Jr., and Marshal B. Smith were elected clerks.

Rev. Dr. Baldwin, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church South at Opelousas, Louisiana, writing to the Southern Christian Advocate, says:

"There are ninety traveling and seventy-five local preachers therein, seventy-one hundred and twenty-seven members, six districts and an increase of membership last year of thirteen hundred and fifty-seven. "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few." The Opelousas district embraces the southwestern portion of the State, with a membership of seventeen hundred and thirty, thirteen traveling and fourteen local preachers, twenty-two Sabbath schools, one hundred and forty-six officers and teachers, and eight hundred and eighty-five scholars. The District Conference was held in Franklin, beginning on the eighth ultimo. The attendance upon the part of the clerical members was good, but owing to the political disturbances just at that time, and excessive rains, the lay members were not well represented. Rev. B. F. White, presiding elder, presided. The different interests of the church were carefully reviewed and the reports were generally of an encouraging character, evincing a degree of fidelity and consecration upon the part of the pastors truly commendable. Class meetings are kept up in most of the appointments. They are paying especial attention to the establishment of schools, endeavoring to educate the children, and with gratifying results. The German mission is prospering; at Lake Charles they are building a church. The conference decided to employ a Creole layman, a man of gifts and solid piety, as a missionary to visit, read the Bible, sing and pray in French with the Creole families. Our meeting resulted in a most gracious revival. This station is served most efficiently by Rev. Amicus W. Williams, transferred from the North Georgia Conference. Our church in this district exists under the shadow of Catholicism. A very large proportion of the people are of French descent and all are Catholics. The land is swayed by their influence. I find them kind as friends and neighbors, and some of them are members of our Sabbath school and attend our church.

We have here in Opelousas about three thousand inhabitants, with three churches—Catholic, Methodist and Episcopalian. The latter has a feeble existence. There are some Presbyterians and Baptists without pastors or church organization; the most of them worship with us. Our congregations are large; have one hundred and sixteen members, have had a revival and twenty accessions to our membership. There is a very commendable feature in this charge: they believe that their pastor should live as themselves. The parsonage lot, in point of eligibility, comfort and outfit, will compare favorably with their own; and it is also supplied with a large lot of poultry, a good cow and a Creole pony.

Our German Fields in Texas.

Mr. Editor: Our German fields in Texas, composed of thirteen circuits and missions, are distributed over the territory of three of the Texas Annual Conferences, and are, organized as a German district, part of but one (namely, the Texas) Conference. This consolidation of the work has resulted in much good. Germans being able best to judge of Germans, we have now none but good men in the ministry.

On the fifth instant their District Conference was held at Houston. Being cordially invited, I attended; and that the more readily because it afforded me an opportunity to hold sweet intercourse with our beloved Bro. Pauly, the Nestor of German Southern Methodism, than whom there is none more devoted to the cause of our blessed Redeemer. He is stationed at Houston, is sixty-five years of age, and is half blind and lame; but, being "fervent in spirit, serving the Lord," his youth, as it seems, is "renewed like the eagle's."

The presiding elder, Rev. F. Vordenbaumen, everywhere known as a man of sound mind and unsuspected devotion to our cause, has perhaps the largest field to traverse of any of his official colleagues, his district extending from Llano county to Galveston, and from Victoria to Bastrop.

From the reports I gleaned that during the past year two large stone churches had been built and dedicated; that the spiritual state of the district is good—a revival had lately taken place on the New Fountain work, during which nineteen souls had been converted; that the Sunday schools are prosperous, our own catechism and child's paper, the Kinderfreund, giving universal satisfaction; that the missionary spirit is not dormant among them—the missionary collections of last year summing up to nearly $1 per member; that our church organ, Der Familienfreund, is a power in the land, the editor receiving praise beyond measure, etc.

In Galveston I met with Drs. Walker and Alexander, Dr. Walker appearing physically and mentally as elastic as ever. Dr. Alexander, the boast of Methodism in Texas, has been assigned by Bishop Keener to St. James (Ayers) church, preaching every Sunday, notwithstanding bodily infirmities, to a newly-gathered and appreciative congregation. I could not refrain from seeing that monument of Bro. Ayers' liberality—St. James church—the first story of which has been completed and prepared for worship, and must confess that both exterior and interior bespeak very good taste. Rev. I. G. John, A. M., editor of the Texas Christian Advocate, I found on his tripod. Having, with Dr. Walker, attended to the laying of the corner-stone of a new church in Houston, preaching twice on Sunday, he seemed overworked and feeble. He makes an excellent paper, wields a powerful pen, and is acknowledged to be a skillful guardian of our church interests in the Lone Star State.

Thousands of former residents of New Orleans are found doing business in Galveston and Houston. Industrially there seems to be much more activity in Texas than in our downtrodden Louisiana.

Books and Periodicals.

An Exposition of the Prophecies of the Apocalypse. By the Rev. James DePui, A. M. Philadelphia: Claxton, Remsen & Haffelfinger, 1873.

A 12mo of 296 pages. The author was a Protestant Episcopal minister, for a long time chaplain in the United States army. We have neither time nor nerve to examine the book. We simply announce the publication for the benefit of those who may wish to study the Book of Revelation.

Tides and Tendencies of Religious Thought. By J. L. Dudley. Philadelphia: Claxton, Remsen & Haffelfinger, 1873.

A handsomely-printed duodecimo, containing twenty sermons, lively in their style, and of the liberal and broad school of doctrine.

Southern Methodist Home Altar.—A guide to Christian perfection. By Rev. William Baker. Published monthly at McMinnville, Tennessee, at $1.25 per annum. The June number has been received, and contains a considerable amount of useful reading matter, original and selected.

The American Agriculturist for June is splendidly illustrated and filled with valuable information.

Anson D. F. Randolph & Co. will publish early in September the third series of lectures under the auspices of the Christian Evidence Society, London. This series, known as "The People's Course," and designed to meet in more popular form some of the phases of modern unbelief, was delivered in the new Hall of Science, City Road, to large audiences, and attracted much attention. The lecturers were George Henslow, John Gritton, Dr. Gladstone, R. B. Girdlestone, Rev. A. C. Row and other well-known writers; and among the subjects treated are the following: "The Moral Teaching of the Old Testament Vindicated;" "Christianity not the Invention of Impostors or of Credulous Enthusiasts;" "Science and Scripture not Antagonistic because disturbed in their Spheres of Thought;" "The Facts of Christianity Historically True," etc.

The Will of Chief Justice Chase.—The will of the late Chief Justice Chase was filed, May 21, in the office of the register of wills for the District of Columbia. It is dated the nineteenth of November, 1870, and is as follows:

"I nominate H. D. Cooke, of the District of Columbia, to be sole executor of this my last will and testament. After the payment of all just debts, I make the following bequests: The interest on $6,000, at seven per cent., to my niece, Jane Auld, during her life, and if her daughters survive her, the principal thereof to be paid to them equally. Ten thousand dollars to Wilberforce University; $10,000 to Dartmouth College. Whatever sum may be due to me from my late brother, Edward J. Chase, of Lockport, New York, to be remitted to his widow and administratrix. The picture of Chief Justice Marshall, presented by members of the bar and other citizens of New York, to the United States for the use of the Supreme Court. The residue of my estate to be distributed in equal parts to my two daughters. I commit my soul to God in Christ Jesus, our Savior, through the Holy Spirit.

Witnessed by R. C. Parsons and Jacob Schuckers.

The estimated value of the personal property of the late Mr. Chase is $100,000. The remainder of the estate, consisting of real property, is estimated to be worth $150,000.

Our Chicago Book Concern, on Monday noon, June 2, was put in peril by fire. A fire broke out in the large building erected on the corner of Wabash avenue and Van Buren street, immediately adjoining the Book Concern. For a time destruction seemed certain; the roof was on fire and the building filled with smoke. But the fire department was on hand and by vigorous action and abundant help the danger was averted. Everything was turned upside down for awhile, but a few hundred dollars will cover our damages. We congratulate our brethren on their escape.—Central Christian Advocate.

The telegraph brings us the meager announcement that the Old Catholic Congress at Constance has elected to the bishopric Prof. Reinkens. The last news was that the witty and devout Munich professor was restrained by a feeling of diffidence from undertaking the responsible task; but it would seem that his scruples have been overcome.—Independent.

Dr. A. H. Reppetoe, of Brenham, Texas, who is general agent for Royall's cotton-worm destroyer, gave us a call last week. The cotton-worm destroyer is certified and indorsed by many reliable parties. Those who wish for information or who desire to test the matter for themselves can address W. B. Royall & Son, Brenham, Texas.

When people make up their minds to travel their first idea is where they are to go to find the greatest share of pleasure and comfort, and how to reach that much-desired resting-place by the cheapest and most comfortable route, whether by rail or steamship. We would say to all who have any desire to cross the Atlantic and visit Europe that the largest, cheapest and most magnificent steamships leaving New York weekly for Queenstown, Liverpool and London are those of the National line, and that our respected and popular fellow-citizen, Mr. P. F. Gogorty, is passenger agent in this city. His office is at No. 151 Camp street.

We see that Procter & Gamble's Extra Olive Soap is becoming very popular in our city. Its quality, we know, is superior, and being nicely perfumed, we are not surprised that consumers prefer it, and that it has a large sale.

Has long attracted the notice of the most eminent physicians by its great efficacy in curing what were considered incurable cases of disease, where the patients have been almost destroyed by Scrofula, etc., and Prof. Valentine Mott, of the New York University, Profs. Gibson, Dewees and Chapman, of Philadelphia, and many other physicians of celebrity, gave, over their own signatures, letters certifying to its great merits. It has been occasionally advertised, and thousands of families recommend and use it. The Laboratory is under the direction of Dr. Franklin Stewart, who has devoted his attention and skill in its careful preparation during the past twenty-five years, and not a bottle put up that is not worth many times its cost to the patient. It is perfectly safe for the most diseased and debilitated, and in all cases where the blood is not pure it should be used freely.

The Child's Corner.

JACK IN THE PULPIT

BY J. G. WHITTIER.

Just over the way,
Jack in the pulpit
Preaches to-day;
Squirrel and song-sparrow,
High on their perch,
Hear the sweet lily-bells
Ringing to church.

Come hear what his reverence
Rises to say,
In his queer little pulpit,
This fine Sabbath day,
Fair is the canopy
Over him seen,
Painted by Nature's hand
Black, brown and green.
Green is his pulpit,
Green are its hands;
In his queer little pulpit
The little priest stands.

In black and gold velvet,
So gorgeous to see,
Comes with his bass voice
The chorister bee;
Green fingers playing
Unseen on wind lyres,
Bird voices singing,
These are his choirs.
The violets are deacons,
I know by this sign:
The cups that they carry
Are purple with wine.
The columbines bravely
As sentinels stand
On the lookout, with
All their red trumpets in hand.

Meek-faced anemones
Drooping and sad,
Great yellow violets
Smiling out glad,
Buttercups' faces
Beaming and bright,
Clovers with bonnets,
Some red, some white;
Daisies, their fingers
Half clasped in prayer,
Dandelions, proud of
The gold of their hair;
Innocents, children,
Guileless and frail,
Their meek little faces
Upturned and pale;
Wild-wood geraniums
All in their best,
Languidly leaning,
In purple gauze dressed;
All are assembled,
This sweet Sabbath day,
To hear what the priest
In his pulpit will say.

Lo! while Indian pipes
On the green mosses lie;
Who has been smoking,
Profanely, so nigh?
Rebuked by the preacher,
The mischief is stopped,
But the sinners in haste
Have their little pipes dropped;
Let the wind with the fragrance
Of fern and black birch
Blow the smell of the smoke
Clear out of the church.

So much for the preacher:
The sermon comes next;
Shall we tell how he preached it,
And where was the text?
Alas, like too many Grown-up folks, who worship
In churches man-builded, to-day,
We heard not the preacher
Expound or discuss;
We looked at the people,
And they looked at us;
We saw all their dresses,
Their colors and shapes,
The trim of their bonnets,
The cut of their capes;
We heard the wind-organ,
The bee and the bird,
But of Jack in the Pulpit
We heard not a word.

The Fly.

A CHILDREN'S LECTURE.

Let us put a fly under the microscope, and see how beautifully it is made. There is the head, small and round, with a large round bunch of eyes on each side; not single eyes, like ours, but having many thousands in each bunch, so that the fly can see in all directions at the same time. The trunk is long enough to reach to the ground when the fly stands, because its neck is so short it cannot bend it, and, like the elephant, it has a trunk or proboscis, by which to lift its food to its mouth. The fly's trunk folds back on itself, as you would fold your arm when you touch your hand to your shoulder, or your leg when you draw your feet behind you up to your body. The trunk may be seen in full length by pressing the sides of the living fly with the thumb and finger. It will drop the trunk, so that with the naked eye or a microscope it can be seen distinctly. The lips of the proboscis are large and covered with coarse black hairs, and when the fly sips liquids it covers the liquid with its lips and draws it up into the tube of its trunk, as the pump draws up the water when we pull down the handle—that is, it sucks it up, or, as we may say, it draws it up by suction. When it eats solid food it first throws out a liquid from its trunk to dissolve it, and then it can suck it up. It is the pinching with these lips that causes the fly to tease and tickle us in warm weather, as if we were to take up a small portion of our skin between the thumb-nail and the finger-nail. The fly does not breathe through its mouth and nostrils and by lungs, as we do; but it has little breathing-holes or pores all along down its sides, covered with a network of little fibers—i. e., threads of flesh—to keep out the dust, and one of these little openings is located under each wing, which, as you see, is made of little black horny threads, covered with a very thin skin or membrane above and below them. These horny threads are tubes filled with air, which makes the fly lighter and helps it to fly with more ease and swiftness. The upper surface of the wings is covered with black horny hooks or curved spines; and these, too, may be and doubtless are hollow tubes and filled with air. Then the fly has two little thread-like wings, called balances, under the broad wings, which help it to balance and swing from side to side, in the same way that you would use your arms if you were walking a crack or the fence, or as rope-walkers use the long pole to balance themselves and keep from falling. The foot is a curious piece of workmanship, and shows with every other part how God has adapted every part to the wants of the fly and the fly to circumstances around it. Each foot has a little cushion of hairs upon the bottom, which excludes the air when the fly sets it down, causing the foot to stick to the wall, the ceiling or the window-glass, precisely as the "sucker" sticks to the table or the pavement when it is wet and slapped down, and this cushion of "tenent hairs" enables it to walk upon polished surfaces without slipping; but if you throw flour or chalk or dust upon the window-glass the fly cannot walk upon it, and it is to keep the foot free from dust and to enable the fly to walk easily that it so often rubs the flat faces of the feet together and upon the body. All flies are covered with hairs, and these serve as combs and brushes for the pulvilli, as the cushions of the feet are called. The eggs of the house-fly are generally deposited upon the leaves and stems of plants, where the larvæ will find food when they are hatched. A single one is called a larva. In a few days after the eggs are laid the larvæ, or caterpillars, are hatched, and begin to eat as soon as they are born. In a few days more the body is too large for the old skin, and it throws [illegible] there is a new and larger one prepared. The skin is not a part of the body, like ours, but is thrown off three or four times during three weeks of the caterpillar's life, as we would drop off our dress or as our new teeth push out the little old ones.

After about three weeks the larva wraps itself up in its last skin, stops eating, and goes to sleep for a few days. This is called the pupa or sleeping state, because the insect is wrapped up like a baby in swaddling clothes. During this time the antennæ or feelers, the legs, the wings and the proboscis grow out; so that when the fly comes out from its old skin it has six long legs, two wings, two little balancers, a proboscis, and many thousand eyes. Before it had a large mouth, now it has a small mouth and a long trunk; then it had short legs and large feet, now it has long, slender legs and feet, with cushions on them; then it had two small eyes, now it has many thousand; then it had no wings, now it has two broad wings and two little thread-like wings beneath them. This makes the round of the fly's life. First an egg; then a larva or grub or maggot or skipper—for we give all these names to it, as we find it in wood or in meat or in cheese; then the pupa or sleeper; then the fly or perfect insect. Flies are found all over the earth, and you will be surprised to know that in some countries of South America they lay their eggs in the nose and mouth of some poor, dirty, miserable people while they sleep, and when the larvæ are hatched they cause great suffering and death to the poor wretches. In Africa one kind of fly stings the cattle, causing them to die in a few hours. In this country the bot-fly deposits eggs under the skin of cattle, and the gad-fly lays its eggs in the nostrils of the sheep; and when the larvæ are hatched the poor animals suffer and sometimes die from the effects. But the house-fly does no harm to man. It does us good when it picks up the crumbs and other waste particles that would decay and make the air of our rooms less pure and healthful; and when they come in great numbers it is because there is much there for them to eat.—Mrs. L. M. Petersella, in Independent.

Jim Smith's Menagerie.

A party of boys at Jim Smith's house were playing a game that they called menagerie. All the boys who never played it before were turned into the hall, and then, being called into the sitting-room one by one, asked to tell what particular animal they most wished to see. One boy wished to see a hippopotamus, another an elephant, others tigers and lions; but they were one and all led up to the looking-glass and pointed to their own reflection, and told that there was the animal they had expressed a desire to see. This game the boys thought very funny; and they laughed heartily at the last boy who was admitted into the menagerie; for he had asked to see a monkey, and looked very much "taken down" when shown his own self.

"Out here is old drunken Tom Cathbone," said one of the boys, looking from the window; "let's call him in, and let him have a peep at an ugly-looking animal."

So poor old Tom, the drunkard, was called into the room, and told to tell what animal he wanted to see.

"Oh! show me the worst-looking wild beast you've got," said he. "Come, show it to me; show me the beast!"

"All right, then!" said the boys, and pushed Tom right in front of the looking-glass. He stood for a moment looking into the glass with a silly drunkard's smile; but presently such a look of horror and sorrow passed over his face that the laughter of the boys was checked, and they could not help but pity him as he sank into a chair and covered his face with his hands.

"We didn't mean to hurt your feelings," said Jim, "We did the same thing to all the boys. And, just before you came in, Dick Willoughby asked to see a monkey, and we showed him himself."

But the poor fellow looked up with a mournful look in his bleared eyes, and said: "I am worse than a beast; worse than a beast!"

And, after he had left them, the boys watched him going down the street, and from their hearts did pity poor old Tom Cathbone; and so do we; and much we hope that none of the dear boys whom we now know and love may ever come to be such as he is to-day.—The Gem.

TOO COMMON PHRASES.—"Oh! it is perfectly lovely!" "It's the most perfectly beautiful thing I ever saw!" "It is the sweetest bonnet in the world!" "It's the handsomest dress I ever saw!" "It's a perfect fright!" "It's the most unbecoming thing I ever looked at!" "Perfectly absurd!" "The most disagreeable person in the world!" "I thought I should die!" "He was pleased to death!" "I am nearly dead!" "I am freezing to death!" "I was scared almost to death!" "Isn't that nice!" "What splendid potatoes!" "She is horrid ugly!" "She is real hateful!" "Isn't it awful jolly!"

How unmeaning these phrases are! I feel sorry for the helpless adjectives which are so abused. If every little thing is "awful" or "splendid," girls, what will you say when these words can properly be used? If you are "ready to die" at the slightest alarm, I fear when really in danger no one will believe you. Do you remember the boy in the fable who cried "wolf" to frighten the shepherds? After awhile they ceased to notice his cries; so when the wolf really came, no one believed the boy's alarm, and the sheep were all killed.

"HOW GREEDY you are!" said one little girl to another, who had taken the best apple in the dish; "I was going to take that."

Pruning Forest-Trees.

In recently examining the state of a number of different kinds of forest-trees, with a view to forming a collection illustrative of the effects of various methods of pruning, several points occurred for observation which possibly may be of some interest.

Considering the timber in the mass, it appeared that in a large proportion of cases where the branches had been removed close to the trunk of the parent tree, the wounded surface had either healed over completely, or had been preserved in a state so far sound and healthy as not to injure the wood of the tree for economic purposes.

Reversely, where the branches had been cut at a short distance from the tree, so as to leave a lealless stump, this stump had in a large proportion of cases died, and, rotting back, had either formed a decayed mass, penetrating into and materially injuring the previously sound timber, or in less marked cases, where the decay did not spread to such an injurious extent, had left a decayed place sometimes on the surface of the tree, sometimes concealed by a growth of bark, fair and sound to superficial observation, but really only hiding a permanently hollow spot in what would otherwise have been sound timber.

The gradual growth and progress of the injury in these cases may be easily traced. The branch having been cut back to a lealless stump, the circulation of the sap through it ceases, the tissues die, decay commences, and, gradually spreading, infects the sound wood in contact with the decaying mass.

A good illustration of this is sometimes given in detail by small branches which, on being trimmed back, have had a single shoot left at the cut extremity. In the case of a larch, where a small bough had been thus treated, the stump remained alive on the side on which the leafy shoot had been left, and bark began to form over the cut end close to the base of the shoot, while on the other side of the cut end of the stump, where there was no shoot to draw the sap, the wood died, and was continuing to die back toward the parent tree.

Where the branches to be removed are cut away close to the trunk the circulation is preserved by the action of the upper part of the tree, and thus the sap, passing through or close by the wounded surface, the bark usually forms healthily, and advances regularly and steadily; and the cut portion, even when from its great extent it is long exposed, is thus preserved alive, or free from such decay as may affect the value of the timber.

Of this an excellent example was given by a Scotch fir, from which many years ago a large lower limb had been removed close to the trunk. Here the growth of the bark had from some unknown cause been chiefly from one side, so that a portion of the cut surface was still exposed; yet though the date of the pruning must have been about eight-and-twenty years back (as appeared by counting the subsequent rings of growth when the specimen was cut from the tree,) this exposed wood was still firm, and in sound condition, and only affected to somewhat less than an eighth of an inch in depth by discoloration from exposure to weather.—Gardeners' Chronicle and Agricultural Gazette.

Small Fruits.

1. Strawberry plants should be trimmed before setting, removing the dead leaves, and especially the dried, wiry runners. This can be done with the thumb-nail or a sharp knife. If planted with these left on, the hoe is liable to catch them, and tear the plants out, when hoeing them. Many plants are destroyed by careless workmen in this way. A broad, flat dibber should be used in setting them, making a hole in which the roots may be readily spread out flat, so that rootlets can start from every one. The hole made by the dibber should be entirely filled, so as not to leave any vacant space around the roots. This can be done by thrusting in the dibber obliquely, the point directed toward the points of the roots, and then pressing the handle toward the crown of the plant. This fills the hole, and at the same time presses the soil firmly against the roots. It is very important that the soil should be compacted around the roots of all kinds of plants. We have frequently gone over plantations a few days after they were made by employees, and nine times out of ten, when we found plants dying, we found that they were set so loosely in the earth that we could easily pull them up by a single leaf-stem. We always strictly charge our workmen to press the earth around the roots, but find that they are very apt to disregard the injunction.

2. In planting raspberries and blackberries be sure to cut off all of the old cane. If any portion of the cane is allowed to remain branches will start out and grow, making a feeble effort to produce fruit, all of which will exhaust the nutriment that should go to the support of new canes for bearing the next year's fruit. This is a point that is continually disregarded by those inexperienced in fruit-culture, and is a prime cause of the failure of so many plants. Many seem to think that all of the cane that it is possible to plant with the roots is so much of a start, forgetting that it will die in the autumn, and then, if there are no new canes started, fruit is impossible the next year. But cut the cane off entirely before or soon after transplanting, and new shoots will start from the roots, or their crown under ground, and the efforts of the roots will be wholly directed to the support of the new canes.—Rural Home.

IT IS SAID that a poultice of onions applied morning, noon and night, for three or four days, will cure a felon. No matter how bad the case, lancing will be unnecessary if the poultice is applied. The remedy is a sure, safe and speedy one. So says some one who pretends to know. If a genuine remedy, it is worth circulating.

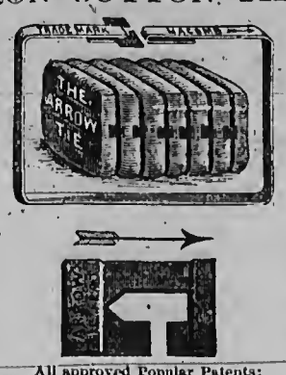
THE DUBOIS FLANGE COTTON GIN.

By the Flange the Cotton is kept in contact with the teeth on each side, until the fiber is taken from the seed, without allowing them to be taken up by the return motion of the roll, as in other Gins.

The Flange prevents hulls, stems, sticks and hard substances from being cut, consequently making a better sample out of roughly-picked cotton than other Gins.



We have sold more from this point than any agency of any other Gin for the crop of 1872-73; consequently we can furnish more and better references, and they are warranted to come up to all that is said of them.

We keep constantly on hand all sizes, from 40 to 80-SAW STANDS, left or right. Price, $5 per Saw.

IMPROVED

EAGLE COTTON GINS.

The great popularity of the EAGLE COTTON GINS is established from the well-known fact that they are the most reliable, strongest and best built Cotton Gins ever made. The Eagle Cotton Gin runs lighter than any other gin, thus having a great advantage for planters who wish to run by horse power. All the numerous planters who use the Eagle Cotton Gin will certify to the fact that when their cotton is sent to market it always brings the highest market price, as no other gin can produce a finer or a better sample of cotton than the Eagle Cotton Gins. Over seventeen thousand of the Eagle Cotton Gins have been made and sold. During a period of twenty years the undersigned has had the agency of the Eagle Cotton Gin in New Orleans. He has never had a gin returned or rejected out of the immense number sold. The saw cylinders of all the Eagle Cotton Gins are twelve inches in diameter, which is two inches larger than most other kinds of gins, thus giving our forty-saw gin more teeth, and they are more than equal to the fifty-saw gins of other makers, who use only a ten-inch cylinder, and the same great advantage of the twelve-inch cylinder in larger-sized gins can be easily understood. Planters who wish a reliable cotton gin, with an established reputation, can purchase an Eagle Cotton Gin with a certainty that they are not making an untried experiment, but will obtain a cotton gin which is indorsed by the oldest and largest planters in the country as the best in use. A large stock of the Eagle Cotton Gins are always kept on sale in New Orleans, ready for immediate shipment. Planters should be particular to state if they want right or left-hand motion gins.

THE PERFECTED MOST ALGEBRINE SENSATION OF THE DAY IS, TO USE A theatrical phrase, "a great lake." Everybody, to be en regle for the season, and to avoid the proscription of imperious fashion, must have

A CONVERSATION FAN.

No family circle is complete in social diversions and entertainments without one, and in order to enjoy the pastime it should be distinctly understood that the answers do not numerically follow the questions, but to spice the amusement an answer must be looked for that will afford a fitting response to an interrogatory.

Where a direct answer is not to be found to a direct question, it will be discovered that it furnishes the sequel to a sustained conversation, so that couples can carry on a tete-a-tete, which they may not wish to make audible, by silent indications of numbers.

THE CONVERSATION FAN

Is an infallible remedy against dullness, breaking the spell of silence by a suggestive inquiry, furnishing congenial pleasures for an evening's entertainment, and opening up a novel and ingenious method of whiling away agreeable hours at home, in the promenade, at a party or private gathering.

New Orleans Markets.

From the New Orleans Price Current.

The weather has been seasonable, with daily showers.

The river is 2 feet 4 inches below high-water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the thirteenth instant:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Louisiana and Mississippi | bales... | 4,098 |
| Lake | " | 6 |
| Arkansas | " | 137 |
| Mobile | " | 256 |
| Total | | 4,499 |

On Saturday the market was strengthened by a rally in futures in New York, and while some factors were stringent in their pretensions, prices generally assumed some steadiness, but any tendency to stiffer rates was checked by a decline in foreign exchange, and the closing rates showed no quotable variation. Strict ordinary to good ordinary sold at 15c., good ordinary, good style, at 15½c., strict good ordinary at 15⅝c., and low middling at 17⅛c. The sales summed up 3,400 bales, including a list of 1,300 bales, the negotiation for which was pending during the day, but not closed until toward evening. On Monday the inquiry continued fair, but the movement being checked by scant supplies of the kinds wanted, and in many cases factors being more stringent in their pretensions, the sales were confined to 1,900 bales. Prices were strengthened by an improvement at Liverpool of 1-16d. in uplands, and at New York of ⅛c. in spots and 3-16@¼c. in futures, but partly neutralized by a decline of ⅛c. in sterling; strict ordinary sold at a fraction under 14c., and strict ordinary to good ordinary at 14¾c. On Tuesday, under a further advance at New York of ⅛c. in spots and 1/16@⅛c. in futures, and discouraging crop accounts from the country, factors were disposed to be more stringent in their pretensions, but the tendency to an improvement was checked by a decline of ⅛ @ cent. in sterling exchange and a moderate demand. Under these circumstances the market continued quiet throughout the day, but as two buyers took together upward of 1,800 bales the sales summed up 2,200.

The above, not including 1,200 bales omitted on Friday, makes an aggregate for the past three days' of 6,400 bales, against 11,300 for the corresponding time last week and 6,850 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 1,094,250 bales, against 918,035 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 771,099 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 309,824 to Great Britain, of 64,812 to France, and of 170,277 to other foreign ports. ## News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

NASHVILLE, June 18.—The cholera is unabated. Considerable exodus of people from the city. To-day three draymen were attacked on the street. Ninety convicts are down with disease, mostly cholera. There were thirty deaths from cholera to-day, of which eight were whites and twenty-two colored. Business almost totally suspended, and commercial interests are suffering badly.

CANANDAIGUA, June 18.—Under instructions from the court the jury in the case of Susan B. Anthony, indicted for voting in violation of law, returned a verdict of guilty. The court refused to poll the jury.

WASHINGTON, June 19.—Secretary Robeson has made his statement from the evidence of the rescued crew of the Polaris. He does not know whether Captain Hall died a natural death; thinks the abandonment of part of the crew on the ice-floe was accidental. He has no doubt that Buddington was frequently drunk; but as the liquor was exhausted at that time, and as Buddington, when sober, was a most excellent seaman, feels sure that the Polaris was managed to the best advantage. He will charter the Tigress to go in search of the Polaris. Cross purposes undoubtedly existed on the Polaris.

NEW YORK, June 19.—The heat to-day has been excessive, the mercury reaching ninety-four. There were several cases of sunstroke.

General Horatio G. Stevens was buried to-day. He commanded the fort at Castle Garden in the war of 1812. He was the first militia general appointed in this State. The order of the Cincinnati attended his funeral.

NASHVILLE, June 19.—The number of deaths from cholera to-day was twenty negroes and four whites. The weather is considered much more favorable than on Wednesday.

MEMPHIS, June 19.—The weather is again hot and sultry, and, contrary to general expectation, the cholera is again increasing. There were thirty-three deaths to-day, nineteen of which were from cholera.

NASHVILLE, June 20.—The cholera is worse. The deaths to-day were forty-nine colored and twenty-four white. Every sanitary measure is being observed, but the indications are discouraging.

NEW YORK, June 20.—Horace F. Clark, president of the Lake Shore and Union Pacific railroad companies, and son-in-law of Commodore Vanderbilt, died in this city yesterday, of rheumatism of the heart, in the fiftieth year of his age. He was a member of the Thirty-Fifth and Thirty-Sixth Congress, and since his retirement from politics has been identified with the business interests of this city, railroad progress and the development of the West.

MEMPHIS, June 20.—The weather to-day was hot and clear until about six o'clock this evening, when a heavy rain and thunder storm came from the west. There was considerable excitement to-day in regard to the cholera, owing to the publication of the mortuary report of yesterday, which was the largest number that have died in one day since the cholera epidemic of 1866. There were twenty-four interments to-day, against thirty-three yesterday. Of this number seventeen died of cholera.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 20.—The sale of the interest of Messrs. Huntington and Hopkins in the Central Pacific railroad is so nearly consummated that it is given out that the new board of directors will take charge of the road on July 1. Huntington and Hopkins retain one share each and remain for the present in the board.

NEW YORK, June 21.—Meacham says, in his report of the Modoc fighting during the war, the Modocs killed and wounded about three soldiers for every warrior in their force, at that time numbering not more than sixty-five, and that during the first three days' fight this band not only held out against eight hundred troops, armed with every appliance of modern warfare, but kept a passage open for retreat, which even the Warm Spring Indian scouts could not close.

Meacham's idea of the best policy for the future is that all lines for tribes be abolished; that the Indians be made amenable to the laws, and be placed on the same footing with other murderers.

There were seven sunstrokes yesterday.

The steamer Juniata expected to sail to-day through Hellgate, but her crew was reduced from two hundred and ten to one hundred and thirty. She will take two thousand five hundred tons of coal for the use of the Tigress, when the latter reaches Disco. The Juniata also takes two steam launches. The Tigress is expected to reach Brooklyn navy-yard on Monday, when the work of fitting her out will be immediately commenced, in order that she may leave here for her cruise on the fourth or fifth of July. The Tigress will be provisioned for two years.

NASHVILLE, June 21.—The mortuary list from cholera shows fifty-nine deaths, of which forty-eight were colored. The weather is rainy, with occasional sunshine.

MEMPHIS, June 21.—Weather clear and hot to-day. There were only nineteen interments to-day, against twenty-four yesterday. Of these fourteen died of cholera. Reports from the surrounding country state that the disease still prevailed, but in the country has rarely proved fatal.

NEW YORK, June 22.—The Herald has a letter from Khartoum, dated April 30, confirming the news of the safety of Sir Samuel Baker's family. They were at Fatuka in February, and had been reinforced by two hundred soldiers and the troops of a mercantile establishment, and would at once renew the march to Albert Nyanza.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., June 22.—An attempt to rob the People's Bank, at Chillicothe, on Friday night, was made by Smith Rambo, a wealthy but notoriously bad character, who planned with confederates to seize the cashier of the bank and hold him as hostage, and compel his wife to open the bank and vault.

The design was disclosed, and when Rambo went to the cashier's house, late on Friday night, he was confronted by a party of citizens, and after a short parley riddled with bullets and instantly killed. Two confederates, arrested yesterday morning, are now in jail.

NASHVILLE, June 22.—The mortality from cholera is fifty-two, against fifty-nine yesterday. Clear and apparently healthy weather all day.

MEMPHIS, June 22.—There has been a marked decrease in deaths from cholera. The whole number of interments is nineteen, of which nine were from cholera. It is the general belief that the epidemic has run its course here, and will rapidly disappear; but the reports from the surrounding country along the railroad are still very gloomy.

ATLANTA, June 23.—The Atlanta Sun has been merged into the Atlanta Constitution. Hon. A. H. Stephens becomes the corresponding editor of the Constitution.

NASHVILLE, June 23.—Thirty-seven deaths from cholera to-day, against fifty-five yesterday. Of the deaths to-day twenty-nine were colored. The weather to-day was considered favorable to the disease.

CINCINNATI, June 23.—Five deaths from cholera reported at the health office to-day.

MEMPHIS, June 23.—There were eight interments from the cholera to-day. The weather is hot and dry, and the disease is rapidly abating.

EVANSVILLE, June 24.—The report of the health officers shows that thirteen cases of cholera have occurred in this city since the disease first appeared.

An investigation shows that there have been several deaths out of the above number.

CINCINNATI, June 24.—Four deaths from cholera reported to-day at the health office.

NASHVILLE, June 24.—There were twenty-nine deaths to-day from cholera, of which eight were white. Every one is much more hopeful and business is improving.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 24.—In the case of the exclusion of the Bible from the public schools in Cincinnati, the Supreme Court to-day decided that the School Board had the right to pass a resolution to exclude not only the Bible and singing, but religious instruction, and the court has no authority to interfere with their decision in the exercise of this power.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, June 18.—The Shah of Persia crossed the channel to-day in the royal yacht, accompanied by a fleet of iron-clads, and arrived at Dover at half-past two P. M. The city was gayly decorated and crowded with visitors, and the shipping in the harbor was covered with flags and streamers. As the royal visitor landed a salute was fired from the fleet and shore. He was received by the Duke of Edinburg and Prince Arthur. The mayor and corporation of Dover presented an address, to which the Shah replied by thanking them for his kind reception on entering her majesty's dominions—a reception, he said, which made him feel he was among friends.

The Shah and suite, accompanied by the royal princes, then took a special train for London. They arrived at Charing Cross at six o'clock. The building was decorated with flags and flowers, and the platform covered with crimson cloth. There was a heavy rain previously, but immense crowds surrounded the place and filled the adjacent street. On alighting the Shah was met by the Prince of Wales, Prince Teck, Prince Christian and the Duke of Cambridge, who cordially welcomed him to England. The entire party then entered a carriage and drove slowly to Marlborough House.

Notwithstanding the inclement weather, which somewhat marred the splendor of the spectacle, the streets, windows and house-tops along the line of the procession were filled with people, who kept up a most enthusiastic cheering.

The Shah dined at the Marlborough House to-night with the Prince of Wales.

LONDON, June 19.—A dispatch from on board the ship Great Eastern, dated noon yesterday, reports that up to that hour four hundred and forty-three miles of cable had been paid out. The Great Eastern was in latitude fifty-three degrees twenty minutes, and longitude twenty degrees and thirty-six minutes.

PARIS, June 21.—Executions have been issued against the goods of Gustave Courbet, and they are to be sold to-day, to assist in defraying the expenses incurred in reconstructing the Column Vendome.

CITY OF MEXICO, June 22.—The Mexican press, discussing the question of the new ministry, say they consider the change urgent, in view of the recent necessity which has arisen for protection of Protestant clergymen in Mexico. The interference of the military is especially demanded for the defense, in Orizaba, from the fury of Catholic fanatics, a Protestant bishop there having been compelled to leave the place because his life was threatened.

A riot occurred in Morelia, on account of the expulsion of the Jesuits.

PARIS, June 22.—The Union publishes a rumor from Berlin that the Emperor William is incapacitated for further duty, and the Crown Prince Frederick William will soon be proclaimed regent.

The municipal election in Strasbourg resulted in the triumph of anti-German candidates.

ROME, June 22.—The Pope is to deliver an allocution on Monday. The personal excommunication of King Victor Emanuel is expected to be pronounced.

ST. PETERSBURG, June 23.—General Kaufman's column of the Khivan expedition captured a strong fortress within sixty miles of the capital of Khanath.

LONDON, June 24.—A review of seven thousand troops was held by Queen Victoria at Windsor Park this afternoon, in honor of the Shah of Persia. The weather was showery, but the crowds of spectators were enormous. After a series of brilliant maneuvers, the troops formed in line and marched by the Queen and Shah. Among the distinguished persons who assisted at the review were the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Duke of Edinburg, Prince Leopold, Duke of Cambridge, Princess Beatrice, the Czarowitch and his wife, Princess Dagmar.

PARIS, June 24.—A stormy debate occurred in the Assembly to-day on the order issued by the prefect of the Department of the Rhine, prohibiting civil burials after the hour of seven in the morning. A motion made by the Left, condemning the prefect's acts, was rejected by a large majority.

The Catholic World.

The "situation" in the Catholic world becomes decidedly interesting. The Old Catholics at their Cologne assembly, held June 4, elected Prof. Reinkens bishop, thus completing their organization; the Pope is in declining health, and speculation is all alive as to his successor, and finally the bill suppressing religious corporations in Rome has passed the Italian Parliament. Events truly move with swiftness.

By the election of a bishop, the separation between the Old Catholics and the Ultramontanes becomes final. The reform movement may now assume continental proportions. By the application of its ecclesiastical law to Rome, Italy has struck a final blow at the political power of the church. The suppression of monastic establishments, and the conversion of their revenues to the uses of the State, begun by Cavour, and followed up by Ratazzi and Ricasoli, is complete; the same law is now applied to the whole of Italy. The heads of the religious houses of Rome have protested against the action of the State, but protests are in vain. For the sake of its own preservation the State has been compelled to exercise its sovereign power, and to rescue its domain from the all-grasping church.

Thus history repeats itself all over Europe. The church, holding the keys of the kingdom of heaven, compels her subjects, out of whom money can be extracted, to pay her price for the opening of the gates. Pardons, indulgences, the repose of the soul hereafter, have been purchasable commodities. Enriched by such means, and grasping all, the church has, throughout western Europe, lost all. State after State has confiscated her ill-gotten wealth. Her greed of land, through the possession of which she has tried to control the State, has again and again brought on her a terrible retribution. Mexico has followed the old-world precedent; three hundred years of Latin Christianity had made the existence of a free Mexican State well-nigh impossible. So Rome builds, but does not keep; adds acre to acre and league to league, but cannot hold. Scheming to smother modern civilization, her corporate possessions are confiscated in State after State, that civilization may live. The wise are overtaken in their craftiness, and the schemers scheme for naught.

Will it be so here in the United States? We answer, Yes, inevitably, if Rome pursues here her ancient policy. The safety of the State will be with us as it has been with other nations—the supreme law. Any corporation, religious or secular, that threatens the safety of the State will meet with a swift doom from the American people. The liberty of worship will never be disputed, but the right to suppress the State is not granted in the American Constitution.—Methodist.

FIRST IMPRESSIONS.—I think we may assert that, in a hundred men, there are more than ninety who are what they are, good or bad, useful or pernicious to society, from the instruction they have received. It is on education that depend the great difference observable among them. The least and most imperceptible impressions received in our infancy have consequences very important and of a long duration. It is with these first impressions as with a river, whose waters can be easily turned by different canals in quite opposite courses; so that, from the insensible direction the stream receives at its source, it takes different directions, and at last arrives at places far distant from each other; and with the same facility we may, I think, turn the minds of children to what direction we please.

KINDNESS is stronger than the sword.

From the Work.

SELMA DISTRICT CONFERENCE, ALABAMA.—Mr. Editor: We have just closed our District Conference at this place. The attendance was large, and the sessions of the conference were entertaining and profitable. The preaching was good and of great benefit to the church and community. Delegates to the Annual Conference: Warren E. Kennedy, John W. Portis, Levi W. Reeves and Euclid Johnson. Alternates—P. G. Wood and J. A. Groves. Next conference to be held at Rehoboth. Yours, etc.,

ANDREW J. BRIGGS.

UNIONTOWN, ALA., June 16, 1873.

MOBILE DISTRICT CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: The third session of the Mobile District Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South was held at Pensacola, Florida, May 29-31, 1873. Rev. Henry Urquhart, presiding elder, of the district, was president, and J. E. Foust was chosen secretary.

Four of the charges within the district were not represented, either by clerical or lay members, and from this fact we are unable to make out a correct statistical report of the district. We gather the following summary from the reports made:

The church throughout the district is in good condition spiritually. There have been revivals in almost every charge, and more especially in the stations of the district. The churches in Mobile have received on application nearly one hundred members since the beginning of the year. At Milton there has been a most gracious revival. Pensacola was enjoying a season of refreshing when the conference closed. The reports from the circuits were very encouraging, several of them having received quite a number into the church during the year. We expect, by the blessing of God, to be able to report a large increase at our next Annual Conference. Justice requires us to say, in this connection, that much of our spiritual prosperity is owing to the faith, prayers and labors of our beloved presiding elder. The missions within the district were reported as being in a hopeful condition. The missionaries labor under some embarrassments, owing to the scarcity of funds to supply their temporal wants; but the cry of the people for the bread of life impels them to endure these privations in preaching the gospel to them. All the missions, except one, are supplied with preachers, and arrangements are being made to send a minister to that place at the earliest possible time.

The Sunday schools are doing well throughout the district. Every charge seems to be fully awake to this interest of the church. A large proportion of the accessions to the church is from the Sabbath schools. The uniform lesson system is the one adopted in all our schools. A want of suitable superintendents and punctual teachers is a hinderance to this interest of the church in many of the country places, but efforts are being made to improve in these particulars.

The finances, with a few exceptions, are considerably in arrears. Several of the pastors reported very small receipts up to date, and the prospects in the future are rather gloomy. The ministers that were absent excused themselves because funds were short. The old plan of deferring payment till the end of the year, and then only receiving a per cent. of the assessment, bears heavily upon the preacher, and more especially when his family is large. Some of the preachers are going in debt constantly, hoping to pay at the end of the year. When will the church adopt the plan of paying up monthly? This is the easiest and best for all concerned.

There are about six parsonages in the district, most of which are comfortable, but the houses of worship, especially on the circuits, are in many instances very uncomfortable, and, that which is worse, in most instances we have no titles to the places where we worship. This carelessness ought not to be longer indulged. Our preachers and people should see to it that we have the legal right where we worship.

The following brethren were elected delegates to the next Annual Conference: R. P. Baker, John Hargrove, John Chain and L. A. Pou. Alternates—Price Williams, Rev. B. G. Fleming, W. Briggs and R. H. Turner.

During the session of the conference the religious exercises were interesting and productive of good. Our Presbyterian friends joined with us, and we all felt that it was pleasant for brethren to dwell together in unity. The members of the conference were well entertained by the citizens of Pensacola, and will not soon forget the kindness and courtesies shown them by that good people.

By order of the conference.

J. E. FOUST, Sec.

MOBILE, June 18, 1873.

The Walworth Parricide.

Of this horrible affair the New York Observer says:

Chancellor Walworth's grandson has become a deliberate murderer of his own father. It is, and probably always will be, one of the unsolved mysteries of Providence that the son of such a parent should become such a man as the victim is reputed to have been, and that in the third generation a murderer should be! The crime, which is a stain on our civilization as a people, is also an expression of that want of reverence and subjection which domestic life in our day exhibits.

Nor would the outside world have all the facts on which to form a judgment on this extraordinary history unless it is stated that in the latter part of his life this quiet Protestant elder, having been deprived by death of the mother of his children, married the widow of General Hardin, of Kentucky, a Roman Catholic lady with one daughter. This was the beginning of a total revolution in the household of the chancellor. His own domestic habits underwent a transformation so extraordinary that it would be scarcely credited if we should describe it. His two sons became Roman Catholics. One of them developed into a Romish priest. The other married his stepmother's daughter, became a libertine, a traitor to his country, a profligate; then followed separation of husband and wife, then enmity of the children to the father, and finally the murder of the father by his oldest son.

And the crime is without a parallel in modern annals. The old Greeks are said to have had no law to punish this crime because it was not considered possible that such a monster as a parricide could be. All theories of education, culture and association as restraints fail in presence of such a tragedy. We see a youth in his teens, yet old enough to feel all social influences, with his mental and moral faculties in perfect exercise, deliberately planning the murder of his father in a distant city; he conceals his purpose, travels a hundred and seventy miles, procures and loads a revolver; calls at the house of his father prepared to kill him if he found him there; leaves a note to decoy his unsuspicious victim into his room in a public house; and then, standing up before his defenseless parent, shoots him down like a dog—shoots him four times to make his savage vengeance sure! We repeat it, the crime, for malignity, baseness, meanness, cowardice, cold-blooded atrocity, is without a parallel in modern annals.

Changing Clothing.

Health is often lost, and sometimes life itself, by laying aside winter clothing too early. Laying flannels aside in the spring is a most pernicious practice. They are as necessary in July as in January. We can better do without woolens next the skin in midwinter than in midsummer. We do not get over-heated in winter; we do in summer; and the most frequent exciting cause of coughs, colds and consumption is a rapid falling of the temperature of the body. All are familiar with the fact that a sudden checking of perspiration is always dangerous; very little exercise causes us to perspire in summer, and a very slight draught of air checks the perspiration; hence eminent French physicians have stated, after a long series of observations, that colds taken in summer excite the most incurable forms of consumption. White woolen flannel is a most efficient guard against these sudden changes, because it keeps the heat of the body in while it repels the excessive heat from without; it conveys the water of perspiration to its outside, while the surface next the skin is drier. We all know that silk, cotton and linen next the skin get saturated with water, and if, for an instant, the slightest draught of air gets between the skin and the material there is a chamel-like chill when that material touches the skin again, reminding us of the damps of death. The rule should be to wear white woolen flannel next the skin all the year round; thick in winter, a little thinner in April, a gauze material on the first day of July. On the first of October resume what was laid aside in July; on the first of December put on the thickest, extending to ankles and wrists.

These rules of change are especially necessary to all old people, to all invalids and young children; day-laborers and all out-door workers would be incalculably benefited by the same observances. These suggestions are of an importance which would justify their being read in the spring and fall to every household until the youngest child has passed the threshold to return no more as a member of the family.—Hall's Journal of Health.

WHY IS IT that callow preachers marry so quickly? Most of them have the arrangements all made before they get their parchments, and start upon their life-work, carrying a double burden, which usually increases with periodic regularity. It is not so in other professions and lines of labor. The young lawyer, physician, editor, merchant and mechanic look forward to marriage as a reward to be won by some years of hard work and economy, but the young preacher no sooner slips the leading-strings of his theological professor and draws his last dollar from the beneficiary board, than he doubles himself and becomes a family. Would it not be well to do a little rough pioneer work, and gather a congregation first? The Church Journal (Episcopal,) speaking for that denomination, says there exists among their sucking clergy a "widely-prevailing, unwise, imprudent, and, both personally and for the church, a most injurious, all-absorbing passion for matrimony."—Interior.

GOD doth not willingly afflict any of his children. They always stand in absolute need at that very time of that very affliction he sends. It could not be laid aside nor delayed longer, or altered for another, without hurt to their souls.—Charles of Bola.

Southern Methodist Bishops.

We take the following from a Nashville paper:

As the College of Bishops has been so much talked about of late, relative to the location of the Vanderbilt University, and as most of them will preach this morning at the various Methodist churches, brief sketches of their history and those who have been laid away with their fathers will not be uninteresting to our readers.

DECEASED BISHOPS.

Joshua Soule, the senior Bishop, was born in Maine, in 1781; entered the itineracy in the New York Conference, 1799; was ordained deacon, 1801; elder, 1803; was ordained Bishop in Baltimore, 1824, and died near Nashville, Tennessee, March, 1867, aged 86 years.

James Osmond Andrew was born in Georgia, 1794; joined the South Carolina Conference in 1812; was ordained deacon, 1814; elder, 1816; was ordained Bishop in Philadelphia, 1832, and died in Mobile, Alabama, March 2, 1871, aged 77 years.

William Capers was born in South Carolina, 1790; entered the itinerancy in the South Carolina Conference, 1808; was ordained deacon, 1810; elder, 1812; was elected Bishop in Petersburg, Virginia, 1846; and died in South Carolina, January, 1855, aged 65 years.

Henry B. Bascom was born in New York, 1796; joined the Ohio Conference, 1803; was ordained deacon, 1815; elder, 1817; was elected Bishop at St. Louis, 1850; and died in Kentucky, September, 1850, aged 54 years.

From the foregoing it will be seen that since the organization of the Methodist Episcopal Church South death has claimed four members of the College of Bishops. There are now nine

LIVING BISHOPS.

John Early was born in Virginia in 1786; joined the Virginia Conference, 1807; was ordained deacon in 1809; elder, 1811; was elected Bishop at Columbus, Georgia, 1854. He is now 87 years old, and is confined to his room most of his time. He resides at Lynchburg, Virginia, but will not be able to attend the present meeting of his colleagues.

Robert Paine was born in North Carolina, 1799; joined the Tennessee Conference in 1818; was ordained deacon, 1822; elder, 1824; was elected Bishop at Petersburg, Virginia, 1846. He is now 74 years of age, and lives in Aberdeen, Mississippi. He is present, and presides over the deliberations of the College of Bishops.

George Foster Pierce was born in Georgia, 1811, and is now in his sixty-second year. He joined the Georgia Conference, 1830; was ordained deacon, 1832; elder, 1834; was elected Bishop at Columbus, Georgia, 1854. His residence is Sparta, Georgia. He is also present at this meeting.

Hubbard Hinde Kavanaugh was born in Kentucky, 1802; joined the Kentucky Conference, 1823; was ordained deacon, 1825; elder, 1827; was elected Bishop at Columbus, Georgia, 1854. He is now 71 years old, and resides in Louisville, Kentucky.

William May Wightman was born in South Carolina, 1808; joined the South Carolina Conference, 1828; was ordained deacon, 1830; elder, 1832; was elected Bishop at New Orleans, 1866. His home is Charleston, South Carolina. He is 65 years old, and is present at this meeting.

Enoch M. Marvin was born in Missouri, 1823; joined the Missouri Conference, 1841; was ordained deacon, 1843; elder, 1845; was elected Bishop at New Orleans, 1866. He is now 50 years old, and resides at St. Louis, Missouri. He is in attendance.

David Seth Doggett was born in Virginia, 1810; joined the Virginia Conference, 1829; was ordained deacon, 1832; elder, 1833, and was elected Bishop at New Orleans, Louisiana, 1866. He is 63 years old, and lives in Richmond, Virginia. He is present also.

Holland Nimmons McTyeire was born in South Carolina, 1824; joined the Virginia Conference, 1845; was ordained deacon, 1848; elder, 1849, and was elected Bishop at New Orleans, Louisiana, 1866. Bishop McTyeire is therefore 49 years old, and is the youngest one of the nine, while Bishop Early is the oldest. He is secretary of the College of Bishops, and is in his place.

John Christian Keener was born in Maryland, 1819; he joined the Alabama Conference, 1842; was ordained deacon, 1844; elder, 1846, and was elected Bishop at Memphis, Tennessee, 1870. He is 54 years old, and resides in New Orleans. He is present also.

It may be noted that Virginia has furnished 2, Georgia 2, South Carolina 3, Maine, North Carolina, New York, Kentucky, Missouri and Maryland 1 each of the thirteen that have been elected Bishops. Tennessee has not as yet furnished the Church South with a Bishop, but if we are not mistaken there is some first-class "Bishop timber" here.

THE first steamer that crossed the Atlantic was the Savannah. She sailed from Savannah, Georgia, on the twenty-second of May, 1819, used up all her fuel in ten days, and reached Liverpool under canvas on the twenty-second of June. She went on soon after to St. Petersburg and Stockholm, and returned in December following. The first voyages by steamships were made by the Sirius and Great Western in 1838, the Sirius coming from London to New York in seventeen days, and the Great Western from Bristol in fifteen days. They arrived at this port on the same day, April 23.

THURSDAY, JUNE 26, 1873.

THE MANY AND THE ONE.

BY W. M. L. JAY.

In the sky a cloud hung high,
And it said: "How blest am I!
All my breast is full of dew,
And my home is in the blue,
And the sunbeams dint me through."
"Give me!" wailed the earth.
Melted by the pleons cell,
Gave the cloud itself—its all.
Where it hung the sunbeams fall.

In the garden rose a tree,
And it laughed: "Oh, fair to see
Is this fruit so ripe and fine,
Red and golden, that doth shine
Through these bright green leaves of mine!"
"Give me!" said the man.
Low it bend its gracious head,
All its gold and all its red
Meekly in his hands it shed.

At her humble cottage door
Sat a woman old and poor,
Thinking: "Thus far am I led;
Never yet I wanted bread;
Need I now the future dread?"
"Give me!" begged the "tramp."
And she gave—the best she could—
Cup of water, bits of food,
Kindly smile and counsel good.

On his throne, the Lord most high
Said, serene: "What joy have I,
With the glory that was mine,
Ere the planets knew to shine,
Or the clay held breath divine!"
"Give me!" moaned the world.
And he gave—himself—entire,
Passed through suffering as through fire,
So to meet the world's desire.

In his hall the rich man stands,
Saying: "Lo! these heaped-up hands!
I have all that I can hold;
I have houses, I have gold,
Lands and treasures manifold."
"Give me!" sighs the poor.
He—he only—calm and cold,
Shuts within a tighter hold
Houses, lands and store of gold.

An Increase of Troublers.

A distinctive, clear-faced experience is common to all spiritual Christians. "Therefore, being justified by faith, we have peace (experience peace) with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ; by whom also we have (or experience) access by faith into this grace wherever we stand, and rejoice in hope of the glory of God. And not only so, but we glory in tribulations also, knowing (experiencing) that tribulation worketh patience, and patience experience, and experience hope, and hope maketh not ashamed." This Christian experience is knowledge, trial, test. It is a species of soul-history, containing an account of the influences and forces moving to a knowledge of sin, followed by repentance, faith, an acceptance of Christ, to conversion, to a full and satisfactory sense of God's love shed abroad in the heart. It is the life of contrast. It reveals to the Christian the difference between his present and former states, his present and former loves, his present and former desires and enjoyments, his present and former propensions. "Ye were some time in darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord." "Old things are passed away, and behold, all things are become new."

There is a striking, arresting oneness in Christian experience. From the days of the first Christian to the present moment this harmony exists. Let conversion, the new birth, come when and how and where it may—in this or that country, in Europe or America, in town or city, in the crowd or alone—this significant cognation is found, this bond of similarity, a oneness of influences and forces, bringing life and salvation to the heart, is manifest. Well may we ask: How can it be otherwise when it is the same salvation, the same fallen, unclean human nature purified and made glad? Kindred forces recognize each other, in immediate and perfect union, meet where they may. To say the least of it, this fact gives potency to Christian experience. It is an inspiration to faith and effort. It is a safe guide and mature counselor. To find that others have passed these sloughs, and safely over rocky ledges, and escaped yawning chasms, and to know how they did it, becomes a chart and compass to others following after.

Great prominence is given in the Bible to Christian experience. The parties speaking, or spoken of, tell of the dealings of God with them—of their hopes, fears, temptations and trials, of their falls and recovery. Of the printed sermons given us from Paul, much space is occupied with his experience. He enters into detail as to his surroundings—what he saw, heard and felt. Some of the sublimest and most eloquent passages in God's word are found in the experience of his servants. David tells us of the horrible pit and deep, miry clay; of how he waited patiently for the Lord; how the Lord hearkened and heard. Then he calls upon the world to listen to the story of his conversion—of what great things the Lord had done for his soul. Where is the Christian whose heart is not joined to David's in a similar experience?

And, by the by, the special object of this paper, from which we have greatly wandered, is to call attention to a particular phase in the experience of this man of God. At a time when he was deeply spiritual; at a period in his life when he could correctly and justly estimate the depth of the pit, and the horribleness of the mire and clay, brought in contrast with the firmness and safety of the rock; at an hour when he knew the fullness of the difference between the despairing cry of a helpless sinner, and the new song, the triumphant shout, of the redeemed, he experienced what all Christians have experienced—a strange increase of troublers: "Many rising up against him." The heart weeps as it listens to his sad complaint: "Lord, how are they increased that trouble me!" He was fleeing, as some suppose, from the anger, murderous anger, of either Saul or his own son, Absalom. Yet he was the chosen of God, in earnest harmony with his Maker. His subsequent triumph shows the friendship of Heaven. His quick recognition of the source of his help indicates his spiritual wisdom. There is something in the spirit of the complaint intensely significant of an increase of troublers in seeming ratio with the approach of deliverance. He seems to say: "Instead of a cessation of hostilities, a weakening of the foe, and lessening of difficulties, they gather their forces, and assault me with redoubled fury." "Lord, how are they increased that trouble me!"

The patriarch found an increase of trouble as his deliverance from famine and as the crowning joy of his life approached. He cried out: "All these things are against me." The demand of Moses, made in the name of God, for their deliverance from bondage increased the troubles of the Israelites. The same toil of bricks was required, in addition to supplying their own straw. When relieved of this, they have the mountains on either side, the Red sea in front, and an angry host in the rear. Delivered here, they find water, but it is bitter; in the wilderness a dry rock—not even bitter water to quench their thirst. The Savior passed from the temptation to the garden of agony; from the garden to cruel scourgings, mockery and crown of thorns; from the crown of thorns to the nails, the spear and the agony of the cross. The disciples, tossed from wave to wave, and threatened with instant death, were evidently more frightened at the approach of deliverance than all the concentrated fury of the storm. "They cried out with fear, saying, It is a spirit." In their first experience in a storm they had the Master with them. Asleep in the hinder part of the ship, they had but to awake him to their help. "The darkest hour," says the old adage, "is just before day." The deep agony of the heart, the throes and travail of the soul, culminates in the moment of new life. The Christian, growing in grace, finds with increased strength an increase of troublers. He is the better prepared, however, to overcome them and fly to God in prayer. The evil spirit, in vicious habits and neglect of duty, makes one final and mighty effort as deliverance draws nigh. "As he was yet coming the devil threw him down and tare him."

The River of Death.

The River of Death has always been a terror to frail mortality. Only one voyage upon its waters is expected. This theory may not be altogether correct, as on the thirty-first of May, 1873, duty called me to leave the treasures of my heart while I went to a place where souls were in bondage, there to tell of freedom and salvation from sin. I desired to tarry there, but duty bid me hasten toward the River of Death. O how the flesh craved exemption! None came. I soon found the power of steam accelerating the speed that lessened the distance toward the sepulchral shores.

Before launching upon the dark waters, as I walked the crowded streets of a great city—made famous during the late war—a ministering angel, hunting for souls, met me. Seeing me in haste to move on, he earnestly requested me to turn aside at twelve M., and for an hour meet a band of faithful pilgrims, who at that hour daily turn aside from life's paths for refreshment at a throne of grace. I was anxious to bid a few friends farewell; also desired to feast with the pilgrims. At twelve M. I was in the courts of the Lord's house, and for an hour enjoyed the fellowship of saints. O how pleasant to hear the testimony of strangers, telling about their love to my Jesus! While there I forgot about my death-voyage.

Toward night I wended my way down, down. Down the steep hillside, at the water's edge, in waiting for me was a nondescript-looking creature, but a line and plank holding it to the shore. My heart trembled with fear as I looked at it. Must I go on? "Yes," responded the voice of duty. "But look up. See on high there is carried a mystic letter; solve it, and take courage." I obeyed. Sure enough, the letter P was plainly visible. Did it mean "Power to cross the water?" Every heave of its trembling bosom indicated sufficient power. P stands for patience; and it is said: "In patience possess ye your souls." Yet I turned on the shore. I tried again, satisfied that I had not solved the problem. P stands for providence. Then I remembered the promise: "Trust in the Lord with all thy heart; lean not to thine own understanding; in all thy ways acknowledge me, and I will direct thy paths."

I felt I could now walk on that plank, quivering with the vibrations of this monster's breathing, shaking every nerve in my body.

O how lonely I felt as we parted from the shore. Truly there were others bound on the same voyage, but all strangers to me. None appeared to love my Savior, as the staple of their conversation was profanity. God's name was often called, but only to curse their souls. Sad I indeed was as I looked upon the receding shore and beheld, possibly for the last time, the beautiful residences of friends nestling on the hill-sides, amidst enchanting groves and fairy bowers. On, on I was borne. I looked at them till sight failed me. Soon darkness settled around us, shutting me up to the sense of feeling—and feel I did—the trembling, jarring, breathing of the monster beneath me; and soon symptoms of weakness—a pressure upon the valves of life—closed my eyes. I became calm—not to sleep, as I could hear the diabolical sounds of clanking chains, fierce oaths, and occasionally a bellow from the huge Leviathan as he warned all the weak to keep out of his way. After a time quiet reigned in my heart. I opened my eyes. Amidst the surrounding gloom I discerned something like the stars, seen from the home I had left; yea, I persuaded myself that they were the same. Then I felt calmer. Brightly they shone, bidding me look up. Then the associations of a lifetime passed my mental vision, as in review. After a time the moon and stars passed from sight, as we approached a light of greater magnitude and brilliancy. Whence comes this light? for glorious it is, I thought, as an orb appeared coming apparently out of the bosom of the River of Death, looming up in majestic splendor. Birds of snow-white and golden-colored plumage flitted across and over our path, bringing to mind fond remembrances of childhood's hours. The birds seemed to say: "No death here."

I looked upon the water. Its color was changing from dark, turbid hues to a lighter color. I ventured to ask my guide: "How near is the city?" (not that I was unwilling to continue longer on the stream, for, while a stranger among strangers, I received naught but kindness; but anxiety to see the glittering walls of the royal city, and meeting of loved ones there, evoked the inquiry.) My guide replied: "See in the distance that range of hills; around that bend in the river we must go; then, if you will look up, the city can be seen."

I had often heard that there was a city, but had never seen it. Obeying my guide, I looked and beheld the beautiful city. I strained my eyes to see if any loved one was on the other shore, expecting, looking for me. "Would I be known, or must my guide introduce me?" O painful thought, not to be recognized! As my eyes became accustomed to the new atmosphere I felt sure that one face of the crowd, standing on the shore, I recognized as that of a brother. Looking toward us as we approached, my eyes were upon him. As our eyes fixed upon each other my heart was thrilled to see him give a smile of recognition. "I was expected; I was known; he was waiting only for me." "Now we see through a glass darkly, but then face to face; now I know in part, but then shall I know even as also I am known." Leviathan's breath became easier, his limbs began to relax, trembling, more faint; but lo! a most unearthly bellowing, repeated three times, assured us that he died, the monarch of the waters.

The haven of rest is reached, the hand of a brother grasped mine, and by him I was led to the home prepared for me amidst the many mansions of this beautiful city. I looked around and exclaimed: "How lovely! How charming, even beyond conception!" Never did I dream of its dimensions, its glories, its generous inhabitants. "Behold, the half was never told me" of the beautiful city of Yazoo, near the River of Death.

Report of the Sunday School Committee,

ADOPTED BY THE MERIDIAN DIST. CONFERENCE, APRIL 25, 1873.

We, the undersigned committee, appointed by this District Conference to introduce resolutions for consideration on the subject of Sabbath schools, would respectfully report that we have given the subject such thought as our limited time would permit.

We conceive that the importance of the subject cannot be overestimated, but we cannot suppose that the members of this conference need light on a subject so often and so ably enforced in all our religious periodicals, and so thoroughly enjoined by all the authority of the church, from the General Conference to the society meetings. Yet our appointment as a committee must mean something, and we suppose that the object can only be to stir up your minds, by way of remembrance, to a well-known and a well-understood duty.

In our opinion the Sabbath school was never intended to supersede home or family religious instruction. We think no parent is justified in leaving the religious culture of his children to a Sabbath school teacher, superintendent, or even to his spiritual adviser or preacher. We think it a duty personal in its character—a trust which the Almighty has confided to the parent alone, and which can never be delegated to another.

In the code of laws—and the only code of laws framed by Almighty wisdom—parents are commanded to instill into the minds of their children the statutes and ordinances of God—to teach them to their children and their children's children throughout all their generations; to make them the topic of conversation in the family circle; to talk about them when they come in and when they go out; to talk about them along the wayside; to bind them as bracelets on their arms, and as frontlets between their eyes. When parents attempt to relieve themselves from this duty by sending their children to the Sabbath school, in our opinion they greatly err. We conceive that Sabbath schools can be but auxiliaries to home instruction in Christian households. The greatest blessing of the institution is that it is calculated to give this religious culture to the children of ungodly parents, and, unfortunately, to that numerous class of professing Christians in whose houses no family altar has ever been erected, and who act as if religion was confined to the public places where God is worshiped; who neither act like nor claim to be priests in their own households.

Your committee think that the ministry should make it a sacred duty to enforce with all fervor upon the membership the necessity of family religion for the salvation of their children. The Bible should be the family book, and the children instructed therein long before they are able of themselves to read its sacred pages.

If the church was educated to this family religion we would have flourishing Sabbath schools, and no lack of competent teachers. The best Sunday school scholars are those who receive the best religious instruction at home.

Your committee have not time to go into any detailed plan upon which a Sabbath school should be conducted, and, had we time, we think it doubtful whether any general plan could be adopted—so much has to be left to circumstances.

To make a Sabbath school a success, we think, greatly depends upon the pastor. We look upon him as the starting-point—the motive power. The shepherd should feed the lambs of the flock; they should know his voice, and he be able to call them all by name. This was the case with the Good Shepherd, and so, we think, it should be with the under-shepherds. We think they should do all in their power to root out that evil, so prevalent with many professing Christians, who let their children grow up like the wild ass' colt, with the hope that at a camp meeting or at a revival they will be captured and broken to the yoke. It is better, say the Scriptures, to bear the yoke while young, for the youthful Christian makes the most faithful soldier of the cross.

The pastor should take the lead in all Sunday school enterprises—should select the superintendent, and assist him in the selection of the teachers, choosing those who, like Timothy, have known the Scripture from their youth; and then they should endeavor to enlist the parents in the cause. We think, without the earnest zeal and abiding interest of the pastor, there can be no assurance of a strong, vigorous and successful Sabbath school.

We would therefore recommend for adoption the following resolutions:

Resolved, By this District Conference, that as preachers and laymen we will use all our influence for the advancement of household and family religious instruction, and for the establishment and proper management of Sabbath schools.

Resolved, That we recommend all our preachers having charge of circuits or stations to organize Sunday schools at their preaching-places, and in all our churches where they can get ten pupils, as soon as they possibly can.

Resolved, That all these Sunday schools be organized as Methodist Sunday schools, and that our church literature be used in said schools.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

JAMES SHANKS,
C. R. RENTHER,
Committee.

Our Sunday School Literature.

MR. EDITOR: While it is far from our intention to undervalue the efforts of our indefatigable Sunday school secretary to perfect and secure the universal adoption of the system of uniform lesson papers in our schools, yet in our humble judgment they largely fail to secure the great end of Sunday school instruction.

Owing to the constitution of the youthful mind and heart, requiring them, as it were, to be written upon with the engraver's pen, as well as the axiomatic nature of many of the great facts to be taught, it occurs to us that a modification of the catechism system, with its oft-recurring impression and stamping of the truth, is still the plan to be pursued.

All of us are aware of the necessity of repetition and review in study, even among adults—of the necessity of laying line upon line, precept upon precept; and while the fundamental principles of morality and piety are inculcated in a general way in the lesson papers, yet, from the fact that they pass so hastily from one subject to another, these truths do not become fixed with the pupil, as is desired, thus to become the guide and rule of life.

Conscious, perhaps, of these defects, our secretary has already introduced catechism questions, but as yet they have not been such as to accomplish much. Youth is the time for fixing historic truths and fostering a love of the same. He who grows to maturity without becoming instructed in the great facts of history, be they sacred or profane, has misapplied the most valuable time of life. And what more effective way of learning the great truths of religion than are to be found in the study of the lives of the patriarchs and prophets, as well as all the burning and shining lights of the Old Testament Scriptures? It was in and by them that God taught his chosen people, while the great plan of the redemption and salvation of the human race was in its infancy. By analogy we must thus teach the youth of to-day. Facts thus learned and fixed, from the study of these characters, become the nuclei around which the great principles of morality will accumulate through the remainder of life. In the exclusive adoption of these lesson papers we lose the advantage thus to be derived, for in them scriptural history and biography is largely wanting.

To this it may be said that our libraries furnish all that is necessary. Perhaps true, but these books, nowadays, for the most part, are idle on the shelves, and the Visitor but imperfectly supplies their place.

Without attempting to pursue this important subject further, we will close by expressing the hope that by its discussion and investigation among the Sunday school conventions, and among the great army of its workers, light may dawn upon us, and we may be wisely guided in the adoption of the most effective plan and means of securing this great end, namely, leading children to Christ.

Those Evil Words.

MR. EDITOR: It has often been unpleasant to me, by accident or through necessity, to be thrust into a company of persons who, regardless of themselves or of that great and holy One who cannot look upon sin with the least degree of allowance, use his name irreverently, or give vent to many useless and foolish words. How little do they think of the heinousness of this crime, and how abominable it is in the sight of God, especially when we consider that he cannot look upon sin with the least degree of allowance. Our Savior himself tells us that for every idle word that men shall speak they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment. And, since by our words we are to be justified and by our words be condemned, how careful ought we to live.

With what religious care,
Who such a strict account must give
For our behavior here.

And again Christ says: "Let your communication be yea, yea, nay, nay, for whatsoever is more than these is evil." Let each of us adopt the following prayer and try to profit by its precepts: "Let the words of my mouth and the meditation of my heart be always acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my strength and my redeemer." ## Obituaries.

DIED, at Marion Station, Lauderdale county, Mississippi, on the second of May, 1873, JOSEPH MADISON, son of Rev. John A. Graham, aged five years, six months and sixteen days; on the third of May, 1873, in the same house and buried in the same grave, ALBERT WILFRED, aged nine months and three days; and on the nineteenth of May, 1873, SARAH ALVADA GRAHAM, aged two years, ten months and twenty days. WILLIE MARION GRAHAM died some time before the others.

J. C. BROGAN.

DIED, in Henry county, Alabama, June 1, 1873, RADFORD E. MCKISSACK, aged sixty-three years. He had been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church for more than forty years. He was received by the first itinerant Methodist preacher that ever traveled in this county, and was a consistent member, most of the time filling the office of class-leader. The writer has known him for twenty years, and during that time he never heard any one say but that they believed Radford McKissack was a Christian. Though poor in the things of this world, he was rich in faith, and was finally called to that rest that awaits the faithful. May God bless his seven fatherless children.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

Died, at his residence in Marengo county, Alabama, on Saturday, the fifteenth of March, 1873, Bro. WILLIAM RENTZ.

The subject of this sketch was born in Wilcox county, Alabama, October 18, 1834. He was dedicated to God by baptism in infancy. Bro. Rentz professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1857, and the same year was married to Miss Jane Kelley, daughter of Rev. John Kelley. Bro. Rentz was an industrious and working man, making all around him comfortable and pleasant. From the time he joined the church to the day of his death he was a zealous and active member of the same. In his death his family have lost their strong help and support, the community one of its best citizens, and the church one of its most faithful stewards. He leaves a wife and four children, a father and a large family of brothers and sisters to mourn his loss. May God be a husband and a father to the widow and orphans, and administer the comforts of his grace to their smitten hearts, and finally save them all in heaven, where parting will be no more.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

Whereas, Divine Providence has removed from our midst and taken to himself on high SARAH ELNORA CHAPMAN, who has been for several years connected with the Franklin Methodist Sunday school, and who departed this life May 25, 1873, it becomes us, the members of this school, to offer this sad yet sweet tribute to her memory. Although she was taken away from this world at the early age of sixteen, yet she had not failed to reflect the moral and religious benefits of Sunday school training. Wishing to express our sorrow, we render this the last tribute of our school by making known that we believe our loss is her eternal gain; therefore,

Resolved, That while we bow in meek submission to the will of an all-wise and kind Providence, and believe Heaven's decrees to be righteous and good, yet we do deplore the sad fact that death has visited our midst and claimed for its victim one of our little band.

Resolved, That we hereby tender her bereaved parents and little brothers and sisters our sincerest sympathy and best wishes in this their hour of trial, and would assure them that we believe that Nora is not dead, but sleepeth; and, instead of listening to our songs to-day, she is listening to the songs of the angels in the paradise of God.

FRANKLIN METHODIST S. S.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

Whereas, It has pleased almighty God to remove from our midst our much-esteemed and beloved brother, WILLIAM P. THOMAS, who died at his home in Bibb county, Alabama, March 19, 1873, in the seventy-fifth year of his age:

From the days of his youth to his death he was faithful to his God. For more than forty years his house was a home for the itinerant preacher, who always met with an encouraging smile and a hearty welcome. His family religion was of a pure and biblical character. He taught his children to fear God and keep his commandments, which is the whole duty of man. The result was most satisfactory, as shown in the deep piety of his family. He loved his church and highly esteemed its privileges. As a steward of the circuit he did his duty and magnified his office. He died without a moment's warning, leaving no expressed testimony of the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus our Lord; yet a long life of deep piety assures us of his rest in heaven; therefore,

Resolved, That while we deeply feel his absence from the board of stewards, and the loss of his pious example to the church, we bow submissively to the will of him who does all things well, knowing that our loss is his infinite gain.

Resolved, That we truly sympathize with his aged companion and family in their bereavement.

Resolved, That a copy of the above be sent to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication, and also a copy to the family.

J. S. HANSBERGER, Sec.

CLARA HUGHES LINDSAY was born February 1, 1837, at Grand Gulf, Mississippi; was married to Colonel William C. Crow, of Vermillion parish, Louisiana, December 13, 1855; embraced religion, received baptism and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church South under my ministry in October, 1868; was the mother of three children, two whom preceded her to the home of the blest; and died March 22, 1873, at the residence of her sister-in-law, Mrs. Irvin, in Lafayette, Louisiana. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord." Hence she is blessed, for her end was the calm, enabling triumph of a devoted Christian life. It is seldom the pen has such a character to portray, and seldom indeed that death's barbed arrow lands such a shining mark.

Sister Crow was a truly beautiful woman, possessing a queenly grace, a most lovely face, together with the most dignified yet gentle, winning manners, added to earnest piety which beamed in her smiles, burned in her conversation and glowed in her life. Truly the "beauty of the Lord our God was upon her," and she was beautiful. Her bodily afflictions were long and severe, yet fortitude and Christian resignation demonstrated her faith in God through all. She leaves a large circle of relatives and friends, who sorrow—truly, deeply sorrow—but in hope; for though she may not return to us and again lead us in our songs of praise to God in our soleum assemblies for worship, we can go to her, and with her again join in sweet anthems of praise to him who led the way, smoothed the path, and strewed with the blossoms of hope her road to death; then, extracting his sting and throwing a halo of joyous light into the tomb, cleft the air and opened the gates of the heavenly city, that in deathless triumph she (and all who trust in Jesus) might

Upward rise, to paradise,
Join the throng, the notes prolong,
On earth begun; and 'yond the sun,
'Mid heaven's light, with angels bright,
Forever bring, to Christ the King,
Sweet-sounding praise, through endless days.

B. F. WHITE.

OPELOUSAS, LA., June 4, 1873.

DIED, on the thirteenth of December, 1872, near Rocky Spring, Claiborne county, Mississippi, LAWRENCE W. LONG, aged eighteen years, six months and seven days.

Surrounded, while in the tender years of childhood, by the holy influences of Christianity, Lawrence developed into youth with that character beautifully illustrative of the good and good influence exercised upon the whole of the future career of one raised from the mother's lap to love and trust its God. Germinating in the genial soil of Christian influence, cultivated by the means of Christian grace, and nourished by the gentle showers of the Holy Spirit, the germ of Christian life buds and grows on earth, and blossoms and bears its richest, ripest clusters of fruit in the paradise of God. From the first dawn of discretion Lawrence appears to have been a Christian. He could not be induced, either by the persuasion, flattery or ridicule of the young, to engage in diversions he thought to be wrong. He ever manifested an unusual degree of moral firmness. He seemed to live with a good conscience, and ready to meet his God. This was truly tested about two years before he united with the church. Being ill to that extent that caused all to despair of hope, and when at every moment he was expected to breathe his last, he was not only resigned, but even rejoiced in the hope of heaven through Christ.

Not long since he publicly acknowledged himself a follower of Christ by uniting with the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Such a character, of course, made a good church-member. But in the all-wise providence of God he was not long allowed to the church militant, but according to his own prediction, he was soon called hence, and the last act of his life was in testifying to a living faith and lively hope. While yet too ill to speak his anxious mother asked him if he was still confident and thought he was going to heaven, and, if so, to give her a token by pressing her hand. Immediately a bright smile lit his face, and with the last remaining strength he gave the token so much desired.

Thus in another family circle is left a vacant place, and in many loving hearts an aching void. In the church there is one true member less, and from our country has gone one of her truest sons. These have lost, yet lost but to swell the number of those whom Christ has pitied, pardoned, loved, and whom he has exalted from the depths of despair and raised to the heights of heaven, gifted with kingly honor, royally fed, clothed and attended, and finally royally crowned in the courts of heaven. Lawrence is lost to us, yet with him we may go to swell the numbers of those who, from this vale of tears, sorrow and sin, by angels are conveyed and ushered into the eternal mountain, to glory and bask beneath the fountain of uncreated light.

A BIG CLOCK.—The large clock in the English Parliament House is the largest clock in the world. The four dials of this clock are each twenty-two feet in diameter. Every hand minute the point of the minute-hand moves nearly seven inches. The clock will go eight and a half days, but it only strikes for seven and a half, so as to indicate, by its silence, any neglect in winding it up. The mere winding up of the striking mechanism occupies two hours. The pendulum is fifteen feet long; the wheels are of cast iron; the hour bell is eight feet high and nine feet in diameter, weighing nearly fifteen tons. The weight of the hammer alone exceeds four hundred pounds.

SAMMY was reading the Bible very attentively, when his father came into the room and asked him what he had found that was so interesting. The boy, looking up, eagerly exclaimed: "I have found a place in the Bible where they were all Methodists." "How so?" inquired the father. "Because," said he, "all the people said 'Amen.'"

IT IS SAID that out of 2,410 students in 11 Western colleges, only 144 are contemplating entering the ministry.

THE NEW CHURCH ORGAN.

BY W. CARLTON.

They've got a brun-new organ, Sue,
For all their fuss and search;
They've gone just as they said they'd do,
And fetched it into church.
They're gonna the critter shall be seen,
And on the preacher's right
They've hoisted up their new machine,
In everybody's sight.
They've got a chorister and choir,
Ag'in my voice and vote;
For it was never my desire
To praise the Lord by note!

I've been a sister good an' true
For five-an'-thirty year;
I've done what seemed my part to do,
An' prayed my duty clear;
I've sung the hymns both slow and quick,
Just as the preacher read,
And twice, when Deacon Tubbs was sick,
I took the fork an' led!
And now their bold, new-fangled ways
Is comin' all about,
And I, right in my latter days,
Am fairly crowded out!

To-day the preacher, good old dear,
With tears all in his eyes,
Read: "I can read my title clear
To mansions in the skies."
I always liked that blessed hymn—
I 'spose I always will;
It somehow gratifies my whim,
In good old Ortonville;
But when that choir got up to sing
I couldn't catch a word;
They sung the most dog-goadest thing
A body ever heard!

Some warbly chaps was standin' near,
An' when I see them grin,
I shet farewell to every fear,
And boldly waded in.
I thought I'd chase their tune along,
And tried with all my might;
Although my voice is good and strong,
I couldn't steer it right;
And when they was high, they I was low,
An' also contrawise;
I was too fast, or they too slow,
To "mansions in the skies."

Nor after every verse, you know,
They play a little tune;
I didn't understand, an' so
I started in too soon.
I pitched it pretty middlin' high,
I fetched a lusty tone,
But oh, alas! I found that I
Was singin' there alone!
They laughed a little, I am told;
But I had done my best,
And not a wave of trouble rolled
Across my peaceful breast.

And Sister Brown—I could but look—
She sits right front of me;
She never was no singin'-book,
An' never went to be;
But then she al'ays tried to do
The best she could, she said;
She understood the time right through,
An' kep' it with her head;
But when she tried this mornin', oh,
I had to laugh or cough!
Kep' her head a-bobbin' so,
It come a'most came off!

An' Deacon Tubbs—he all broke down,
As one might well suppose;
He took one look at Sister Brown,
And meekly scratched his nose.
He looked his hymn-book through and through,
And laid it on the seat,
And then a pensive sigh he drew,
And looked completely beat.
And when they took another bout
He didn't even rise,
But drawed his red bandanner out,
An' wiped his weepin' eyes.

I've been a sister good an' true
For five-an'-thirty year;
I've done what seemed my part to do,
An' prayed my duty clear;
I reckon death will stop my voice, I know,
For he is on my track;
And some day I to church will go,
And never more come back;
And when the folks gets up to sing—
Where'er that time shall be—
I do not want no patent thing
A-squallin' over me!

Keep Thy Foot.

A WORD FOR WORSHIPERS.

BY THE LATE ISLAY BURNS, D. D.

Keep thy foot when thou goest into the house of God and be more ready to hear than to give the sacrifice of fools; for they consider not that they do evil.—Ecclesiastes v, 1.

It is possible that the opening clause of this text bears a special allusion to the words spoken of old to Moses from the midst of the bush: "Put off thy shoes from thy feet, for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground." In that case the sacrificial duty they enjoin is reverence. We are to draw near to God in his house of prayer with the same sentiments of holy awe and fear with which he turned aside to behold that great sight. We are to recognize Christ as really present here, even as he was present there, and tread softly and heedfully as feeling that we too stand on holy ground. We are to remember ourselves, alike in the inward worship of our hearts and in the outward posture of our bodies, as in the presence of the august majesty of heaven. We are to cast off the shoes from our feet, leave all our worldly thoughts and feelings and habits of soul behind us, nor dare to tread the cloth of gold before the eternal throne with sandals soiled with the dust of earth. "We are to worship," in short, "and fall down, and kneel before the Lord our Maker." In this way the words would not express the whole of that state of mind and heart which God requires in his worship here, but only a part of it. They would inculcate the fear only, not the love; the reverence, not the confidence; the spirit of the servant rather than the spirit of the child. They would thus breathe a more exclusively Old Testament spirit, and bring home to our trembling souls the thought of the great and terrible God rather than the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. But we may take the expression in a more general and comprehensive sense. We may regard the words "keep thy foot" as simply expressing the sense they would bear in the everyday language of life. To keep our feet, to take heed to our feet, is just to walk heedfully, carefully—to mind what we are about, to remember where we are, and take care that we do not stumble. So, to keep our feet when we go to the house of God, is just to go about the sacred business seriously, thoughtfully, circumspectly, as those who realize the solemnity and importance of the occasion, and are resolved by God's grace not to miscarry therein. It includes, therefore, everything that belongs to a right approach to God. The serious preparation beforehand, the earnest attention at the time, and the prayerful improvement afterward; the attitude and behavior, in short, throughout, of a man in earnest, in contradistinction with one who heedlessly trifles with holy things. "Keep thy foot"—realize the nature of the business in which you engage; deal with it as a serious and weighty affair. Remember the momentous issues that hang upon it; the joy, the peace, the strength, the victory on the one hand, it may bring you, and the withering and deadly blight which, on the other, it may entail; and, as you remember this, draw near with anxious heed and holy fear, praying the while as you think of the manifold snares and stumbling-blocks in your way.

"Hold up my goings in thy paths, that my footsteps slip not." "O send out thy light and thy truth; let them lead me, and bring me to thy holy hill, even unto thy sanctuary."

1. "Keep thou thy foot." Take heed lest thou stumble in thy soul's damage and hurt, and to the dishonor of thy God on the very threshold of the holy place; for there are many stumbling-blocks. Satan, who is at all times watching and waiting for our halting, has his eye specially on those who are drawing near to God, the fountain of life and salvation. He would fain trip us as we go in, or, failing in that, when we are coming out. One stumbling-block is thoughtlessness: a heedless forgetfulness of the grandeur and awful importance of the occasion; rushing lightly and without fear where angels fear to tread. Another is formality: going through the whole as a matter of mere custom and lifeless form in which the heart and soul have no share. Then there is unbelief: blotting out from before our eyes the whole spiritual world with which the soul in its sacred moments has to deal, and making the living God himself but a shadow and a name. Then there is a distractedness of thought, carrying our hearts away in chase of a thousand vanities, while our bodies perform their miserable automaton service before the Lord. Alas! by how many dangers are we encompassed! What a crowd of enemies and betrayers throng around the holy place! What need of watchfulness and fear and strenuous earnestness, and above all of continual prayer, if we would not have our holiest duties turned to vanity and shame—the most golden moments of blessed opportunity snatched from our hands! Oh, then, let us give the more earnest heed to these things, lest by any means we should let them slip. "Keep thy foot when thou goest into the house of God."

2. "And be more ready to hear than to give the sacrifice of fools." The best and most effectual way to avoid the dangers which beset us in sacred duties is to keep clearly before our eyes the real nature of the work in which we are to be engaged, and the attitude of soul which it requires. Of this we have a brief but comprehensive statement in this second clause: "Be more ready to hear." In approaching to the Most High, our great business is to hear. In entering the audience chamber of the great King, our part is not to listen to our own voice, but to his. "I will hear what God the Lord will speak;" "I will stand upon my watch and set me upon the tower, and will watch to see what he will say unto me, and what I shall answer when I am reproved." "Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth." "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me." Such passages as these unveil to us the deepest springs of the new nature and of the rule and exercise of holy living. The listening heart; the waiting heart whose ears are stretched to catch the least whisper of the voice of God; that is the secret and starting-point of all spiritual and acceptable worship. Wherever it ends, here, at least, it must begin. Man in his higher, as well as in his lower nature, lives not by bread alone, or by what men may call bread, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. By that word he gave us life at first, and by the same word he sustains that life, and strengthens it more and more unto the end. Therefore we must listen for that word, for listening is to that food of the soul what eating is to the food of the body; therefore, if we would thrive in our souls, and grow strong within, we must have ever a sharp appetite, and a keen relish for that heavenly food; we must "be more ready to hear than to offer the sacrifice of fools." Not, indeed, that our intercourse with God is to be all hearing. If God is not to be silent to us, no more must we be dumb. If he graciously speaks, he as graciously listens. He is the hearer of prayer, and to him shall all flesh come, with their confessions, their petitions and all the sad detail of their sorrows and their sins. It is ours, oh, blessed and priceless privilege! to lay our petitions on the steps of the throne, as well as wait and hear the answer of the King. But even then it becomes us to demean ourselves as those who are coming to a king. If our petitions may be large, let our words be few and well weighed. Let them not outrun the sense, outrun and overshoot the real conviction and inward feeling of our souls. Here, of all places in the world, let us beware of words that are mere words—meaningless, hollow words. Better be silent altogether than thus to trifle with the holy majesty of heaven. "Be not rash with thy mouth, and let not thine heart be in haste to utter anything before God; for God is in heaven, and thou upon earth; therefore let thy words be few." In short, say only what is true; say only what you feel; pour not out words from your lips which have no corresponding reality and meaning in your heart. Do not utter raptures you feel not; contrition and heart-grief you know not; vows of holy obedience you mean not, and never intend to pay. Such prayers are nothing better than an hypocritical pretense and impious mockery of heaven! Yet what else can we do, if we are resolved to speak in many and inflated words to God? If we feel little and yet speak much, what else can the greater part be but such meaningless, soulless words as these I have described? Therefore let thy words be few. Let them be like the prayer of the publican—of the Syrophenician, of the dying thief—swift arrows of the heart, piercing the heavens. Let them be the fruit of much thought, much meditation, much searching of the divine word, much silent waiting upon God, and listening to his voice; but let the words themselves be few. Better one spark of living fire than a whole heap of ashes. Better a single grain of genuine wheat than a whole mountain of chaff. Better to utter even one word of real heart-prayer once in our life than walk amid a cloud of empty words all our days. Still the primary element in all true communion with God is hearing. This must be the groundwork of the whole. By it faith lives, hope gathers fresh courage, and devotion receives at once its sustaining aliment, and its quickening breath sustains its flame. Hearing, I say; but not in any narrow sense. Hearing, but not by any means mere hearing. In Scripture language, hearing implies obedience. It is hearing, not of the mind only, but of the heart; not of the speculative reason or curious fancy, but of the loyal, loving will. The true worshiper hears that he may believe, hears that he may follow, hears that he may obey. He listens to God's words that he may make them his own, and makes them the very life of his life by carrying them into action and by turning them into prayer. "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me." "As the eye of a servant looketh unto the hand of his master"—looketh! for what end? Surely that he may catch by every slightest sign or token his master's will, and promptly follow it. In this spirit let us go to the house of God, and wait upon every means of grace which he hath appointed for bringing us nearer to him. Let our language be the language not of our lips only, but of our hearts; their feeble, broken utterance, it may be, finding vent rather in sighs and unuttered groanings than in any articulate words, but still the utterance of our very hearts. "Speak, Lord, and open mine ears to hear thy voice. Show me thy ways, make me willing in the day of thy power; not only to know, but to do thy will; not only to hear, but to love, to obey, to trust, to follow." Then, "not being forgetful hearers, but doers of the word, we shall be blessed in our deed."—Sunday Magazine.

Dr. Guthrie's Early Ministry.

Dr. Arnold, of Rugby, said: "There are moments that are worth more than years. We cannot help it; there is no proportion between spaces of time in importance nor in value. A stray unthought-of five minutes may contain the event of a life. And this all-important moment, this moment disproportionate to all other moments, who can tell when it will be upon us?"

We are seldom conscious of the vital importance of these critical moments, which make or unmake us. Yet all human biographies and all national histories are full of them. A striking instance occurs to us in the life of the late Rev. Dr. Guthrie. For more than two years after his theological studies were finished he was unable to obtain a call to any church. Discouraged, he went to the continent and studied medicine for a time. Then he came home and entered his father's banking-house. His biographer says that at this time "he had not the knack of making friends either in or out of the pulpit." After one of his trial discourses, one of his critics called him 'a bullerin blockhead'"—the word "bullerin" being probably a coarse synonym for "bellowing," for he always gave full play to his great voice in preaching. Something, whatever it was, kept him from reaching the popular ear and heart. At last Lord Panmure presented him the living of the little church of Arbirlot. Things went on smoothly enough among his quiet farmers, but he made little impression either by thundering the laws or piping peace. So it went on until one day he observed that an anecdote which he ventured to tell in his racy way woke up his sleepy hearers, and kept them awake to the close of his sermon. From that moment he changed his style of preaching, giving full play to his wonderful genius for splendid illustration. After ten years in the country he moved to Edinburg, where for thirty years more he preached the gospel with a popularity that never waned and to crowds that never failed to throng his church. The turning-point in his ministry was that brief pulpit experiment upon his country audience.—Christian Intelligencer.

Choosing an Occupation.

In any event, let every young man choose his own occupation in life. If he have no particular bias or bent, let him find something to do all the same. A parent or guardian may say, "My son, it appears to me that your walk in life lies this way," and point out the advantages likely to accrue or that can be absolutely given him if he adopts the suggestion, but this is all that should be done. If he revolts or objects and says, "I cannot," do not retort with "You shall, or you're no son of mine." You will live to repent it. You will wear sackcloth and ashes for it. Humble yourself a little before you overthrow him. A boy has a right to his choice. He has an inalienable, natural right—yea, a constitutional one—to "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." Words mean something, and the choice of an occupation embraces all of these. How can you force a boy into a workshop to learn a trade when he has no aptness whatever for it, except that he has been seen to make boats or kites, things that a child naturally amuses himself by? You cannot; you have no right. Consider the matter somewhat. If he is a tractable, affectionate and docile boy, so much the worse; you use his natural affection as a vehicle to work your will with him, not seeing that in after-life he will become a listless, moody, inefficient laborer in the vineyard, because you have trained him to a stake, or spread him on a wall, instead of allowing him to grow free and unfettered as he should. Consider this matter in some other light than your own inclinations. He will doubtless live many years after you are gone. How shall he best perpetuate your name and family? By following his own natural inclinations, or by trying to force his nature to run on a track too wide or too narrow for him? Think over it!—Zell's Monthly.

"HOW SHALL we settle the labor question?" exclaimed a member of the Georgia Legislature, in the midst of his speech. "By all going to work and earning your living honestly!" thundered an irreverent spectator in the gallery.

Scientific.

CONCERNING the huge fossil animals found in the tertiary deposits of Wyoming, Prof. O. C. Marsh remarks: They nearly equaled the elephant in size, and their limbs were also similar to those of the great Proboscidians. The skull, however, presents a most remarkable combination of characters. It is long and narrow, and supported three separate pairs of horns. Its top was very concave, and along the back there was an enormous crest. Anteriorly it was armed with enormous tusks like those in the walrus. He adds: Several species of these remarkable creatures have already been named, but at present they cannot all be distinguished with certainty.

PROF. YOUNG, of Dartmouth College, says of Saturn's rings that the "innermost ring looks like a smoke-wreath, but as to the outer rings, no one looking at them with a telescope would ever imagine them to be anything but solid. It is certain, however, that they are not solid, or even liquid, but are probably made up of separate, independent bodies, or little satellites, which move like a flock of birds, a shower of stones or a cloud of dust, in thin, flat sheets around the planet. Of their size we have no knowledge; they may be as large as houses, or as small as the finest particles of dust. One writer calls them clouds of meteors, and to this there is no objection, if one bears in mind that a meteor is only such a particle moving in the planetary spaces."

AMONG the losses to science, through the destruction of the Chicago Academy of Sciences, were 2,000 mammals, 30 mounted skeletons, including 2 mastodons, an African elephant, sea-otter, elephant-seal, etc., 10,000 birds, 1,000 nests of eggs, and a great quantity of eggs without nests, 1,000 reptiles, 5,000 fishes, including many large sharks and rays, 15,000 species of insects and other articulates, 5,000 species of shells with immense numbers of duplicates, 1,000 jars of mollusks in alcohol, 3,000 jars or "lots" of radiates, including several hundred corals, 8,000 species of plants, 15,000 specimens of fossils and 4,000 minerals. In archæology there were about 1,000 specimens, all American; and the ethnological collection embraced a very fine series of the clothing and implements of the Esquimaux of Anderson river, collected by Robert Kenicott and his arctic friends, and presented by the Smithsonian Institution. The academy desires to announce that, although now laid prostrate by the terrible disaster it has suffered, it will soon rise to refill its place among its sister institutions.

THE FOSSIL MAN OF MENTONE.—The recent discovery of a fossil man in one of the caves of Mentone, Italy, is producing considerable discussion in scientific circles. For the following details concerning it we are indebted to the Journal of Applied Chemistry. The skeleton is of large size and nearly complete. Some of the bones of the feet are wanting, and also the lower extremity of the left tibia. Owing to the fractured state of the skull, it was impossible to ascertain the exact dimensions. The remains of many species of animals were found near the skeleton; among them the tiger, cave-bear, dog, rhinoceros, horse, cow and deer. The reindeer has not been found in the caves of Mentone, and its remains appear to be wanting also in the other caverns of Italy. Among the principal objects found near the skeleton were two flint knives, and a bone pin worked from the radius of a stag. The interment of the man had taken place without any disturbance, on a soil formed of cinders, charcoal and calcined stones, and among the remains of the rhinoceros, tiger and cave-bear, which constituted the life of the period. It appears to be settled that man was cotemporaneous with animals which are now extinct, and have been so long extinct that no record or tradition of their existence has come down to us. This indicates a great antiquity for the human race.

THE EARTH A MAGNET.—The auditors of Prof. Tyndall will recollect the logical completeness and beauty of that one of his lectures in which he demonstrated the nature of the dark heat rays, by successively performing with them all the experiments of reflection, combustion, etc., which he had just exhibited with the full beam from the electric lamp. A similar argument, and one not less lucid and conclusive, is given on the subject of terrestrial magnetism, in the lecture by Prof. A. M. Mayer, of Hoboken, delivered at New Haven. This is a model scientific lecture, in which learning and rhetoric and brilliant experiment are focused upon the single thought which is made to glow from beginning to end as the center of attention. The lecturer temporarily magnetized a bar of soft iron by pointing it toward a pole of a large magnet; and repeating this experiment with the earth's magnetic pole as a magnetizer, obtained the same result. An iron bar, directed toward the pole of a magnet, or toward the pole of the earth, and struck in that position with a hammer, became, in either case, permanently magnetized. The action of a small magnetic disk on iron filings, placed around and above it, was shown to correspond with the action of the earth on the beams of the aurora. The action of the disk on a freely-suspended magnetic needle was demonstrated to obey the same laws as are indicated by the varying declination of the compass-needle, under terrestrial influence. A current of electricity was evolved from a magnet by cutting with a closed conductor across the lines of magnetic force; and the same result was obtained from the earth, the lecturer actually being able to telegraph in this way by terrestrial magneto-electricity, without a battery. By this series of close analogies, many of which have been precisely established by the ingenuity and original research of Prof. Mayer himself, he demonstrated his thesis—the Earth a Great Magnet.—Christian Union.

WRANGLERS never want words.

Religious Intelligence.

PRINCETON THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY graduated 42 students recently, who are said to be in ability and scholarship considerably above the average.

AT AN Episcopal Convention, May 15, at Boston, Rev. Dr. B. H. Paddock, of Brooklyn, New-York, was elected Bishop of the diocese of Massachusetts.

A MISSION of monks and nuns, who have in view the establishment of schools for boys and girls, and the propagation of their religion in Upper Egypt, have arrived at Khartoum.

THE Southern General Assembly of Presbyterians reported last year 11 synods, 912 ministers and licentiates, 1,545 churches, 91,208 communicants, and a total amount contributed for all purposes of $1,083,709.

IT IS SAID that important improvements are to be made in the buildings of the Auburn Theological Seminary, and it is to be made one of the most important Presbyterian theological seminaries in the country.

WOULD-BE Archbishop Mermillod, of Germany, has settled at Ferney, France, in the former home of a niece of Voltaire's. He is said to have written to the Pope: "Your holiness sent me to Calvin, Calvin sent me to Voltaire; I hope to inter them both."

IT IS reported that the students of the Methodist Episcopal Theological Seminary at Boston, Massachusetts, have requested that the funds for their support be considered as a loan, to be repaid by them at some future time. This spirit of independence is certainly to be commended, and is an augury of good.

THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.—The Evangelical Sontagsblatt, published in Stuttgart, Germany, expects the delegates to the Evangelical Alliance in New York to use their influence with that body, that the Methodists be compelled either to withdraw from Germany, or be expelled from the Alliance!

MORE THAN £9,000 have been subscribed for the establisment of the proposed mission to Japan by the United Presbyterian Church (Scotland.) As the dimensions of the mission must, of course, be determined by the amount of the subscriptions, this remarkable liberality at the outset gives promise of vigorous and successful operations in Japan by the United Presbyterians.

THE Missionary Herald (American) reports that Mr. Bingham, of Honolulu, Sandwich Islands, wrote on the tenth of April that his translation of the New Testament into the language of the Gilbert Islands and the printing of it would be completed on the day following, and that in the evening the Hawaiian Board would meet with him for a service of thanksgiving that he had been enabled to finish this work for Christ and Micronesia.

THE General Conference of the Church of the United Brethren met at Dayton, Ohio, May 15. The missionary work of the body was shown to be in a prosperous condition; the publication agency is making money; and the board of education reports that one-quarter of the $100,000 proposed by the last Conference to be raised for a biblical seminary has been secured. The seminary has been opened with two professors and one assistant, and a large number of students are in attendance.

THE Wesleyan educational system in Great Britain comprehends day as well as Sunday schools. At the annual May meeting there were reported to be 920 day schools, with 107,000 scholars—an increase of 174 schools and 38,000 scholars since 1870. The training school at Westminster has 233 students. There are 5,612 Sunday schools, with 107,727 teachers and 654,577 scholars. Of the Sunday school scholars, 117,637 are over fifteen years of age. The Wesleyans have determined to work the Sunday school system more energetically, and they will find great profit in doing so.

MR. MIALL'S motion for the disestablishment of the churches of England and Scotland was rather curtly debated—the mover and Mr. McLaren, of Edinburg, speaking in the affirmative, the premier and Mr. Vernon Harcourt in the negative—and was defeated by a vote of 61 to 356. This is a smaller vote than Mr. Miall secured last year; which is partly due to the uncertain condition of English politics and a determination on the part of the Liberals to avoid all unnecessary complications, and partly, perhaps, to the Ultramontane disturbances and the example of Prince Bismarck's vigorous policy in controlling them. There is a growing party in England, represented by the Pall Mall Gazette, which favors more stringent instead of more liberal measures in regulating religious affairs by the State.

THE fifty-seventh annual meeting of the American Bible Society was held in the city of New York, Thursday, May 8. The total receipts for the year, including the rent of the Bible House ($39,870.74,) were $669,607.06; general payments, $656,419.77; special and temporary investments, $62,622.55; balance in treasury, April 1, $18,789.30. Bible visitors, to the number of 16,564, have worked gratuitously during the year. Six new translations and revisions are in progress in the Arabo-Turkish, Armeno-Turkish, Hebrew-Spanish, Azerbijan-Turkish, Chinese (Mandarin and Colloquial) and Japanese. There have been 780,850 volumes manufactured at the Bible House, and 273,366 purchased abroad. In all 1,201,245 have been issued in 60 different languages and dialects. The circulation during the year was 426,700. The gratuitous expenditures for the year amount to $263,855.32.

REV. EDWARD EGGLESTON, D. D., in a protest to the New York Christian Advocate, respecting the allegation that he had "dropped the clerical prefix and suffix," says: "I have not used the clerical prefix or suffix on the title pages of any of the eight books, big and little, which I have written, esteeming it more modest in literature as in life to eschew class distinction, and leave it to others to give me titles if they choose. As to giving up the work and obligations of the Christian ministry, that I will never do. My ecclesiastical standing is exactly the same as your own, as the General Minutes will show. I am only out of the pastorate because ten years of suffering, toil, and three disastrous shipwrecks of health, proved that my constitution would not bear it; but I am still abundant in pulpit labors, the leading Methodist churches of New York and Brooklyn seeming quite ready and anxious to hear me preach the gospel, notwithstanding the cry of horror uttered over my theology."

THE receipts of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel for the past year were £113,124. This sum is the largest ever received by the society in a single year. The society supported during the year, wholly or in part, 418 ordained clergymen, of whom 35 were natives, 855 catechists, and about 300 students in various foreign colleges. Reference was made to the great progress of the society's missions in British America; emphasis was laid upon the need of help in the West Indies, in consequence of "the continuance of the process of disestablishment and disendowment." A church has been erected in Norfolk Island, and a missionary ship has been provided in memory of the late Bishop Patteson. The report stated that, in answer to the special prayers offered in behalf of missions on the day set apart in December last by the Church of England, funds had been provided for the opening of new missions in China and Japan, and two clergymen were about to proceed to each of these countries.

A MEMORIAL against Romish practices in the Church of England, signed by upward of 60,000 persons, has been presented to the archbishops of the church. The memorialists asked that the bishops of the church should exercise their authority for the entire suppression of ceremonies and practices adjudged to be illegal; to take care that no form of architectural arrangements and no ornaments be allowed that might facilitate the introduction of superstitious practices and erroneous doctrines which the church at the Reformation did disown and reject; to protect them and their families in the admission of candidates to holy orders, in the licensing of curates and the distribution of patronage, from the preaching which, when taken in its plain and obvious meaning, is subversive of those truths to which their Protestant Church, as keeper and witness of holy writ, had ever borne its faithful testimony. The archbishops undertook to draw up and circulate a reply, and further promised that everything in their power should be done to prevent infractions of the law.

ACCORDING to the Friend of India, the statistics of the Burmese Baptist Missionary Convention (American) show that there are 18,546 baptized Christians in 356 churches, with 82 ordained and 329 reordained preachers. There are 85 schools, with 4,874 pupils, including those in the theological seminary. The contributions of the Sgau Karens were unusually large. The numbers baptized during the year, exclusive of the Tonghoo churches, not connected with the convention, was 777. The convention adopted Dr. Mason's suggestion that efforts be made "to secure the manuscripts of missionaries of the Union who have labored or who may labor among tribes who are destitute of a printed literature, so far as they pertain to the languages of these tribes." They resolved also to memorialize government against the increase of the liquor, ganja and opium traffic in Burmah. Dr. Wade, who died last year, after nearly forty-nine years' service in Burmah and publishing many works in its vernaculars, left his little savings to print papers or books in Sgau Karen, or in that language and English combined.

FROM the annual report of the Wesleyan Missionary Society (English) it appears that the total income for the year was over $750,000, an increase of $40,000 over that of the previous year. During the past year 35 missionaries have been sent out to the West Indies, China, Africa, India and New Zealand, and nine missionaries have died. The mission now occupies 835 stations, with 6,654 chapels and preaching places, 1,130 missionaries, 4,779 paid catechists and teachers, 22,650 unpaid Sabbath school teachers, 109,807 church-members, 1,563 on trial for membership, 245,155 Sunday and day school scholars, and seven printing establishments. Of the missions in papal countries, that in Italy is of especial interest, where, besides two English ministers, they now have 17 native Italians engaged in preaching the gospel, in addition to catechists and others. At Rome there are already suitable buildings for preaching and educational purposes, at Naples the new chapel and schools are advancing toward completion, and at Padua their school is in efficient operation.

TEHERAN, the capital of Persia, has a population which is estimated by foreign residents to be not less than 130,000; the Jews numbering about 2,000, the Armenians 1,000, and the Europeans not more than 100. As the capital of Persia, Teheran is in closer communication with other important centers of commerce than any other city of Persia. It also seems to mark the point of division between the two principal languages of Persia and of Central Asia—to the north the Turkish being prominent, to the south the Persian or Iranian. It has been deemed advisable by the American Presbyterian mission in Persia to occupy Teheran as a mission station; and Rev. J. Bassett, of that mission, writes from Teheran heartily advocating the movement. There is no station in Persia west of Teheran nearer than Tabreez, more than 400 miles distant; none to the eastward nearer than India; and Teheran is the only tenable ground for missionary labor designed to reach either Eastern Persia or the Tartars of Turkestan. For the evangelization of Central Asia the establishing of this station seems very important, since by its relations to some of the most inaccessible portions of the continent it affords the best facilities for reaching many remote and neglected regions.

Commencement.

The name as applied to the ending of school and college terms would seem to be a misnomer; and also as the occasion of graduating it might seem at first blush to be the reverse of what is true or appropriate. It is, however, suggestive when we reflect that the title was originally appropriated with special reference to the time when the degrees were conferred. Graduation is a beginning rather than an ending; the degrees received are the starting-point for something beyond. To finish school is to commence life, and to enter upon a new path of progress and responsibility. It is also but the beginning in learning. The very name of the occasion, derived from the usage of the old English universities, when masters of arts and doctors received their degrees, is at once a warning and a charge. It is as much as to say to those who are rewarded by diplomas, and have been honored by degrees, that they are not learned, and that they have only entered the field of knowledge. The real achievements are before them, the genuine attainments are yet far in advance. The years of study and instruction have been strictly preparatory. Like the athletes who spent so much time and pains in getting ready for wrestlings and racings, the student has, during his college life, been in training for the work of life.

There is danger that our young people, flushed with the honors and successes of their school history, will go forth with a very high opinion of themselves, and with the foolish egotism and vanity which a little knowledge sometimes inspires. Let them remember that they commence with their classic honors, and that the harness is just put on, while the battle is yet to be fought and the victory to be gained. They have done well if they have learned how to study, and if they have invigorated their minds, and developed the power of patient investigation and careful thought. As the life is more than meat and the body more than raiment, so is the intellect and its thorough culture more than the literary dress which it puts on. In all the true elements of education and in all of its ultimate purposes and ends the close of school life is the beginning. Many who are now bidding farewell to our halls of learning will study no more. They may have got through the curriculum creditably, and taken their degrees, but their text-books will be forsaken henceforth, and all systematic study will be abandoned. The mental discipline which has been begun will now cease, and the vantage ground on which years of training has placed them will be surrendered to idleness, or to negligence and mental dissipation. They will not commence, but they will conclude. What has been most philosophically styled "the commencement" will prove to them a final dismissal from the pursuit of knowledge and the nurture of intellectual power. All the golden fruits of their college course may not be lost, but much will be thrown away, and, instead of a full harvest, an untimely blight will mark the result. They have been trained for the race, which they now refuse to run; they have with much ado and with flourish of trumpets entered the arena, only to decline the contest and to forfeit the proffered prize. As in religion, so in intellectual pursuits, the bane of all true merit, the death of all real progress, lies in this complacent deception that we have already reached the goal. In both respects would we commend the noble words of Paul to our youthful friends: "Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect." And again: "Brethren, I count not myself to have apprehended; but this one thing I do: forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

We cannot think of the hundreds of young men and young women who are leaving school at this season without feeling a profound interest in their welfare. This tide of young life flowing in upon society will soon be lost and swallowed up in the great ocean of human affairs and pursuits. The commonplaces, the drudgery, the struggles and the trials of the world will rapidly succeed the routine of study and recitations. In another sense than the merely intellectual is the end a commencement. The beginning of self-making, the dawn of responsibility and maintenance it is to the most. How will these new relations and circumstances be met, and how will the tyro adjust himself to the situation? Here is the beginning of work indeed, and the beginning of study. The degrees to be won can be obtained only by the highest qualities of soul, and by the grandest attributes of character. He who can humble himself is in the path to exaltation, and the victory is sure, in some sort, to the industrious and patient toiler. The spring blossoms are wonderfully numerous compared with the fruit which blushes in the summer sun. Nature is prolific in the seeds and germs, and she can afford to waste the most of her buds and flowers, and still the boughs in autumn are weighed down with an ample store. Not so with human life and accountability. The individual soul cannot afford to be lost, and society cannot spare one bud or blossom of capacity and intelligence.

The question of importance with our young graduates is not that they shall be heard from by the great world, and that their names shall be placed with the notable and famous men and women of the age, but it is rather that they shall live to purpose, and contribute in any measure to the mental light and the moral beauty of society. Shall it be a commencement of real, hearty, honest living, an upward flight of all the powers and gifts of God, and an improvement of the education attained? Or shall it be a downward plunge into the vortex of selfish pleasure, and the abyss of dissipation? Shall it be the commencement of a noble and useful life—a life braced by purpose and animated by faith, a life "like the shining light, shining more and more to the perfect day?" Or shall it be a history of mental stagnation and spiritual darkness—a mere existence so inane and fruitless as to be beyond the reach of apology or excuse? An auspicious commencement, then, to all—to the beautiful and radiant who go out thrice adorned, because invested with the charms of young womanhood and the accomplishments of intellect and the graces of religion; to the young men who by hard study and high moral aspirations are prepared to grapple with the times in which they live, and to improve the talent which God has committed to their trust.

Honor and fame from no condition rise;
Act well your part; there all the honor lies.

The Rage for Killing.

The frightful prevalence of murder throughout the country is calculated to arrest the attention of the thoughtful. During the last few weeks the newspapers have teemed with accounts of murders, many of which have been of the most appalling character. The Walworth parricide is perhaps not worse than many other instances of killing; but the position of the family and attendant circumstances gave to the event an unusually startling and terrible aspect. For a week past we have been impressed with the frequency of the crime, committed with horribly aggravating circumstances, as recounted in the daily papers—women poisoning whole families of kindred, men slaughtering wives and children, young men taking the lives of young women who have declined their addresses, children killing parents, parents killing their children. Besides these forms of shedding blood are the homicides which result from rencontres, duels, and collisions which arise from quarrels and conflicts where the parties have been suddenly betrayed into violence. It would seem that at this time a rage for killing prevails, and is especially rampant in the Northern States, as witness the murder of the Gordon family in Maine, the Walworth tragedy in New York, and the recent confessions of Mrs. York in Kansas, who poisoned husband, children, son-in-law, and finally died from a potion, taken through mistake, which she had prepared for her son.

These are only samples that occur to us of crimes which are taking place with alarming frequency. They do not belong to the lawless violence of frontier life, and to communities where the institutions of education and religion have not been established, but they occur in what is called good society, in old and established communities, and in the midst of a Christian civilization. Human life was never so cheap, even in pagan times and countries, and the character of the murders, in some instances, is such as was unknown among the enlightened heathen of ancient times. The old Greeks are said to have had no law to punish parricide, because the crime to them was not conceivable. Does this thirst for blood grow out of anything peculiar to American civilization, and the tendencies of our society? Is there a cause in our psychology, the mental development and morbid thought which result from the high-pressure life of the day? It looks like a species of insanity, at times, which might result possibly from undue cerebral development, or from the enormous drain of nervous force which the stimulated and excited conditions of business and pleasure demand. Mixed up with the matter these mental and physical perversions may be, but the moral and religious influences are the points which chiefly invite investigation.

We can well believe that the materialistic forms of unbelief which largely leaven society, and the liberal Christianity so much in vogue, may be more to blame than anything else. A religion that does not place the law of God and the penalty of its violation prominently before the people cannot restrain vice. A religion that does not demand and secure the conversion of the soul and a sanctified heart cannot overcome the malevolence, selfishness and sensuality of men. We verily believe that this one-sided religion, which is so much preached in the North, is one cause of the terrible tendency to bloodshed which the country now deplores. There is an atheistic element, but more than this is the defective doctrine and preaching of Universalism, and the fatherhood of God so presented and distorted as to banish all thought of divine justice and future retribution. This diluted Christianity, so far from deterring and restraining, acts rather as an encouragement to vice. Criminal law and its enforcement are to be considered in connection with the present state of society. But these are affected by the moral and religious convictions of the people.—Where the Ten Commandments are measurably set aside, and God's law against murder is regarded as obsolete, it will be more and more difficult to convict and punish offenders.

It is marvelous how crime prevails among the young. A ten-year-old boy kills his fellow; a youth of nineteen shoots his father dead; mere children are old in their knowledge and practice of lewdness, gambling and debauchery, and murder follows. Early religious training is the preventive, and the remedy must be sought in the spread of religious truth. But there must be sound doctrine, and not those perversions which promise impunity or ultimate release from the consequences of evil-doing. God the law-giver, as well as God the Savior, must be proclaimed, and the declaration must be emphasized that "it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God." In this prevalence of bloodshed most horrible and most unnatural, and in the manifest diabolism which characterizes much of it, are largely the fruits of false religious teachings. This, at least, is one impressive lesson which the present rage for killing suggests.

The Mission to Mexico.

When Bishop Keener started, last winter, to the new missionary field in Mexico he had a few pledges of money from some members of the Louisiana Conference, and the loan of a few hundred dollars from a Methodist merchant in New Orleans, and his own trust in God, upon which to lean. The church generally did not take a very absorbing interest in the enterprise, and looked with considerable doubt upon the success of the Bishop's "first missionary journey." Doubtless the Bishop was acquainted with this state of feeling and thought. But, like one of old, "against hope he believed in hope," and to Mexico he went. Having some little knowledge of him, we say: "That was just like him." "He is just that sort of a man. When he determines upon a line of action he persistently pursues it, through all its windings, to the end. And so in a short time he sends back his first letter from the ancient city of Vera Cruz. To a man of his mental aptitudes and moral intuitions the very name of this old city must have sounded in his ears like a prophecy of success in Mexico. The first time he set foot on Mexican soil, no doubt, he felt that it was his empire! So he began to survey his new possessions, and to send back to the church at home charming descriptions of beautiful scenes and grand sights. These descriptions, sketched by the Bishop's inimitable pencil, awakened the interest and drew the attention of the church in that direction. And as he went on, surveying and sketching and sending home his pictures, the whole church was aroused. It just seemed as if a new world had been laid down at our doors. Nobody ever dreamed of such things in Mexico as the Bishop saw and described. By the time his third letter reached us everybody was talking about "Bishop Keener and the Mexican mission." And when the telegraph flashed the intelligence through the land that he had actually bought a church-house and lot in the City of Mexico, everybody was delightfully astounded. It was what very few expected him to do. The majority simply supposed that he had gone over to "spy out the land," and would return and report what sort of a land it was. The report he sent back so far exceeded the most sanguine expectations that we came near having a crisis on the Mexican question.

No wonder the church was awakened and interested. Here she was made conscious of the possession of a grand fact, which consciousness ought to cause her "to stir up the gift of God that is in her." That fact is this: "What a grand man we have in this new Bishop?" She saw that there was one man who had faith in the church. While the discontents at home were popping their squibs and lampooning the church for her covetousness, here was a man giving the world a practical demonstration of his faith in the church's liberality. While the croakers were trying to dampen missionary zeal and destroy missionary effort, here was a man exhibiting a missionary zeal and showing forth a missionary faith not unworthy of Paul himself. While the timid ones were speculating as to the probabilities of missionary success generally, and prophesying of the failure of this enterprise in particular, here was a man boldly contradicting these speculations by showing that he had passed all the probabilities of the case, and utterly overthrowing their prophecies of failure by telegraphing to the world: "I have bought a church in the City of Mexico." No wonder that telegram should send a thrill of pleasurable emotion through the souls of the people of God. Here was a Bishop whose faith in the church was simply immense!

Now the exhibition of this faith has already resulted in very large benefits to the church. It has reacted, so as to develop in the church a deeper, broader faith in herself. It seems strange that a man should have to go to Mexico in order to awaken in the church at home a larger faith in her own power; yet this is not the least benefit which this missionary journey of Bishop Keener has conferred upon the church. "Like produces like." The Bishop has sown faith that works; the church will produce a grand harvest of faith that works. Some one has said that "a man's self-trust is enormously increased the moment he finds that others believe in him." The church knows now that at least one man believes in her liberality, and she will honor that faith by a heavy reproduction. She will not, she cannot refuse her hearty co-operation to the man who puts such a hearty faith in her. We are confident that the missionary collections of this year will largely exceed those of any former year. The Missionary Board have expressed this same confidence by making larger appropriations for this year. Here, then, is another exhibition of a growing faith in the willingness of the church to "come up to the help of the Lord." The missionary secretary has sent out his first appeal, and the key-note is: "Brethren, double your collections this year."

The sum of $21,000 has been appropriated to the Mexican mission. Now as this new Bishop is very closely connected with us Louisianians, so this mission, which he has set on foot, feels like our mission. What say you, my brethren, to "down-trodden Louisiana" raising one-half of this amount? Last year, without any such incentive to spring us, we raised $4,000. Last year there were twenty circuits, containing two thousand eight hundred and thirty-five members of the church, that did not contribute one cent. Now, this year, let those who worked last year double their energies and harden their faces to bring up $8,000. Let those delinquent circuits open their eyes to the immense losses which their spirituality and temporality have sustained by neglect of duty, and go to work with all the power of a new-awakened zeal to bring up the balance. We Louisianians now have an opportunity thrust upon us which does not come upon a people more than once in a century. We now have the opportunity to show the world that there are still people in the church of God "whose deep poverty abounds unto the riches of their liberality." My brethren, let no man in the church escape without showing him this grand opening and urging him to enter it. Give the rich the chance to double their heavenly treasures. Give the poorest in the church the chance to plant a fragrant flower in the "fair fields of Eden." The missionary secretary says: "Small contributions are as thankfully received as large ones, when the giver is not able to cast into the treasury costly gifts." Pass nobody by unsolicited. Don't depend on public collections exclusively. You may gather much in your pastoral visitations. Bishop Keener has shown his faith in us; let us bring up to the next Conference a contribution for this mission which will show him that his faith was not misplaced. Let us work earnestly and faithfully to bring up a contribution that will gladden his heart, and send him forth on his "second missionary journey" rejoicing in the goodness of the Lord, manifested through the liberality of the Louisiana Methodists. OUTIS.

My Servant.

Our blessed Redeemer, the Father's elder son, comes to us in the form and character of a servant. "Behold my servant, whom I uphold; mine elect, in whom my soul delighteth." Again: "By his knowledge shall my righteous servant justify many."

From a human standpoint this is indeed a strange thought of one who is the equal of the Highest, aye, who is the Highest himself. A strange thought of one who is not only the equal of the Master, but who is most emphatically the Master himself—the Son, yet one with the Father; the Son, yet the Father. "Unto us a child is born; unto us a son is given, and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counselor, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace." And then, as if to reach the very incarnation of paradox—to bring the heart and brain of struggling humanity up on a higher plane—right in the face of the prophet's declaration we hear this Servant, this Master, this Son, this Father, crying out to his almost bewildered disciples: "My Father is greater than I." Humanity stands astonished in the presence of a mystery so profound. Human intellect is thrown back upon itself, and faith comes to the rescue. It finds a refuge in a realization of the fact, without reference as to the how, the mode of the divine existence. It is impossible for the finite to comprehend the infinite—for the smaller to contain the larger. Thank God, man is not called on to attempt an unreasonable, an impossible thing. These are the things "angels desire to look into." "Secret things belong unto God; revealed things unto us and our children." Nevertheless, to him that feareth the Lord will God reveal his secret. This mystery, this incomprehensibility of the divine habitudes, and his manifestation in the flesh, is the only basis, the only outlook for the faith, by which we are saved.

Now as a servant, in the form and character of a servant, Jesus was manifest. For a purpose did he thus come. To this end his service possessed strong, clearly-defined characteristics. As a servant his life was fully, most emphatically outlined. There were no blurs, erasures or interlineations. His term of service, his earthly, fleshly existence, formed a finished picture. The colors are unfading. Time can make no impression upon it, except, perhaps, if possible, to more fully develop the fineness and finish of the work. It is as fresh and even more inviting today that it was eighteen hundred years ago.

The special object of this paper, however, is to refer more particularly to the characteristics of this servant's work, reserving, it may be, for a subsequent mention, the specific end and blessed fruits thereof. In the first place, it may be remarked that it was a voluntary service—a contribution laid upon his own resources, at his own option. It is a type, the highest type, of service, capable of being conceived only by the divine mind. He saw from the beginning the work and sacrifice necessary, and of his own choice—deliberate, untrammeled, free choice—he entered into the bondage, submitting his will, time, strength, resources to the will of another—became a servant in the fullness of its significance.

His service was therefore characterized by completeness, by perfectness. Toward his Master he was a servant, full of candor and honesty. He obeyed God in all things, and that, too, to the extreme of death. "And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross." Such fullness of completeness, such wholeness of perfection, is found nowhere else, in no other character.

In addition, his was not the service of slavish fear. It was no irksome task, for it was pre-eminently the service of cheerfulness. Though a servant, his heart was full of smiles and sunshine and love toward his Master. It was a gladly willing service. It was not given with a spirit of grudging. It was the rule, the law, the habit of his being. It was the delight of his life. "Then said I, Lo! I come; in the volume of the book it is written of me, I delight to do thy will, O my God; yea, thy law is within my heart."

And it may be added that while his was a voluntary service, and complete in the sense of doing all that was commanded, and rendering that obedience with a glad and cheerful heart, that it was likewise characterized by constancy and faithfulness. He continued to do that all. He was "faithful unto" the end. His was not an eye-service. There was no intermission, no laying aside of the armor to-day and gathering it to-morrow, no recess-hours. Recreation was found in work. There were no moments of hesitation, there were no periods of compromise. The line of duty was not more fully and clearly defined than it was fully and closely followed. "And he that sent me is with me; the Father hath not left me alone, for I do always those things that please him."

And, in addition still, it may be added that it was a service unattended by the almost certain fruit of sustained service—that is, of weariedness. Service may be voluntary, cheerful, constant, faithful, and yet performed with weariedness—the servant grow tired and weary of the burden. Not so with God's servant. He worked on, wrought on, until the task was accomplished—worked on until he could say: "I have finished the work thou gavest me to do: I have glorified thee on the earth." Amid all possible discouragements, pressed around, above, beneath with opposing influences and panoplied difficulties, wrought on, undismayed, uncomplaining, unwearyingly, constant, faithful, cheerful, meek and submissive, until the Master came and relieved him of duty.

What a grand life is here opened up to the world! How perfect the impersonation of redeemed and saved and glorified humanity! How the burdens of life are lightened! How the shadows are silver-lined! How sweet and strong and binding to the renewed heart become the obligations and directions of duty!

WE ARE INDEBTED to Miss Sallie E. Johnson and Miss Katie Tyler for a copy of the programme of the anniversary celebration of the Calliopean Literary Society, Whitworth Female College. The exercises take place on Monday, June 30, and promise to be of an exceedingly interesting character. Among other things there is to be a debate by the young ladies on the subject: "Should Woman be Allowed the Elective Franchise?" We hope both sides will get the best of it. Rev. W. E. M. Linfield delivers the address.

The Frozen Ship.

In the year 1775 the captain of a Greenland whaling-vessel found himself at night surrounded by icebergs, and "lay to" until morning, expecting every moment to be ground to pieces. In the morning he looked about and saw a ship near by. He hailed it, but received no answer. Getting into a boat with some of his crew, he pushed out for the mysterious craft. Coming alongside the vessel he saw through the port-holes a man at a table, as though keeping a log-book. He hailed him, but got no answer. He went on board the vessel, and found the man sitting at the log-book frozen to death. The last date in the log-book was 1762, showing that the vessel had been drifting for thirteen years among the ice. The sailors were found, some frozen among the hammocks, and others in the cabin. For thirteen years this ship had been carrying its burden of corpses—a drifting sepulcher, manned by a frozen crew. There had been life in that ship once, and courage and activity and zeal and promptness and ready obedience to the word of command; but all this was past. The arctic chill had come upon them, the stupor of death had touched them one by one, until the last solitary watcher yielded to his fate and all were dead.

Are there not churches that are in a somewhat similar plight? They have sailed away from the open sea of blessing and prosperity, and the sunny latitudes of faith and humility; they have drifted into the frozen regions of pride and worldliness and sin, impelled by love of gain, or by a vain curiosity to explore the secrets of divine wisdom; they have passed the realms of warmth and life, and floated into the icy wastes of death and desolation.

Christian voyager, beware of the arctic regions of pride and worldliness and dead formality—beware of the deadly slumbers of the frigid zone. Speed away to summer climes; live near the Lord, who is the sun and a shield, and whose favor is life, and whose loving kindness is better than life.—The Christian.

IT IS SAFER to be humble with one talent than proud with ten; yea, better to be a humble worm than a proud angel.

The Neglect of Biblical Study.

The Jewish Messenger complains of the neglect of the Bible by the Jews. The reference is, of course, to the Old Testament. We quote as follows:

In our age eduention is so popular, science so dazzling, and learning so attractive that the cultivation of these subjects has become, as it were, a vital necessity for the young in Israel, and parents have zealously labored to perfect their children in these branches of knowledge. While this is being accomplished, regardless of expense, it must not be withheld that, in spiritual matters, we make but little progress; we show something, it is true, of our religion in the Jewish press and pulpit, yet our population are not thoroughly pervaded by true religious zeal. The rich and the poor have no substantial spiritual comfort; even the hearts of those who are punctual and regular attendants upon public worship are not fully impressed with the spirit of their faith. Even the female part of our community do not generally cherish piety in their domestic sphere, or feel the glow arising from true religion. This unsatisfactory state may in part be owing to the neglect of studying the holy word.

The psalmist, in the very commencement of that volume which has given comfort to the world, defines happiness to be the portion of those who study God's holy word, assuring them of prosperity in all their doings. If such be the beneficial result of studying the Bible, we ask, Where is our banner, the very charter of our faith, the holy Scriptures of which our people have been the depositaries, and for maintaining the truth of which they suffered the most dreadful persecutions? We regret to say that the Bible is little read by us, its history of our nation is little known to us, its consolatory predictions are little cared for; yet by its perusal we might be inspired with zeal for our national glory, and feel full of enthusiasm to carry out the grand purposes for which we were designed.

Let it not be urged, in extenuation of our neglect, that portions of the Bible, and extracts from the prophets, are read at stated periods in our various shrines, so that all who wish may receive proper instruction. Need we answer that such reading confers but a partial benefit. Numbers are absent from worship; and if even all were present it would not accomplish the object we desire to foster—Biblical knowledge. We are aware that in nearly every Jewish family a Bible may be seen in the library, a very handsome volume kept in most beautiful order, but, alas! it is hermetically sealed. While this is the condition of the sacred word of God in the dwellings of the rich, there are hundreds in Israel who are content with having a prayer-book; a Bible they do not covet, and, if they do, they have not the means to obtain it. Is it not, then, of the utmost importance that we should give a better tone to our feelings, that the wealthy who have the Bible should not be satisfied to see it moldering on the shelves of oblivion, but should open its pages at stated periods, for the moral instruction of the young, the consolation of the afflicted, or the comfort of the aged? Ought not the poor Israelite, who requires God's word to afford him comfort on his wayworn pilgrimage, but who has not the means to purchase a Bible, be supplied with it on this condition only, that he might profit by its perusal?

The English version should be in the hands of every Israelite, that it may be read with advantage, and that all may obtain a proper knowledge of its contents, ponder on them continually, and make them the guide of their lives. True it is that we would prefer for the Israelite to understand enough of Hebrew to read the Bible in the holy tongue, but as this blessing—the raising of Hebrew scholars—appears to be very slow work, we need not retard the study of the Scriptures until the holy language be generally understood.

Proof of the Existence of God.

When we examine a watch, or any other piece of machinery, we instantly perceive marks of design. The arrangement of its several parts, and the adaptation of its movement to one result, show it to be a contrivance; nor do we ever imagine the faculty of contriving to be in the watch itself, but in a separate agent. If we turn from art to nature, we behold a vast magazine of contrivances; we see innumerable objects replete with the most exquisite design. The human eye, for example, is formed with admirable skill for the purpose of sight, the ear for the function of hearing. As in the productions of art we never think of ascribing the power of contrivance to the machine itself, so we are certain the skill displayed in the human structure is not a property of man, since he is very imperfectly acquainted with his own formation. If there be an inseparable relation between the ideas of a contrivance and a contriver, and it be evident in regard to the human structure that the designing agent is not a man himself, there must undeniably be some separate, invisible being who is his former. This great Being we mean to indicate by the appellation of Deity.

This reasoning admits of but one reply. Why, it will be said, may we not suppose the world has always continued as it is—that is, that there has been a constant succession of finite beings appearing on the earth from all eternity? I answer, whatever is supposed to have occasioned this constant succession, exclusive of an intelligent cause, will never account for the undeniable marks of design visible in all finite beings. Nor is the absurdity of supposing a contrivance without a contriver diminished by this imaginary succession, but rather increased by being repeated at every step of the series.

Besides, an eternal succession of finite beings involves in it a contradiction, and is therefore plainly impossible. As the supposition is made to get quit of the idea of any one having existed from eternity, each of the beings in the succession must have begun in time; but the succession itself is eternal. We have then a succession of beings infinitely earlier than any being in the succession; or, in other words, a series of beings running on ad infinitum before it reached any particular being, which is absurd.

From these considerations it is manifest there must be some eternal being, or nothing could ever have existed; and since the beings which we behold bear in their whole structure evident marks of wisdom and design, it is equally certain that he who formed them is a wise and intelligent agent.

To prove the unity of this great Being, in opposition to a plurality of gods, it is not necessary to have recourse to metaphysical abstractions. It is sufficient to observe that the notion of more than one author of nature is inconsistent with that harmony of design which pervades her works; that it explains no appearances, is supported by no evidence, and serves no purpose but to embarrass and perplex our conceptions.

Such are the proofs of the existence of that great and glorious being whom we denominate God; and, it is not presumption to say, it is impossible to find another truth in the whole compass of morals which, according to the justest laws of reasoning, admits of such strict and rigorous demonstration.—Robert Hall.

Why She Refused.

You say you went to the party last night and you saw Mrs. Smith, an old friend, whom you had not seen since she and your sister were at school together. You had a very pleasant talk until supper, when you gave her your arm and took her to supper. When some one came along with a few glasses of wine on a waiter and offered her a glass, you saw her shudder as she said "No!" and you wondered why Mrs. Smith, who didn't used to be so particular about such things, not only refused, but shuddered when she said No! You cannot tell why! I can tell why. You went on with your talk, and a little flirtation, did you? I won't say you didn't. She was very gay, and seemed very glad to forget herself, did she? Very well, I am very glad you gave her that hour of the evening. I can tell you where she went after the party was over. She went home—the latest person from the party. She was glad it was late, for her husband had not come home. She sat and read for an hour and her husband did not come. She wrote for an hour and her husband did not come. She sat at the piano for an hour, but he did not come. At length, between three and four o'clock, there was a noise at the door, and two policemen held him in their arms. She knows them both well by this time. It happens so often that she knows every policeman on the beat. They bade her good-night. She had locked her child's room, that he might not abuse him. She took the abuse as he flung himself on the bed. She dragged off his neck-cloth and coat, and sat there until he should fall into a stupid sleep. She is the woman who refused the glass of wine with a shudder. You thought she was gay and bright. I know her story, because I am her minister. They have a sort of skeleton in the closet, which we are permitted to see and you are not. And when we see that skeleton, do you wonder that we sometimes say pretty sharp things about moderate drinking, and the temptations offered at parties?—Rev. E. E. Hale.

TALKING ABOUT ONE'S HEALTH. If there is anything in the world to destroy one's health it is the perpetual consideration of it. In much that relates to body, mind, heart and soul we must let things take their own way. The stomach resents being talked about, we find, and refuses to digest for a man who continually gossips about it. It was put into the darkness so that we might not see it. If it had only been made as transparent as glass, and we could have seen the special effect of every article put into it, we should have become so "nervous" about its operations that shortly the whole human race would have died off. Doubtless the physiologist and the student of dietetics will give us some knowledge and wisdom; but they will sacrifice many victims by their minute inquiries and cautions. One of the best of them all that we ever knew had one fundamental principle to impress upon his disciples—"eat your victuals and go about your business." A valetudinarian, long suffering, refusing this and that, and cutting down year by year the list of wholesome articles for his food, at last bethought himself it were as well to die of fullness as starvation; and went to his accustomed restaurant at dinner-time, and ordered a full meal like any other man, to the amazement and incredulity of the attendant that always waited on him; and on inquiry of the results of his boldness he replied he was as well after a full and various meal as after all the littleness he had been accustomed to practice.—Christian Register.

UNPURCHASABLE COMFORTS.—The evening is a profitable season of mental culture, social happiness and rest. Books, conversation, music—these fit well the evening. Happy now are they who have homes. A bed to sleep in and a table to eat from do not constitute a home. Any old bachelor, with a salary, can purchase so much of the world's comforts. But the magnetic fireside circle, the smiles of mother or wife, the talk of the sensible old folks, the songs of the sweet-voiced sisters, the affectionate good-night of children, the wholesome occupation of heart and mind in social and intellectual enjoyment—these are the unpurchasable comforts of home.

WHEN our souls are moved with the "groanings which cannot be uttered" for the salvation of men, we may hope to gather some golden sheaves.

Camp Meeting.

The camp meeting on Seashore camp ground will commence on Friday, the first day of August next.

The camp ground is beautifully situated upon the coast, two miles west of Biloxi, Mississippi, and lies open to and fronts directly upon the gulf, enjoying the delightful sea-breeze. Persons visiting the camp ground will leave the New Orleans and Mobile railroad at Seashore station, whence a walk of a few hundred feet brings them to the encampment.

The trustees have laid the grounds off in avenues and lots suitable for the erection of permanent tents. Several parties erected their own permanent tents last year, and the trustees are pleased to learn that a greater number intend doing the same this year—some as family tents, others by church association. Both these are desirable.

The trustees have set apart Thursday, the third day of July next, for the selection of lots and positions for the location of tents; and all persons desiring to build a tent, or even to hire, are requested to be present on that day to select their lot and position upon the ground.

The trustees have made provision for good boarding, and lodging accommodations to a limited extent, at reasonable prices.

Several small, plain tents will be erected, to rent to persons or families desiring to hire, either furnished plainly or entirely unfurnished.

They recommend to all who desire to attend the meeting to address either of the undersigned and make arrangements for their comfort before the date of the camp meeting.

Brethren of the Methodist Church and of other churches, and the communities of the adjacent cities and country, are invited to attend the camp meeting.

Ministers of talent and distinction, from far and near, are expected to be present and assist in conducting the exercises.

W. H. FOSTER, President.
PHILIP HALLARAN, Sec.

THE late John Stuart Mill was, as everybody knows, the son of James Mill, the philosopher. It is not so generally known that the father of James Mill was a Scottish peasant—one of that class from whom so many of the later leaders have come to English thought and action, and in whom are found a self-dependent and aspiring spirit greatly fostered by the fact of their community of blood with their lairds, the custom of long leases and education. The father of James Mill was a cotter near the North Water bridge, in the parish of Logie, in Forfarshire. Dr. Peters, the minister of the parish, observed the genius of the cotter's son, assisted him in his education, and gave him an introduction to his relative, Mr. Stuart, of Inchbreck, then professor of Greek in the University of Aberdeen. By Mr. Stuart James Mill was introduced as a tutor to Mr. Stuart's relative, Mr. Burnett, of Elrick, and afterward in the same capacity to Sir John Stuart Forbes. Sir John was a helpful and constant friend, and after him James named his son John Stuart Mill.

PURELY VEGETABLE,

containing those Southern Roots and Herbs which an all-wise Providence has placed in countries where Liver Diseases most prevail. It will cure all diseases caused by Derangement of the Liver.

THE SYMPTOMS of Liver Complaint are a bitter or bad taste in the mouth; pain in the back, sides or joints, often mistaken for Rheumatism; sour stomach; loss of appetite; bowels alternately costive and lax; headache; loss of memory, with a painful sensation of having failed to do something which ought to have been done; debility; low spirits; a thick, yellow appearance of the skin and eyes; a dry cough, often mistaken for Consumption. Sometimes many of these symptoms attend the disease, at others very few; but the Liver, the largest organ in the body, is generally the seat of the disease, and, if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and death will ensue. ## The Child'z Corner.

A MOTHER'S MORNING PRAYER.

Up to me sweet childhood looketh.
Heart and mind and soul awake;
Teach me of thy ways, O Father!
For sweet childhood's sake.

In their young hearts, soft and tender,
Guide my hand good seed to sow,
That its blossoming may praise thee
Wheresoe'er they go.

Give to me a cheerful spirit,
That my little flock may see
It is good and pleasant service
To be taught of thee.

Father, order all my footsteps;
So direct my daily way
That, in following me, the children
May not go astray.

Let thy holy counsel lead me—
Let thy light before me shine,
That they may not stumble over
Word or deed of mine.

The Deaf Mute's Question.

BY MARY P. HALE.

"Are you acquainted with Jesus?" The large blue eyes looked up to me with an earnest, longing look, while around the mute lips there seemed a beseeching expression, as much as to say: "If not, I would make you so if I could."

It was the dumb boy's own question, after a pleasant interview and conversation, by finger language. And when I gave the answer, such a radiance of joy overspread his whole countenance as is impossible to describe—the joyous smile, the beaming eyes, the clasping of the hands for a few moments, then grasping of my own, I shall not soon forget.

And while he joyed I mused in wonder at the power which had taught the soul that dwelt in utter silence, and had revealed to him a love and reverence for the name which his mortal ears had never heard. And I marveled, too, at the power of that name and the knowledge of that divine Being, as a mutual friend to unite so strongly two hearts hitherto strangers, or nearly so, to each other.

He has passed from earth, but his words remain. That question has in it an inexhaustible power. "Are you a Christian?" or "Have you been regenerated?" would not have moved me so. How beautiful the idea, "acqualuted with Jesus!" Unlike some other questions of a kindred class, it directs the soul not to itself, but Christ; not to its own eternal safety, but to "the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus our Lord." Never till then did I so intensely feel the impressiveness of these words of the apostle—an excellency of knowledge beyond all comparison; a boundless source of glory and beauty and soul-satisfying delight.

Often, on my way to Sabbath school, have I asked myself: "Am I acqualnted with Jesus?" If so, I have a knowledge which will never fail to interest if imparted with the divine Spirit's aid, and from which I may draw endless themes for instruction; for the source is so illimitable that there will ever be something new to say about it.

"Acqualnted!" Look at the significance of the term, for it is scriptural. We are told to "grow in the knowledge of Christ;" and do you not often realize what pertinency there is in this Bible phrase? Have you not sometimes felt, when about to leave your little sanctuary to commence the duties of the day, as if you could turn and say, as to a real presence: "O my Savior, I never saw thee in such beauty, or such glory, or such attractiveness before?" And when you go from such communings to your class, have you not evidence of his presence and his power in the hearts of those before you?"

"Acqualnted!" Who does not love to listen to one who had been a familiar friend of some well-known and beloved individual as he portrays his excellences of character or narrates incidents of his goodness or benevolence? You seem to see that person before you, and to enter into the delight and admiration of the one who so vividly portrays it all to you. Seek, then, such intimate acquaintance with the best of friends that you cannot help speaking of his graces, and that others cannot help being moved by the relation.

Of a human friend have you not sometimes said: "I never knew her till I saw her on such an occasion, or beheld her conduct under such an emergency?" Or of another: "I have known her several years, in the common acceptation of the word, but never felt acquainted till I passed those few days with her at her own home, and observed those nameless thoughtful acts and delicate kindnesses which showed such a constant regard for others." Character, in its minute detail of goodness, is more attractive than a more general view of greater excellencies, so called. So with Christ—If you have him in the house not as a guest, but as a family friend, to whom you speak of all your cares and trials, or plans and endeavors, you will grow in the knowledge of his character, and will have precious evidences that he thinks of you. How many delicate kindnesses will you receive from him! "How was I helped in that extremity!" will often be your thankful utterance. Or, "In that time of perplexity, when I sent up a hurried petition, how beautifully was it answered!" Thus will you be continually receiving messages from him and tokens of love; yea, presents, so to speak, from his own hand. For there is such a thing as taking all our blessings in this way; particularly the special ones, which seem more impressive though not more truly blessings than the most common ones.

Said a venerable Christian: "I have never read the New Testament with so much zest till in these later years of comparative quiet. Jesus seems to go with me through all these scenes, and sometimes I almost forget that he is not personally present."

Blessed knowledge! And if we will but seek seasons of "quiet" we need not wait till life's decline before we realize this blissful companionship and fellowship with the Father and his beloved Son.—Christian at Work.

The Old Fisherman's Story.

A little bright-faced boy had just put a match to the kindling wood of the grate, and was watching the flame as it forced its way among the crackling coals, when, half in thought and half aloud, he said: "Who would think a little match would make so big a fire?"

"Ah, yes, my little man," said his father, "a little match, like other little things, may do great good or great harm. A good apostle once said: 'Behold, how great a matter a little fire kindleth!' And now, as our fire is burning, I will tell you a story about a little match, and the good that it did.

"Far away down on the shore of the Bristol channel stands a small fisherman's cabin. It is just far enough from the water to be out of the reach of the great waves that come rolling in from the Irish channel; and near it is a creek, or little river, in which the fisherman used to shelter his boat. At the time of my story the man happened to have left his little cabin and gone to Tenby. It was market day there, and, as the weather was rough and wintry, he had stayed away from home. It was desolate and dreary about that little house on the cold December day of which I am speaking. A dull, leaden sky; a cold, keen blast, sweeping up clouds of sand along the shore; the moaning of the sea-birds, and the regular beat of the waves upon the shore, formed the total of the sights and sounds on the coast that day.

"A strong wind had been blowing for three days, and all who thought of the sailor at sea prayed God to keep him from its dangers. A good brig had just made the entrance of the channel, and was beating up toward Bristol. She had a captain, mate and six sailors for her crew. Their voyage had been a pleasant one, and was now nearly over. They were thinking of their homes and friends when the fierce storm came on. The rigging was stiff with ice, and it was hard to handle the ropes or manage the ship. The men did their duty, as all true English sailors will do; but it was in vain. The wind and the waves and the bitter cold were too strong for them, brave as they were, and carried the poor brig steadily toward the shore. Soon they heard a sound terrible to seamen; it was the noise of the breakers. The captain called all hands about him, and raised his voice in prayer. He prayed for their safety, if God so willed it, that they might have strength to meet the fierce waves, and that, if they could not be saved from shipwreck, they might be safe in the mercy of God.

"The brig soon struck, and as she lay with her side to the shore the water for a little space was so calm that the small boat was safely launched, and every man seated in it. But, alas! before they could reach the shore a great wave struck the little boat, and the poor men were cast into the boiling sea. Four of them, with the captain, reached the land, and, though scarcely able to move, dragged themselves forward to find a shelter. They raised a shout when they came in sight of the little cabin; but, alas! there was the creek between it and them. 'We must go through or die,' said the captain; and after a great struggle, in their tired state, they reached the other side; but the brave captain could go no farther. 'Leave me, my men,' said he; 'get help for yourselves, and then come back if you can.' The men gained the house, but were horrified to find it empty. One man only took heart, as he looked at the fireplace and the wood near it. But, alas! there was neither flint nor steel to strike a light. A moment he stood in agony; but as he raised his head he saw upon the rude mantel a small box marked 'matches.' With trembling haste he seized it, and found one single little match. Oh, how much depended on that little match! Here were four sailors; a little way off lay their brave captain. All their lives depended, one might say, upon that single match. If it failed all must die; for cold and hunger were fast doing their work upon the poor men. With a trembling hand and a silent prayer he drew the match; and as the little feeble flame broke out, 'Thank God!' burst from the men.

"They soon managed to make the wood catch fire; and as the bright blaze shot up the glare brought relief to the poor captain, who lay on the beach too weak to crawl.

"The feeling that now he should be saved helped to keep him alive. When the sailors came to where he lay he was nearly gone; but they carried him in, and gradually he revived.

"Remember how much good a thing that seems so insignificant as a match can do."

I CANNOT PRAY FOR FATHER ANY MORE.—A child knelt at the accustomed time to thank God for the mercies of the day, and pray for his care through the coming night. Then, as usual, came the "God bless dear mother and ——"

But the prayer was stilled, the little hands unclasped, and a look of sadness and wonder met the mother's eye as the words of hopeless sorrow came from the lips of the kneeling child: "I cannot pray for father any more."

Since her little lips had been able to form the dear name she had prayed for a blessing upon it. It had followed close after mother's name. But now he was dead. I waited for some moments and then urged her to go on.

Her pleading eyes met mine, and with a voice that faltered she said:

"O mother! I cannot leave him all out; let me say, 'Thank God that I had a dear father once;' so I can still go on and keep him in my prayers."

And so she still continues to do, and my heart learned a lesson from the loving ingenuity of my child. Remember to thank God for mercies past, as well as to ask blessings for the future.—The Christian.

A LITTLE GIRL'S IDEA OF A PARABLE.—A little girl once said that a parable is "an earthly story with a heavenly meaning."

Pruning Roses.

"Ruralist" writes to the Rural New Yorker as follows: "As soon as the frost is out of the ground in spring, and hard-freezing weather is past, I commence to prune my roses. I suppose that every one who has noticed the varying habits of roses knows the different species or classes require different treatment with the pruning-knife. All kinds of summer or June roses, as they are usually termed, such as Damask, Prairie, Moss and French, should have the old canes occasionally removed—that is, those that have produced flowers one, two or three years. Also all weak, slender branches and canes may be removed, allowing only sufficient to give the plant a good form. The largest and most perfect flowers are usually produced upon the strongest one-year-old canes, and these may be shortened with benefit. Hybrid Perpetuals should also have their canes shortened, and the weak, feeble branches cut away, and, as a rule, the weaker the shoot the more severely it should be pruned. Six to twelve inches is long enough for side branches on Hybrid Perpetuals grown as tree or half standards. With the Tea-scented, Noisettes and Bourbons there is little danger of pruning too severely, because it is the young shoots that produce the flowers, and the more vigorous these start and grow the more abundant will be the blooms. There is little use to leave a quantity of long, slender shoots upon a plant, expecting that they will produce as many or as perfect flowers as a few strong ones. After monthly roses have produced their first crops of flowers in summer a second may be hastened by cutting back the blooming shoots.

"The rose is one of the few cultivated plants that will withstand almost any amount of stimulating manure, provided it is not too fresh and rank. Let it be old and fine, and then apply as liberally as the supply will warrant. All roses do better in a rather heavy and compact soil than in one that is very light, containing too much sand or vegetable matter. The rose being a thirsty plant, it should be planted in a deep, moist soil, or where water can be freely given artificially. Those who plant single specimens of roses in sod, or upon raised mounds in the garden, usually learn their mistake in July and August."

COLT-BREAKING.—Having occasion recently to move a colt one hundred miles, I found he would not follow, lead or drive. Said a boy: "Turn him out with his halter on dragging, and he will break himself to lead." Stopping for the Sabbath, I left his halter on with the end trailing. He was terribly spunky. I said to him: "You may get mad at that rope, and scold and shake your head at it as long as you choose; the rope can stand it as long as you can." He found out that it was so, and on Monday he walked close to the leader. The best way to break a colt is to let him break himself. A letter A, two poles twenty feet long, and a crossbar, with the angle and wagon-wheels at the ends, makes a machine into which a colt can be harnessed and permitted to run around until he is broken. A colt with his whiffletree hitched to one pole and his halter to the other soon learns what he needs to know to permit himself to be driven. Such a machine, costing half a day's work and a pair of old wagon-wheels—or the essential use of a pair—would often double the saleable value of a colt. A farmer, having a gang of blooded colts too small and spirited for his use, sold them, full grown, at from $50 to $100 each. One pair was resold this spring at $775. Others proved worth far more to use than was evident when they were wild; a colt should at least be accustomed early to the halter, headstall and girth. Then, when he must be used, he begins more like a horse and less like a mustang.—A., in Rural World.

COVER YOUR HORSE'S BREAST.—A correspondent of the Philadelphia Evening Star makes the following sensible remarks, which we copy as being particularly pertinent at this juncture:

"I am surprised that no one has called attention to the want of protection to the most important part of the horse—the breast. You will see horses on the street with covering on the back, and the breast exposed. Every one who owns a horse should be aware that the lungs and throat of his animal require as much protection in this climate as the breast of a man.

"When we breast the cutting easterly winds, or the cold, clear wind of the west, we, as rational beings, cover well the breast, protecting the most important organ of the body—the lungs.

"Let every one who owns a horse have an apron made to come from the collar to near the knees, and not sweat one part of the body that can nearly protect itself to the expense of the all-important part—the breast of the animal."

CASHMERE GOATS IN TENNESSEE. A Davidson county, Tennessee, correspondent of the Rural Sun, who has these goats for sale, says:

"Cashmere goats have been and are now raised as successfully in Tennessee as in the mountains of Thibet or valleys of Hindoostan. The hair of the first cross on the common goat is of but little value. The second cross will produce hair worth from fifty to seventy-five cents a pound. Hair from the thorough-bred is worth from $1 to $1.50 a pound. It is quoted as "mohair." The annual yield is about three pounds. The skins, when dressed with the long, glossy hair on, are used for many purposes, and are in demand at $5 each."

TO SOFTEN KID BOOTS.—Melt a quarter of a pound of tallow, then pour it into a jar, and add to it the same weight of olive oil, stir, and let it stand; apply a small quantity occasionally with a piece of flannel. Should the boots be very dirty, cleanse with warm water. It will soften any leather.

MACHINERY, TIES, ETC.

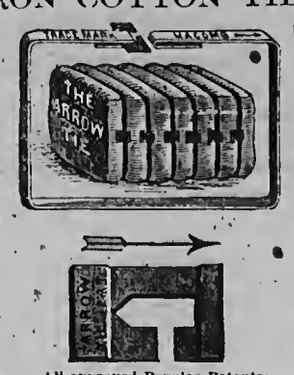
THE DUBOIS FLANGE COTTON GIN.

By the Flange the Cotton is kept in contact with the teeth on each side, until the fiber is taken from the seed, without allowing them to be taken up by the return motion of the roll, as in other Gins.

The Flange prevents hulls, stems, sticks and hard substances from being cut, consequently making a better sample out of roughly-picked cotton than other Gins.



We have sold more from this point than any agency of any other Gin for the crop of 1872-73; consequently we can furnish more and better references, and they are warranted to come up to all that is said of them.

We keep constantly on hand all sizes, from 40 to 80-SAW STANDS, left or right. Price, $5 per Saw.

IMPROVED

EAGLE COTTON GINS.

The great popularity of the EAGLE COTTON GINS is established from the well-known fact that they are the most reliable, strongest and best built Cotton Gins ever made. The Eagle Cotton Gin runs lighter than any other gin, thus having a great advantage for planters who wish to run by horse power. All the former planters who use the Eagle Cotton Gin will certify to the fact that when their cotton is sent to market it always brings the highest market price, as no other gin can produce a finer or a better sample of cotton than the Eagle Cotton Gins. Over seventeen thousand of the Eagle Cotton Gins have been made and sold. During a period of twenty years the undersigned has had the agency of the Eagle Cotton Gin in New Orleans. He has never had a gin returned or rejected out of the immense number sold. The saw cylinders of all the Eagle Cotton Gins are twelve inches in diameter, which is two inches larger than most other kinds of gins, thus giving our forty-saw gin more teeth, and they are more than equal to the fifty-saw gins of other makers, who use only a ten-inch cylinder, and the same great advantage of the twelve-inch cylinder in larger-sized gins can be easily estimated. Planters who wish a reliable cotton gin, with an established reputation, can purchase an Eagle Cotton Gin with a certainty that they are not making an untried experiment, but will obtain a cotton gin which is indorsed by the oldest and largest planters in the country as the best in use. A large stock of the Eagle Cotton Gins are always kept outside in New Orleans, ready for immediate shipment. Planters should be particular to state if they want right or left-hand motion gins.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE CONVERSATION FAN.

THE LAST AND MOST ABSORBING SENSATION OF THE DAY IS, TO USE A theatrical phrase, "a great take." Everybody, to be en regle for the season, and to avoid the proscription of imperious fashion, must have

A CONVERSATION FAN.

No family circle is complete in social diversions and entertainments without one, and in order to enjoy the pastime it should be distinctly understood that the answers do not numerically follow the questions, but to spice the amusement an answer must be looked for that will afford a fitting response to an interrogatory.

Where a direct answer is not to be found to a direct question, it will be discovered that it furnishes the sequel to a sustained conversation, so that couples can carry on a tete-a-tete; which they may not wish to make audible, by silent indications of numbers.

THE CONVERSATION FAN

is an infallible remedy against dullness, breaking the spell of silence by a suggestive inquiry, furnishing congenial pleasures for an evening's entertainment, and opening up a novel and ingenious method o whiling away agreeable hours at home, in the promenade, at a party or private gathering.

ONLY TEN CENTS A FAN.

To be had at Tiresham's, Ellis & Bro.'s, Haley's, Kuhn & Co.'s, R. J. Harp's, and all the Book Stores in the city, and at Piffet's, and Issued by

New Orleans Markets.

From the New Orleans Price Current.

The accounts from the interior are still discouraging. From Texas we learn that the lower part of the State has been flooded and cultivating rendered impracticable, but from the upper part the accounts are more encouraging. In Mississippi the reports continue highly discouraging.

The river is 2 feet 7 inches below high-water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the twelfth instant:

|---|---|
| Louisiana and Mississippi, bales | 2,073 |
| Arkansas | 125 |
| Mobile | 4 |
| Texas | 417 |
| Total | 2,619 |

On Saturday the sales were confined to 300 bales, mostly at easier prices, but with nothing in the limited business to justify any reduction of quotations. Prices were depressed and the movement checked by indications of a spell of dry weather and a decline of 1-16d. at Liverpool and of 1-16c. at New York. On Monday the sales embraced 450 bales consisting mostly of irregular and low kinds, which could not be used as a criterion for quotations. Good cottons were held at about previous rates, but the poorer qualities were manifestly easier. On Tuesday the market exhibited more vitality, and the demand being better, holders of all desirable lots assumed increased confidence, which prevented buyers from obtaining any concessions, except in mixed lots or the lower grades, especially when dusty or sandy, which exhibited a good deal of irregularity. Inferior sold at 9¼c., dusty and sandy lots at ⅛c. below our inside figures, strict ordinary to good ordinary at 14¾@15c., good ordinary, part stained and dusty, as low as 13¾c., strict good ordinary to low middling at 17⅛c., low middling at 17 15-16c., middling at 18¼c., and strict middling at 18c.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 1,800 bales, against 6,600 for the corresponding time last week and 11,300 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 1,187,828 bales, against 946,130 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 779,622 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 362,243 to Great Britain, of 64,932 to France, and of 173,076 to other foreign ports. We quote:

|---|---|---|
| Inferior | @ | |
| Low ordinary | 10 | @ 11 |
| Ordinary | 11 | @ 14¾ |
| Good ordinary | 15¾ | @ 16⅞ |

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

NEW YORK, June 25.—A Little Rock letter, dated the twentieth, says that rains have fallen incessantly for forty-six days, inundating the low lands and prairies, and utterly ruining the cotton crop along the Memphis and Little Rock railroad.

Henry Bowen, accompanied by H. B. Claflin, Judges Wood and Reyment, and several other persons, called upon Victoria Woodhull last evening, and requested the letters written to her by Henry Ward Beecher and Theodore Tilton. Judge Reyment said they had come to obtain this and other documantary evidence in order to vindicate Mr. Bowen. Victoria declined, on her lawyer's advice, to loan the documents until the conclusion of her present trial on the charge of obscenity.

BOSTON, June 25.—The necrology of Harvard College gives the number of deaths during the past year at fifty-nine.

The Nestor of Harvard College is now Harnee Binney. He is ninety-three years old and graduated in 1798.

Next on the list is Judge Willard Hall, who graduated in 1799. He is ninety-three years old. Both of these gentlemen have been members of Congress.

Samuel Dunn Parker, the oldest living member of the Boston bar, a graduate of 1799, is next on the list.

There are now no representatives left of 1798, 1800, 1801, 1802 or 1803.

The annual commencement exercises at Harvard take place to-day.

NASHVILLE, June 26.—Twenty-four deaths from cholera reported to-day. The disease seems to attack different parts of the city at different times, and while it is prevalent in one portion it is scarcely present in another.

NEW YORK, June 27.—The commencement exercises of the General Theological Seminary of the Protestant Episcopal Church was held to-day in St. Peter's church. The Bishop of Illinois delivered the commencement address, after which the diplomas were presented. No addresses were delivered by the graduates.

An address has been sent to President Grant and Governor Dix, by Italian-born citizens, expressing the belief that some prompt, effectual remedy is absolutely necessary to put down the infamous traffic in Italian children, now carried on between Italy and America, and asking that certain laws may be framed to that end.

A special to the Herald, from Florence, says that Hiram Powers died this morning.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 27.—The China brings Japan dates to June 6. The plan of an elective parliament, analogous to that of England, failed. A legislative congress takes its place.

The Mikado wants the rebuilding of his palace suspended, on account of the embarrassments of the government.

The native papers are calling for the establishment of a lunatic and foundling asylum.

The farmers throughout the country are advised to adopt American labor-saving machines.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—A dispatch from Fort Rice, Dakota Territory, says of the Yellowstone expedition, now under way for explorations through central Montana: It comprises one thousand nine hundred men and two hundred and fifty wagons, under the supreme command of Major General Stanley, General Custar commanding the cavalry. Sixty days' subsistence and forage will be taken up the Missouri and Yellowstone rivers, and meet the command at the mouth of Powder river.

The officers and men are limited to the smallest possible quantity of baggage. Each soldier carries two hundred rounds of ammunition. Thirty Indian scouts and eight half-breeds as guides accompany the expedition. Its objects are, first, to serve as an escort for the survey and location of the Northern Pacific road. Second, to intimidate and subdue the Indians who are hostile to the introduction of this road. Third, to make a thorough scientific investigation of the traversed region, which has never yet been explored, and which, it is expected, will furnish a rich field for study and research, especially in its zoological and geological features.

A Heart's Content special says the shore end of the cable was spliced to-day. A Herald special from Heart's Content says the Great Eastern, having paid out all the deep-sea cable to within eighty miles of Heart's Content at nine o'clock this morning, cut and buoyed it. A heavy west-southwest gale made it imprudent to pass it to the Hibernia for splicing to the shore end. It will be spliced and run in as soon as the weather moderates.

The Great Eastern arrived here at eight o'clock this evening, having left the convoys standing by the buoy. She lies with her broadside toward the village, presenting, with her hundreds of lights, a splendid appearance. But few visitors are here to witness the event, now thrice repeated, and the apathy displayed seems all the more marked when the enthusiasm of seven years ago is remembered.

NASHVILLE, June 28.—There were eight deaths from cholera to-day—four white and four colored. Scarcely any new cases are reported.

CINCINNATI, June 28.—There were fourteen deaths from cholera to-day, including that of Dr. C. P. Divar.

MARSHALL, TEXAS, June 28.—The connection with Jefferson was opened to-day by the Texas and Pacific railroad. Through trains from Jefferson to Shreveport will run daily.

CINCINNATI, June 29.—Hon. Jesse R. Grant, father of President Grant, died at his residence, in Covington, Kentucky, of general debility, about seven o'clock to-night.

President Grant, although expected on a special train, had not arrived at the hour of death.

CINCINNATI, July 1.—There were seven deaths from cholera to-day. Mayor Johnston is nearly well.

There was a very large attendance at the funeral of Jesse R. Grant, at the Union Methodist church, Covington, Kentucky, this afternoon. A large number accompanied the corpse to the grave at Spring Grove Cemetery. The Rev. J. S. Chadwick preached the funeral sermon. President Grant, Orville Grant and Mrs. Kramer, with the children of the deceased, were present.

BAY ST. LOUIS, July 1.—A duel was fought at Montgomery station, at ten o'clock this morning, between ex-Judge W. H. Cooley and Colonel R. B. Rhett. The weapons used were double-barreled shot-guns, distance forty yards. Cooley was killed at the second fire.

ROME, June 25.—The French and Austrian governments have addressed friendly observations to Italy with reference to the execution of the law abolishing religious corporations.

The Opinione denies the truth of the current rumor that Austria and France have formed an alliance against Italy, but declares Italy will seek alliances, should they become necessary for the defense of her national independence.

The government publishes a denial of the reported defeat of General Nouvillas by the Carlists.

The extreme radicals have risen in Seville and thrown up barricades in the streets. The latest dispatches from that city state that it was expected the outbreak would be suppressed before night is over.

The Archbishop of Cologne and his suffragans have been summoned to explain their reasons for excommunicating two priests who joined the Old Catholic organization.

VIENNA, June 28.—Anarchy prevails in the Turkish province of Bosnia, caused by the persecution of the Christians by the Mohammedans. In one district of the province two hundred and seventy Christians have been murdered within the past six weeks, and the perpetrators of the crimes remain unpunished; no efforts have been made to secure their arrest. Foreign representatives to Turkey demand an investigation, and call upon the authorities to afford protection to the persecuted people. These murders have greatly alarmed the Christians in the province, and many of them are emigrating.

FLORENCE, June 29.—Strong shocks of an earthquake were felt in the north of Italy at five o'clock this morning. The motion was severe in Venice and Verona, and caused a panic. There were several accidents in those cities, but no serious damage to persons or property. At other points shocks were more violent, and their effect disastrous.

A dispatch from Treviso reports that at Pelleto, near Conegliano, about thirty-five miles north of Venice, a church was destroyed by an earthquake, thirty-eight persons were killed, and in four villages near Vittoria fourteen persons were killed and many injured. Great damage was also done in the town of Zeltuno, on the river Piavi, fifty miles north of Venice.

LONDON, June 30.—The government has received a dispatch from Sir Charles Baker, dated Khuatroom, May 28, where he safely arrived with the Europeans of his command. He reports that the country as far south as the equator has been annexed to Egypt. The slave trade has been suppressed, and all rebellious movements and secret intrigues checked. The country is quiet and its government is perfectly organized. A road has been opened to Zanzibar free from interruption. He won a victory on the sixth of May, with only one hundred and five men, over the army of the African chief Onieso. His mission has been completely successful.

LONDON, July 1.—A meeting was held here last night at which resolutions were passed protesting against the introduction of the confessional into the Church of England. The Earl of Shaftsbury presided, and the meeting was large and influential.

JUDGE COLTON supplies this epigram on the marriage of William Green to Margaret Pigg:

"What various tastes do men display
In the affairs of life;
And odd and many are their freaks
In choosing out a wife.
And thus my friend, 'a little GREEN,'
As if to run some rig,
Chose for his own sweet bosom friend
A pretty little PIGG."

OLUSTEE CIRCUIT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: We have just closed our second quarterly meeting. Bro. Richardson, our working and efficient presiding elder, is doing good work. He carries the fire of the Holy Ghost with him. Sinners tremble while he preaches. At Helicon, where our quarterly meeting was held, we had on Monday night quite a revival in the church, and four conversions and as many accessions.

I preached last Sabbath (the second in June) at Hill's chapel, to a congregation of nearly three hundred persons. At the close we invited penitents to the altar, and over forty presented themselves for the prayers of the church, and some thirty or forty bowed at their seats; among them were gray hairs. The Lord is with us on Olustee circuit, and we expect great things, whereof we are glad. Among other good things we expect to hold a camp meeting, this fall, at Hill's camp ground, commencing on Friday night before the second Sabbath in September, to which we invite preachers and people. We expect to be well prepared to care for all who may come.

NATCHEZ STATION, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: The object of our labors and the prayer of our heart has been that the church under our care might be as a fruitful vine. Nay, we have desired that it might not only be fruitful, but might be like the tree which grows by the river of the waters of life, bearing many kinds of good fruits, and producing them at all seasons of the year. Like those tropical plants upon which may be seen at once foliage and fruits and flowers, we would have our church exhibiting the gladdening indications of fruit-bearing life at all times and in every stage of development. We would see childhood's young affections aspiring heavenward, youth assuming the forms and appropriating the elements of a higher life, adults strengthening and expanding with the abundance of the divine nutriment of the word and Spirit, and the aged joyfully ripening for garners in the sky, at all seasons, in every church of the Lord's planting. To this end we direct our efforts.

We have added to our number of members during the last five months, by restoration, certificate, baptism and confirmation, about forty souls, some applying almost every Sunday.

Our Sunday school is in good condition, increasing somewhat, and operating beautifully and usefully. Some time since we had the crowning of a May queen by the female pupils and their friends, by which about $200 was procured to assist in purchasing seats for the Sunday school room in the basement of the new church edifice. Our new patent reversible and non-reversible settees, of mingled walnut and maple, are, we think, as comfortable, convenient and elegant as are anywhere to be found.

The Ladies' Aid Society of the church is a constant worker and an efficient helper in every movement toward the completion of the church. They have given several entertainments, which were profitable pecuniarily and pleasant socially, and with which there was nothing connected to which the most scrupulous Christian could object.

Preaching and prayer meetings are well attended, and class meetings are not wholly neglected. Upon the whole, we think we have cause to thank God, take courage and labor on.

WATERPROOF, LOUISIANA.—Mr. Editor: We have this evening closed the meeting which we began May 22.

Rev. John Mathews, of Felicity Street church, was with us at the beginning, and delivered eleven discourses in six days. His ministrations were highly appreciated by our people, and were a great blessing to us all. Long will he be remembered here with kind and loving thoughts.

Bro. Diellenwierth and Bro. J. G. Miller were with us most of the time, leading in the service of song and in the prayers with penitents at the altar.

On the second Sabbath of the meeting Rev. Dr. Doremus, general agent of the Southwestern Bible Society, preached two excellent sermons, and took up our annual collection for the Bible cause. He thought the result quite satisfactory. It seemed eminently suitable that in the midst of a great revival of religion the people should be called upon to help the Bible cause.

Three days ago Bro. Daves, our presiding elder, came to our assistance and preached with great acceptability and with good effect each day until the close.

Our dear brother, Albert M. Wailes, was not at the meeting. He had no opportunity of recalling his appointments, and he would not disappoint his congregations.

Twenty-five persons professed to find the peace of Jesus and joined the church—among them one venerable grandfather of threescore years and ten, and one whole family, father, mother and two sons. Seven adults were baptized. The entire membership of the church are greatly comforted and built up on their most holy faith.

On to-morrow we set off for quarterly meeting at Vidalia.

SEASHORE DISTRICT CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: Our meeting commenced on Thursday evening, June 4. Opening sermon by Rev. J. Nicholson. Conference was opened for business on Friday morning, at nine o'clock, by Bishop Kavanaugh, who instituted searching inquiry upon all matters legitimately brought up before a District Conference. In response thereto it appeared:

1. That the spiritual condition of the churches was good, except in a few localities. This was represented as arising from neglect of family prayer, class meetings, ordinances, support of the ministry and other enterprises of the church. The conference resolved to insist upon a better observance of all these duties.

2. Sabbath schools were generally in a flourishing state. Our Sabbath school literature has a good and increasing circulation.

3. Financially the district, with few exceptions, is not in a prosperous condition, and the very general backwardness to sustain the preachers, and other objects deemed important by the church, needs prompt and efficient correction. The little church here has by much effort erected a neat and comfortable house of worship, and seems to be in a healthy and growing condition.

The brethren present were highly edified by the preaching, ordinances, sacraments and ordination, and much gratified with the cordial and fraternal hospitality extended them by the citizens of Ocean Springs. On Sabbath we had prayer meeting at sunrise, a most glorious love-feast at nine o'clock, an eloquent and impressive sermon by the Bishop at eleven, followed by the ordination of Rev. W. G. Evans, local elder. At four o'clock the Sabbath school, under the leadership of Mr. and Mrs. Parks, gave us some of their delightful music, and were eloquently addressed by Rev. P. H. Napier. At night the eucharist was administered by the Bishop, assisted by several of the brethren. Our meetings were marked with deep solemnity. There were several penitents and three additions to the church. The continued rains much interfered with and finally compelled us to close the meeting.

DEMOPOLIS DISTRICT CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: The District Conference for Demopolis district, Alabama Conference, met at Eutaw, Alabama, May 30, and continued in session two days. All the preachers were present, which we note as a great improvement. The attendance of laymen was good, but smaller than it would have been if the railroad had been in operation. The Alabama and Chattanooga railroad was at the time on one of those periodical strikes which have made it a chronic nuisance to the traveling public, and which, it seems, cannot be permanently abated. The conference was an occasion of great interest. The reports of the preachers show improvement in the spiritual state of the church and in the Sunday schools. There was also reported a very general temperance movement throughout the district, from which much good is expected to result.

Bishop Doggett, who was to preside, did not arrive until the last day, having been much hindered by the railroad trouble and forced to travel almost twice the distance to get to the conference. He arrived in time to preside on the last day, and his presence infused a great deal of interest into the conference. He inquired very closely into the condition of each charge as to class meetings, Sunday schools, family religion, etc., and his earnest exhortations to the preachers to give more attention to these matters led to the adoption of very forcible resolutions, which, if faithfully carried out, can but result in prosperity to the church. He also preached two sermons to large and attentive congregations, and his sermon on Sunday morning, on the text, "It is finished" (John xix, 30,) in which he showed the nature, the relations and the results of the atonement, will be long remembered by those who heard it. This sermon was addressed not only to the intellects, but to the hearts of the hearers, and was blessed of the Spirit to the good of many.

Steps were taken by the conference for the purchase or erection of a district parsonage at Livingston, that station offering to raise $800 for that purpose.

A. K. Ramsey, Henry Ware, Richmond Allen and Rev. Israel J. Smith were elected lay delegates to the Annual Conference. Reserves—J. L. Scruggs and G. H. Cole. The conference will hold its next session at Gainesville. J. M. MASON, Sec.

BROOKHAVEN DISTRICT CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: You have perhaps already received a synopsis of the proceedings of this District Conference—Bishop Kavanaugh presiding, Rev. H. J. Harris, secretary. The conference opened, on the thirteenth instant, in an entire new house, completed in six weeks from its commencement. The spirit exhibited by the people in this regard is highly praiseworthy. Beauregard, the seat of the conference, is a young and thriving town on the New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern railroad, one hundred and thirty-eight miles north of your city, and has many very enterprising and worthy citizens. The constant sounds of the hammer and saw, accompanied with the music of the "Variety Works," could make no other impression on the mind of the visitor than that improvement and go-ahead was the object of the community. While there some three and a half days I did not see a drunken individual; but I saw more than one of the devil's dish-washers—one white, the other black; their hearts, perhaps, both of a color. If the people of Beauregard and its surroundings would put their influence against such traffic it would still be more inviting.

The conference, taken as a whole, was very interesting as well as profitable. I was told by Bro. Linfield that the membership comprised ninety-two: I did not count them, but I think that nearly that number were in attendance.

Judging from externals, as well as mentals, it is a pretty big thing to be a Bishop. Bishop Kavanaugh did some of the biggest preaching that it has been my fortune to hear. And oh, how meek, plain and child-like, social, courteous, and every inch a Christian!

On the last evening of the conference some resolutions were offered (but lost) to the following effect: That all applications for license to preach and recommendations for admission into the traveling connection should pass through the District Conferences; and also that the records of each Quarterly Conference should be sent up to the District Conferences, to be investigated by committees appointed for that purpose. This was regarded by some as a death-blow directed against Quarterly Conferences. Some who favored the resolutions contended, in effect, that Quarterly Conferences were incapable of judging the merits of applicants for license to preach, and often recommended men for the itinerant work who were wholly unqualified. This was, I think, a gratuitous and heavy fling at that humble organization. Young America, I perceive, is desirous of begetting a young Methodism. And if old Methodists are not watchful over the old landmarks they will find themselves working in a different kind of harness to that to which they have been accustomed, and will suffer many galls and chafes from unaccustomed friction. A memorial to the above effect, I fear, will get into the General Conference; but I hope it will meet the fate it met in our District Conference—defeat. The devil always hated Methodism, and so do some others.

We had a genuine, old-fashioned love-feast—a feast of love. The power and presence of the Spirit was there fully demonstrated. The Holy Ghost overshadowed the crowded congregation, and evidently manifested his approbation of such occasions. Oh, how I delight in such meetings! Can't we all work back into the "old ways," approved of God, instead of looking out new ones that may terminate in a squirrel-track and go up a tree? Yours, VISITOR.

SELMA (ALABAMA) DISTRICT CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: This District Conference was held at Uniontown, commencing on the twelfth of June and closing on the succeeding Saturday evening. No Bishop being present, our elder, Rev. Andrew J. Briggs, presided, Thomas Fowler acting as secretary. Despite the flood of waters, and the great scarcity of public traveling facilities for which this district is so noted, every charge was represented, and the majority of them by full delegations. All the interests of the church were thoroughly investigated, and the business of the conference transacted with promptness and harmony. Rev. Dr. Andrews and Rev. J. S. Moore, of the Southern University, were present and made suitable representations in behalf of their college, to which the conference responded by a resolution indorsing its faculty and administration, and recommending it to the patronage of our church and of the entire South. A special committee of five laymen submitted a report on finance, which was unanimously adopted, and is herewith sent to you for publication. The conference passed a resolution requesting you to publish these reports, the first in connection with this letter, the finance report when it shall be converted. Euclid Johnson, of Selma; W. R. Kennedy, of Uniontown; Levi W. Reeves, of Dayton, and John W. Portis, of Suggsville, were elected delegates to the Annual Conference; and Judge P. G. Wood, of Selma, and Dr. Joseph Groves, of Athens, alternates. Special prominence was given to religious exercises, and the preaching was with power and acceptability. It is the universal sentiment of our people of this district that the Alabama Conference has no abler or more faithful or more successful presiding elder than Bro. Briggs.

Yours truly, L. W. R.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON THE CONDITION OF THE CHURCH.

The committee appointed to consider the condition of the church within the bounds of this district, having carefully listened to and examined the facts presented in the reports from the various charges, beg leave to make the following report. They represent that the spiritual condition of the church is much better than at this time last year, with strong and reliable indications everywhere of still further improvement. As evidences of this advancement they refer to the following well-attested facts:

1. The manifest abatement in those evils and irregularities, such as the sale and intemperate use of spirituous liquors, dancing, etc., which so often prevent the growth of grace in the hearts of many Christians. They recommend, however, that the pastors of our church continue their exertions in this direction until these evils are entirely removed.

2. The general revival of the disciplinary and social meetings of the church, such as prayer meetings, class meetings and the minor conferences, and the prompt attendance of the membership thereupon.

3. The increase of our membership, both by the conversion of sinners and affiliation from the ranks of other Christian denominations, while our own church has suffered no material loss from change of church relations.

4. The multiplication and better management of Sabbath schools, furnishing the church a corps of qualified reserves from which to recruit her ranks whenever the disability or death of her veterans or the greater development of her necessities shall demand their service.

But while we praise God and congratulate each other for these glorious fruits of his goodness and of our labors, we must briefly notice some of the more prominent wants of the church, as shown by these same reports. We need:

1. Family worship—the erection of family altars—by which our heads of families may offer their sacrifices of thanksgiving to God for family blessings and their petitions for family wants, and set a good example to their children. Every Christian parent should dedicate his family to God afresh, day by day, by open, formal prayer and praise; and no amount of private or public prayer will excuse the neglect of this duty. In addition to the accumulation of religious power gained by such practice, there is no other means by which a parent can so appropriately discharge his obligation to his household, or so seriously impress them with a proper sense of their dependence upon God.

2. A more accurate knowledge of the rules and doctrines of our church, and of its chronological and biographical history. The former of these may be found in our Discipline, while the latter may be learned from the lives and writings of our Christian fathers, and the papers and publications of our church. Let all our people understand the doctrines, and become familiar with and love the literature of our church, that they may be qualified to defend our faith and usages against the attacks of the popular heresies and infidel theories of the present day.

3. More attention by pastors and parents to the ordinance of infant baptism. As "children are an heritage of the Lord," we should return him thanks, early after their bestowment, by committing and commending them to his favor and dedicating them to his service through the means of this scriptural ordinance. The committee would urge the preachers to pay more attention to that article of religion which teaches that "the baptism of young children is to be retained in the church."

For a knowledge of the financial condition of the district the committee refer you to the report on finance.

They cannot close this report without expressing their satisfaction with the able and energetic administration of our presiding elder, Rev. A. J. Briggs, the patient toil and consecration of our ministry, and the sympathetic co-operation of our laity, and commending both our cause and laborers to God, who alone "giveth the increase."

THURSDAY, JULY 3, 1873.

PADDY'S FAREWELL TO THE PRIEST.

The priest of the parish got up in the morn,
And he ordered his clerk all the people to warn;
Before his tribunal that each should appear,
Where he sat as a god their confessions to hear!
Then Paddy got up, and he sent him word
That his soul had escaped from the snare, like a bird
From the net of the fowler, and now he would tell
His reasons for bidding his priest farewell.

"Farewell, and forever, to teachers of lies,
The word of the Lord has enlightened mine eyes;
I see your impostures as plain as the light—
You only can flourish in darkness and night.
Your merchandise now has no value for me,
For the pearl of truth in the scriptures I see;
The joys that you fill me no language can tell;
So, priest of the parish, I bid thee farewell.

"Farewell to your worship of pictures and stones,
Your rags and your relics, and rotten old bones;
Your images winking—your bleeding impostors—
Your ten Ave Marias for two Paternosters;
The second commandment you cunningly hide—
A service of sense for the true one provide;
The word of the Lord by your rubbish deceives,
And cheat all the world with your refuge of lies.

"Farewell to the mass—'tis a lie and a cheat;
What! worship a wafer, the vermin may eat!
It grew in a field; it was threshed with a flail;
'Twas winnowed and sifted; it was ground into meal;
'Twas boiled in a sauce-pan and made into paste;
'Twas clipped with the scissors—the mice eat the waste;
'Twas stamped with a figure—a cross and a man;
'Twas put on a fire and baked in a pan;
The offspring of Satan—invention of hell;
So, gods made of wafers, forever farewell.

"Farewell to your worship with muttering tone—
An offering of fools in a jargon unknown;
Your antics and turnings, your bowings and scrapings,
Your postures and twistings, your grimaces and gapings,
That make one believe, if you had but the hunch,
You're acting the burlesque of Judy and Punch!
A service where folly and nonsense combine—
A mock and a mimic of worship divine!

"Farewell to the cursings, the bludgeons and sticks—
The Mother of Harlots, with Jezebel's tricks;
Go stand on the necks of your minions and fools,
Go blow out your candles on asses and stools;
'Tis fit that the slave who allows your control
Should have all the weight of your chains on his soul!
By the power of the truth I have broken your spell;
Now, priest of the parish, I bid you farewell."

The Southern Review and the Temperance Cause.

MR. EDITOR: The writer of the ninth article of the last number of the Review, in his arraignment of the temperance movement, affirms that it has not tended to strengthen the cause of religion: that it has relied too much on mere human means, and neglected too much the Bible scheme for the reformation of man; that its sole object is the destruction of one single vice, while that of the Bible is to destroy all; that it is calculated to endanger the Bible scheme, to bring that holy book into contempt, and to lessen faith in the Christian religion.

The temperance movement does not claim to be, in any shape or form, a substitute for Christianity; it does not pretend to direct men to heaven; it nowhere affirms that total abstinence will relieve men from the necessity of "being born again." The gospel furnishes the only ground of salvation and teaches the only means of securing it, and this position temperance men, as such, never gainsay or contest. They do not declare their enterprise, in the strict sense of the term, to be a church institution; but they do say that it is conceived in the spirit of our holy religion, that it is in harmony with the teachings of Christ and his apostles, and that its success will ever tend to give efficiency to a preached gospel. It is true that the Bible aims to destroy every species of vice, while the temperance movement is directed specifically against one; but where is the harm of that, in an institution which does not claim in any sense to supplant the church or to rival it, or to do its work in accomplishing the regeneration of men? It occupies a subordinate position to the gospel, and hopes to act some humble yet efficient part in promoting the intelligence, the morality and the material prosperity of individuals and of communities, and in removing obstacles or preventing their formation which are oftentimes fatal to the legitimate effects of the divine word. It does not teach that intemperance is the only evil, or, if men are free from that, they can indulge in whatever other form of vice they may choose; and the reviewer or any other enemy of the cause is challenged to point out, in any creed or recognized exponent, a sentiment which can bear such a construction.

The reviewer seems to regard it as a crime in the temperance movement that it aims to diminish and extirpate only one evil. We do not see it in that light. If an evil becomes paramount and overwhelming in a country; if it is the pregnant and prolific source of poverty, ignorance, prostitution, profligacy and bloodshed; if it is at the same time peculiarly deceptive and attractive in its character; if it is, in fact, corrupting and debasing a large portion of the people, and sapping the very foundations of society, it would seem to be the imperative duty of all good men, without respect to sect or party, of all lovers of their country and lovers of their race, to rise up, unite and put forth every exertion suitable to the case to effect its restraint and suppression. There are some wise and true men, sincere patriots and well-wishers to their race, who unfortunately are not connected with the church, yet who are oftentimes able and willing to assist in some movement calculated to deliver and bless their fellow-men. It is not usual to refuse to such association with benevolent enterprises under the immediate control of the church, and the temperance movement has presented unto such a field "white unto harvest," in which many have entered and labored unto their own profit and that of others. It is sound policy to enlist unconverted men of position and influence in benevolent enterprises, as it associates them with the pious, accustoms them to doing good, and may lead them to seek the higher good in the conversion of their own souls. Especially is it desirable to enlist such in the temperance movement, as it will save them from the formation of a frightful habit, and bring their influence to bear in a practical direction for the benefit of others.

Why should there not be a combination of men and women to suppress one special and powerful evil? It is often done. Ignorance is a calamity of grave consequence, and it is important to the public weal and to individual happiness that knowledge should be disseminated, that institutions of learning should be established, and the means of securing at least an elementary training should be furnished to the youth of the land. Good and patriotic men unite and form societies to promote their own mental improvement, to foster an educational spirit, and to influence the legislation of the country. No objection is made to this course.

Poverty prevails in a community; attention and assistance must needs be rendered to the suffering, and perhaps many individuals of means are backward or niggardly in their contributions, while others withhold those personal services which are often more effective than money. Good men and women unite and form a charitable association, systematize and enlarge the gifts of the people, encourage personal effort, and thus cultivate the benevolence of the rich and relieve the wants of the poor. This is deemed all right.

The Scriptures—the source of life and truth—have but a limited circulation in the world. Individuals and families are found in vast numbers, even in the most enlightened countries of Christendom, who possess not a copy of the sacred word, and are unacquainted with its saving and precious truths. Good men unite and form a society for the special circulation of the Scriptures, known as the Bible Society, fix their terms of membership, and invite all, without respect to creed or denomination, whether in the church or out, to join them, to give their money and to exert their influence for the success of the enterprise. All bid such association God-speed.

Ignorance upon religious subjects is known to exist to an alarming extent among the masses, not only in our own but in every land; and it is believed that treatises—short, simple, clear, and often in narrative form—illustrative of the precepts and principles of Christianity, will be eagerly read by all classes, and will produce a profound impression for good. Practical men unite, form a society known as the Tract Society, invite the co-operation of all who love their race, accumulate funds, and send forth thousands of little treatises, pointed, touching and intelligible, calculated to arrest the attention, to interest and to enlighten. All approve and cheer the movement.

Intemperance "peoples the hospital, the lunatic asylum and the jail;" "it poisons the bodies, emasculates the minds, cripples the pockets of its victims, whose self-wrought destruction of body and soul adds enormously to the burdens of sober and decently-conducted taxpayers;" and "the homes which it has desolated may be counted by thousands, and the imagination shudders at the contemplation of the large army of immortal beings hurried by it to perdition." The suppression of an evil of such huge proportions is not only a religious question, but one social and political, and presents a problem that demands prompt and careful consideration for its solution. Shall not men and women be permitted, without subjecting themselves to severe animadversion, to unite and form a society, pledging themselves to personal abstinence, and striving to relieve the world of the false estimate placed upon the beneficial properties of alcoholic liquids, to disseminate reliable information in regard to the great and pervading evils which attend upon their use as a beverage, and thus to arrest the fearful tide in its onward and wasting progress? Is not this a case demanding precisely this form of action? Thus it seems to us.

Our reviewer asks: "When we single out a particular vice for denunciation, may not men in time come to look with indifference on others?" In reply we say that no such result naturally or necessarily follows. It would seem that the diminution and suppression of one great evil would contribute to the virtue of society, and to the diminution of other evils with which that is connected. Now it may be admitted that men devoting themselves entirely to any special enterprise naturally take an exaggerated view of its consequence. This is not peculiar to the advocates of temperance. The man connected with institutions of learning and specially interested in the diffusion of knowledge, in a public address or published essay, would perhaps present a highly colored view of the advantages of education. The minister specially appointed to promote the missionary enterprise, in his platform addresses and written communications, will place too high a value upon that department of the church's work, so strong are his own convictions. In the pulpit we not unfrequently hear an undue relative importance given to specified Christian virtues. In common life the lawyer magnifies his vocation, and the physician his, while the farmer contends that they are both dependent upon and inferior to that which he pursues. No particular harm results from this. Suppose some enthusiastic temperance man did say that "intemperance, if not the sum of all wickedness, is at least the source of all evil"—who was damaged? If it is not the source of all evil, it is the source of very much evil, even the reviewer himself must admit; and no speaker or writer, after all, will succeed in impressing more upon the public mind.

How will the effort to diminish one vice lead to a culpable indifference to others? There is no repugnance between the virtue temperance men advocate and other virtues; there is, indeed, between them an intimate connection, and the promotion of the one will rather tend to enhance the others. The practice of total abstinence in respect to one source of evil will lead to abstinence in respect to other sources, and to the development of a purer and higher moral character. On the other hand, there is no repugnance between intemperance and other vices, but a close relation and alliance, and the denunciation and rejection of the former will lead to a disregard and hatred of the others, rather than to an indifference and an embrace. Moreover, the practice of total abstinence from alcoholic liquors tends to keep the head clear, the passions cool, the reason unimpaired, the conscience pure, the will free, and all the avenues to divine truth open and unobstructed, while the associations of life are of a higher character, and all the influences for good have better material upon which to work. Further, to prevent this obliquity of moral judgment by which the advocacy of one virtue and the denunciation of one vice leads to an undue exaltation of that virtue and an indifference to other vices, there are common sense, experience, the word of God and his church, the writings of the wise and the examples of the good in the generations of the past, proclaiming the importance of all the virtues and the heinousness of all the vices, and the folly of any improper discrimination, or neglect in respect thereto. Contrary to the opinion of our reviewer, the experience of the world and the nature of things seem to teach that the conscientious practice of one virtue leads to a higher appreciation of other virtues, and the conscientious abandonment of one vice leads to a deeper detestation of other vices. The prevalence of temperance principles in a community largely promotes industry, economy, honesty, fidelity, chastity, good will and harmony, and often results in a gracious and extensive revival of religion.

If we "imagine a community in which distilled spirits were unknown and where the grape had never been pressed," and in which the gospel is preached in its simplicity and purity, and all the usual means of grace are enjoyed, not only should we not have "a pandemonium which Milton's great genius only was capable of conceiving," but we should have a state of society infinitely more stable and virtuous than that in which we now live; for Parkes, the eminent English professor, tells us, in a purely scientific treatise, that "if alcohol were unknown, half the sin and three-fourths of the poverty and unhappiness of the world would disappear."

No doubt there has been much of infirmity in the temperance movement—many unhappy things have been spoken and many unwise steps taken. This has been inevitable. It is a treasure, but a "treasure in earthen vessels"—a treasure administered by human agents. What intelligent Christian has not blushed at the ideas and expressions which he has heard from the pulpit, or at the manners which he has seen therein exhibited? Who for this would be justified in casting reproach upon Christianity or in affixing a stigma upon all its followers?

The temperance movement is an outgrowth of Christianity, is founded upon the great laws of self-preservation and charity, and commenced when the condition of the world specially needed it. About the time of the Reformation of the sixteenth century associations of the kind were formed in some of the German States, and were patronized by those high in authority, but they were "lax and indefinite" in their principles, and therefore "limited in their usefulness" and "transitory in their existence." The first societies established in this country and in England were based upon "a mutual agreement to abstain from the use of distilled spirits;" but experience soon demonstrated that the remedy did not reach the full measure of the disease, for wine, cider and malt liquors constitute in themselves powerful sources of intemperance. Hence an advanced step became necessary, and total abstinence from all intoxicating liquors as a beverage became the fundamental principle of the societies in both countries. This is a remedy sure and practical, and if it be faithfully and perseveringly administered, and if it be upheld by a legal prohibition of the unholy traffic, as in fact it should be, it will to a great extent eradicate the fearful disease which preys upon so many thousands of our fellow-men. Its conception and application in the premises seem an inspiration, and is one of the happiest of this age, distinguished for its new ideas.

The Alabama Conference and the Southern University.

REPLY TO BROS. SHORES AND SHAPARD.

MR. EDITOR: I trust the utility of this article will so far commend itself to you as to find a place in your columns. In spirit it shall be an offering to brotherly love and to the prosperity of the Southern University. I shall notice such points only in controversy as I regard important.

And first, I disclaim any purpose of charging wrong motives upon brethren who differed from the majority of the Conference in its action in disposing of the funds in question. If the fact was not clearly and emphatically stated upon the Conference floor that these are trust funds, I suppose the reason is that it was thought that all understood their nature.

The main point in the rejoinders to my former article may be put, if I understand Bros. Shores and Shapard, in these words: 1. The Conference had the disposition of certain funds, claimed to be funds held in trust. 2. It is stated by "Kappa" that it made, or aimed to make, a disinterested disposition of those funds for the cause of religion. 3. But it so applied them as to benefit the members of the Conference; and, worse, that class of its members least needy. 4. That such an application of the funds was as much a diversion of them from their original purpose as would have been the direction these brethren advocate.

Now they take for granted the point in controversy: that the Conference did so dispose of those funds as to benefit its members. Here are the facts: By a certain compromise—wise or unwise is not the question—the Southern University is the only male institution of learning of high grade belonging to the Conference. Every consideration urges us to sustain it. Let it go down, and the Alabama Conference will soon lose the high position it holds among the Conferences. We cannot, in view of our obligations to God and man, afford to let it go down. For years it has been kept going by an amount of self-sacrifice on the part of the faculty that nothing but love for Christ's kingdom could sustain. In the absence of an endowment fund they cannot be expected to continue the struggle much longer. During all this time they have been teaching gratuitously (mark this) the sons of itinerant preachers and young men preparing for the ministry. A liberal subscription has been made by the citizens of Greensboro to create an endowment fund, binding when, through Conference agency, it shall be increased to $50,000. This condition has not been complied with yet. Brethren may be assured that the perpetuity of the institution depends upon securing this amount. Now, if "Kappa" understood the purpose of the Conference, it was to help forward this endowment fund, and not to pay the tuition of preachers' sons. Observe, the faculty had never charged preachers' sons tuition fees. They never purposed doing so. So far as the faculty is concerned, that class of patronage stands now just as it did before. And it is relatively a large class. The income from the amount set apart by the Conference for the University cannot exceed $800 per annum—perhaps not one-third the sum that the tuition fees of preachers' sons now in school amount to, were it charged up. But under the financial pressure upon the University some preachers hesitate to receive the tuition of their sons gratis. The Conference says by its action, now in controversy: "Send them along. The faculty will take this $50 interest as an equivalent for the tuition fees of every preacher's son in both Alabama Conferences, and of every young man preparing for the ministry." Does the reader not see that no benefit is secured to the members of the Conference that they did not enjoy before? In no case would they have paid tuition fees. I repeat, the object of the Conference was to save the University, not to benefit any class of preachers.

All that Bro. Shores says in advocacy of endowments to aid in the support of the active pastorate finds, I think, a sufficient answer in the dissatisfaction caused by this disposition of a few thousand dollars. Human nature—and all preachers have enough of it—will be on the qui vive when money is to be distributed in which it has, or claims to have, an interest. May I never belong to a Conference that has the management of such funds on its hands! The question of such an endowment does not at all involve the question of ministerial support. "As to how a living shall be secured is" not "an open question," if I read the word correctly. "Let him that is taught in the word communicate unto him that teacheth in all good things." That is the rule—a "living" directly from those who are "taught."

I see in your issue of the twelfth instant that Bro. West still presses inquiries from the North Alabama side of the line. He states a number of things he has "not heard," and does it in a way that intimates, without declaring it in so many words, that the Alabama Conference is not disposed to act cleverly toward her twin sister. Now that is all gratuitous. If Bro. Roberts is the agent to settle claims with the Alabama Conference, I dare say he will find her ready to negotiate in a fair and Christian manner. When she refuses to do so then there will be something to justify the tone of Bro. West's article. If he is not the agent, why thrust his inquiries into the current of negotiation? I submit to him that the duly appointed agent of his Conference is the proper medium through which to seek information as to the state of the negotiations, and not the ADVOCATE. KAPPA.

The Uniform Lessons.

MR. EDITOR: In the ADVOCATE of June 5 you published the reported proceedings of the Woodville District Conference. In that report I was surprised to see a bitter denunciation of the uniform lessons now so generally used in our Sabbath schools. In fact "T. W. B." says "men of eminence" called them "wishy-washy." It is with due deference to those "men of eminence" that I ask permission to say a few words in behalf of the uniform lessons. An experience of eight years as a teacher, and an almost constant attendance since my fifth year as pupil, in the Sabbath school may be a set-off to the "eminence" of those critics of the Woodville District Conference.

My experience justifies me in saying that I have seen no better system of instruction in the Sabbath school than that which Bro. Haygood so auspiciously inaugurated, and has so successfully carried on during the past thirty months. I hesitate not to say that wherever those lessons have been properly taught you will find the pupils thoroughly and understandingly instructed in all Wesleyan doctrine—in all sound doctrine. The system avoids the old, dry metaphysical language and monotonous manner of teaching, and in a pleasing and interesting style addresses the children's intellect, holds their attention, wins their hearts, and does much, very much, to convince them of the truth as it is in Jesus. If they do this—all this—it is well that the old system has been superseded. If there is any failure connected with the uniform lesson system, the fault is with the teachers, and not with the lessons. The lessons are arranged in excellent order, the questions are divided with extreme care and in a suitable way, and the notes furnished the teachers and Bible students, in the Magazine, are replete with information and apt illustrations, gathered with diligence and discretion from the ablest theological writings. He who pronounced these things "wishy-washy" certainly did not weigh his words, or else had not examined with due attention the system he so bitterly denounced. I have seen and examined many plans for religious instruction, but I have yet to see one equal to that which our church has adopted for its youth. Let the teachers use the system aright, study the lessons, and even those "men of eminence" must change their opinions. L.

Infant Salvation and Regeneration.

MR. EDITOR: In your issue of the twelfth instant an article appears over an anonymous signature—"A Constant Reader of the ADVOCATE." He appears to be somewhat select in his reply, if reply it is. The language quoted and the scriptural quotations referred to show that his thrusts are personal, and that I am the object aimed at. This is Modoc or guerrilla warfare. I am disposed, however, to take it coolly, and would not, if I certainly knew him, say a word to mar his feelings, though I am called a fool! ("Fools rush in where angels dare not intrude.") The Savior says (Matthew v, 22:) "But whosoever shall say to his brother, Thou fool, shall be in danger of hell-fire." The brother, in his haste and high condemnation of the position taken by myself and others, has overleaped the boundary marked out by Jesus. I have ever found this to be the case with those who have been floored in argument—they leave the point in contest and resort to crimination and harshness.

Bro. W. (who is supposed by some to be Dr. Walker) has left the field, it appears, but not gloriously, and is resting under his laurels. Unless "Constant Reader" appears under a more charitable spirit I shall do the same, believing that an impartial public will generously award them to me also. With this, for the present, I take my exit.

Yours truly, JOHN SAMPLE.

What the Leaf Does.

It pumps water from the ground, through the thousands of tubes in the stem of the tree, and sends it into the atmosphere in the form of unseen mist, to be condensed and fall in showers; the very water that, were it not for the leaf, would sink in the earth and find its way, perchance, through subterranean channels to the sea. And thus it is that we see it works to give us the "early and the latter rain." It works to send the rills and streams, like lines of silver, down the mountain and across the plain. It works to pour down the larger brooks, which turn the wheels that energize the machinery which gives employment to millions—commerce stimulated and wealth accumulated, and intelligence disseminated through the agency of this wealth. The leaf does it all. It has been demonstrated that every square inch of leaf lifts 0.035 of an ounce every twenty-four hours. Now a large forest-tree has about five acres of foliage, or 5,272,630 square inches. This being multiplied by 0.035 (the amount pumped by every inch) gives us the result—2,252 ounces, or eight barrels.

The trees on an acre give 800 barrels in twenty-four hours. An acre of grass or clover or grain would yield about the same result. The leaf is a worker, too, in another field of labor, where we seldom look—where it works for the good of man in a most wonderful manner. It carries immense quantities of electricity from the earth to the clouds, and from the clouds to the earth. Rather dangerous business, transporting lightning; but it is particularly fitted for this work. Did you ever see a leaf entire as to its edges? It is always pointed, and these points, whether they be large or small, are just fitted to handle this dangerous agent. These tiny fingers seize upon and carry it away with ease and wonderful dispatch. There must be no delay; it is "time-freight." True, sometimes it gathers up more than the trunk can carry, and in the attempt to crowd and pack the baggage the trunk gets terribly shattered, and we say that lightning struck the tree; but it had been struck a thousand times before. This time it was overworked.—American Entomologist.

Obituaries.

DIED, of consumption, at Greenwood, Louisiana, May 3, Dr. A. E. HAMITER, aged thirty-one years. Dr. Hamiter was a comparative stranger in our midst, but we believe he had the confidence of all who knew him as an honest, upright man, and we have good hope that he is in "the better country." May we see him there. R. H. A.

SISTER IVANONAH C. SMITH was born on the fifth of September, 1844, in Coweta county, Georgia, and departed this life March 29, 1873, near Dallas, Texas. She was the daughter of C. W. and Mary E. Arnold. She professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1857, at Jones' camp ground, near Palmetto, Georgia; moved to Louisiana with her parents in 1858; was married to Thomas H. Smith on the ninth of November, 1871, and removed with her husband to Texas in January, 1873. Sister Smith was a devoted Christian, wife and daughter. For four years I was her pastor, and found the Scripture fulfilled: "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." She having been trained and educated from early childhood in the ways of Christianity, when she became of riper years she was steadfast in the faith, and has now laid down the cross and taken up the crown.

H. O. WHITE.

MRS. MARTHA D. WETHERILL, consort of John Wetherill, died, on the Island of Grand Chenière, June 8, 1873.

Sister Wetherill was the daughter of Milledge and Sarah B. McCall, and was born in Hinds county, Mississippi, December 18, 1836. In June, 1840, her parents removed to Grand Chenière, where they and she have ever since resided. In her seventeenth year she united with the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of which she remained a consistent member until death removed her to the church above. She was united in marriage to her now bereaved husband on the eighteenth of November, 1866, to whose care she leaves four motherless ones to share with him an irreparable loss. A dutiful daughter, an affectionate sister, a loving and beloved wife, an indulgent and doting but faithful mother, and an exemplary Christian now slumbers in the dreary chamber of the tomb. She slumbers—"not dead, but sleepeth." But from that "sleep profound" she will awake to share in the blessedness of those who "have part in the first resurrection." "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

DIED, in Sharon, Madison county, Mississippi, of congestion of the stomach, Miss BETTIE K. D., daughter of William and Anna M. Ford, in her twenty-fourth year. She was sick but a short time—about one week—and was once thought to be convalescent; but it was soon evident that she was called from earth. She herself thought, from the beginning of her sickness, that she would never recover. I called to see her the day she died, and administered the sacrament and received her into the church at her request. She had joined the church and professed religion in the year 1868, but had been led off by the fascinating amusement—dancing. On partaking of the sacrament and being received into the church, peace and joy sprang up in her heart, and she praised the Lord aloud, and sang with us the hymn "How firm a foundation"—something she had never done before, her father informed me, having had no voice for singing. From this time until her mortal tabernacle was dissolved there was no shadow of doubt. More unwavering faith it has never been my privilege to witness.

She begged her father and mother not to weep for her; thought it was best for her to go; that her dying testimony would do good; exhorted her little sister not to dance, and her brothers to live in the service of God, and all to meet her in heaven. Her mother requested her, if she became speechless, to give her a sign if all was right. This she did just before she died, leaving this last testimony that God was her strength in death.

W. S. WINGFIELD.

CHRISTIANA RAST, nee Hunkapiller, relict of Frederick Rast, deceased, was born in Orangeburg district, South Carolina, about the last of June, 1793, and died at her home in Autauga county, Alabama, of dropsy of the heart, April 29, 1873. She and her husband were both of Dutch descent, their parents having come to America in early life. She was married to Mr. Rast March 7, 1815, he having been married before, and having several children by his former marriage. Mother Rast was reared by Presbyterian parents, but never attached herself to that church. She professed religion in early life, and she and her husband joined the Methodist Church, of which they continued faithful members until death. She was a quiet, unobtrusive Christian, but none the less firm, true, faithful, persevering, patient and courageous. She loved the church devotedly, loved the Bible, and was regular in reading it, and in attending to private prayer. She was not a merely nominal member of the church, but was a genuine, thorough, living Christian. So gentle, kind, loving and patient was she that it is not known that she ever had an enemy—everybody loved her. For several years she had been having chills, and for two years had been suffering with the disease which terminated her life. This caused her at times very great suffering, but during the whole time she was never heard to utter a single murmur; her patience seemed to be perfect. She had no fear of death, but looked upon it only as the gate to endless joys. Frequently during the latter part of her sickness she would become quite happy, and rejoice in God her Savior. When the last hour came she fell asleep without a struggle or a groan. W. A. MONTGOMERY.

DIED, at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. Mayo, in Washington, St. Landry parish, Louisiana, May 8, 1873, JOHN SMITH, aged eighty-nine years and three days. He was born and reared to manhood in Pennsylvania, but moved to Louisiana when a young man, and was married to Miss Elizabeth Lee, of the parish of St. Landry, June 10, 1812. He was converted on Bayou Boeuf nearly fifty years ago, under the ministry of a preacher named Graves, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which he lived a faithful member till his death. The testimony of those who knew him for many years is that in his daily walk he was a consistent and humble Christian. The writer knew and often visited him during the three last months of his life, and he can truthfully say that he was one of the most patient and devoted Christians that he has ever known. Though unable to speak audibly for some time before his death, yet he seemed to be calmly resting in the peaceful assurance of acceptance with his God. There did not seem to be a cloud to darken his spiritual sky, or a doubt to disturb the serenity of his peace for a moment. Thus our father in Israel has peacefully passed away from the toils, sorrows and cares of this life, and, we trust, has gone from this sin-smitten earth to a brighter and better world beyond. He died at seven o'clock P. M., and his little great granddaughter, ISABELLA, daughter of Claudius and Susan Mayo, died at fifteen minutes past twelve the same night, aged four years, ten months and twenty-eight days. The friends now mourn their loss, but not without hope, for, thank God, they can by faith look beyond the sorrows of earth to the Christian's future home, and anticipate a reunion with the loved ones that have gone before on the celestial plains of eternal light.

THE OLD HOME.

BY MRS. E. M. DUTCHER.

My thoughts all wander back to-night
To days long past and gone;
To the old farm where I, a child,
Sported with laugh and song.

That dear old farm! a sunny spot—
'Twill live in memory ever;
I'll ne'er forget my childhood's home
Beside the restless river.

As memory takes me back, far back,
All other days have fled,
And I'm a little girl once more,
At play with Brother Ned!

Once more, through woods and meadows green,
We roam the long, long day;
Or 'neath the orchard's fragrant shade
We pass the hours in play.

In the old home we meet again
With loved ones, as of yore;
And the gay laugh and music sweet
Sound on the air once more.

Around the table I can see
Each well-remembered face;
They all are there—a happy group
Each in his own old place.

Those happy times! they could not last.
One calm, sweet summer's day
The golden gates were opened wide,
And father passed away!

He passed away—the gates were closed;
But 'long the path he trod
A bright and shining light was cast,
To guide us home to God.

The noble river still flows on Past that old homestead door,
But strangers stand within it now—
We'll meet there nevermore!

For times are changed—old friends are gone—
And childhood's fled forever;
But we shall all soon gather home,
Beyond the rolling river.

Short Roads to Greatness.

BY WILLIAM M. TAYLOR, D. D.

When, after having shown him all the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them," satan said unto Jesus, "All these things will I give thee if thou wilt fall down and worship me," the temptation which he offered was more insidious than is commonly supposed. The archfiend knew that the Lord had come to the world to set up a kingdom which was designed to be universal in its extent and eternal in its duration. He knew also that on the principles on which Jesus sought to establish that kingdom it would be a work of the most arduous description, involving in it much hardship and self-sacrifice. Hence he came offering a short and easy way to that which Christ on his own plan could reach only through difficulty and death. He might not, indeed, know quite what these difficulties were; but the very offer which he made would bring them all before the mind of the Messiah. "All the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them"—that was precisely what he wanted, and, with the prescient eye of his divinity, he saw that thorny path of tribulation by which alone he could reach it. There were poverty, reproach, and treachery, and desertion, the anguish of Gethsemane, and the agony of the cross, all to be endured by him before he could step up and on to his throne; and even after that there were long centuries of conflict to be passed through ere yet the world would be converted unto him and own his sway. But here the object on which his heart was set is offered him at once on the simple condition of doing homage to the adversary. The kingdom without the cross; the crown without the conflict; the goal without the race—this was the essence of the temptation which the devil's offer constituted. Of course it was at once rejected. The dark suggestion found no entrance into, much less a resting-place in the heart of Jesus; and, with one thrust of the sword of the Spirit, the enemy was repelled, as he replied: "It is written, thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve."

But the same insidious temptation is, in one form or other, repeated in the case of every man; and for the most part in the commencement of his career he has to resist the assault or own himself a captive. God's way to honor and wealth and power is still steep and arduous and rugged; and to the man who is wearifully exerting himself to overmaster its difficulties satan comes offering his short and easy road to the summit of his ambition—in how many instances, alas! with complete success! Does a man want wealth? Then, as things are now, and, indeed, as they have for the most part always been, it is a hard thing, involving many days of earnest waiting, to achieve honest success; and oftentimes in his contendings with difficulty he is tempted to say: "It is impossible for me to live and to be honest." Just then satan comes and says: "Are you seeking gold? Then fall down and worship me, and forthwith you shall have it in abundance." He yields and falls upon his knees to the devil. Then, through dishonesty and deceit and trickery and double-mindedness of every kind, so plain that men cannot but see it, and yet so cunningly contrived that it is hard to prove it, he rises by quick and rapid stages to the height of riches. But woe's me for the continuance of his prosperity. By and by his true character comes out, and men who erewhile bowed obsequiously before his gold now shun him as they would shun the plague. Amazed, he betakes himself anew to his master, and cries: "What is this? Didst thou not promise me riches and honor? And where now is the fulfillment?" "I did," is the reply; "and thou hast had all I promised, for there was no word of continuance in the bond." This is no fancy sketch. I am sure that many names must rise to the remembrance of my readers, as they peruse these lines, illustrious examples of the truth of the proverb, "Lightly come, lightly go," and showing how fleeting and evanescent the gifts of satan always are.

Years ago, when spending a summer holiday in one of the most romantic of the Western Isles of Scotland, we were accompanied by a beloved friend, who in our wanderings had the habit of leaving the beaten track and striking out for himself in search of what he called "short cuts." We followed him a few times; but invariably, before we got to the point at which he aimed, we found ourselves imbedded to the knees in some dismal peat swamp! So, warned by sad experience, we afterward allowed him to take his own course, and preferred for ourselves the well-trodden path, believing that it was well trodden just because it was the best. Now the lesson which we may learn from this particular temptation which was addressed to Christ is (I give it common phrase that it may be the better remembered) to avoid the devil's short cuts. If we take them we shall be inevitably entangled in some sluking morass, from which, if we ever emerge at all, we shall come out all covered with mud, our character and reputation gone. Let us make the words of our Lord the motto of our lives: "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve." In the observance of this rule let there come to us as much wealth and honor and power as there may; but otherwise let us have none. Be not in haste to be rich, or to be famous, or to be admired. "Make haste slowly," says the proverb—that is, make haste in God's way. Accept everything that comes to you from the hand of God; take nothing whatever as a gift from satan. Admirably was this principle acted upon by one of the best generals whom the British army ever possessed. For many long years Havelock struggled against the arbitrary character of official patronage and the odious abuses of that system of purchase which has only recently received its death-blow; and he who was at length the savior of the Indian empire was for a dreary while only a lieutenant. Yet how did he bear himself under it all? He bore himself as a Christian soldier. After the pattern of the Lord, he placed his allegiance to God uppermost, and he would not renounce that for anything that man could name. Here are his own words. Would that they might stir every reader up to emulate his integrity! "Let me ask, my good friend," says he, in one of his letters, "what is it you mean by prejudices against me? Tell me plainly. I am not aware of any. Old —— and others used to tell me that it was believed at the Horse Guards and in other quarters that I professed to fear God as well as to honor the Queen, and that Lord Hill and others had made up their minds that a man could not be at once a saint and a soldier. Now I dare say such great authorities must be right, notwithstanding the example of Colonel Gardiner and Cromwell and Gustavus Adolphus; but, if so, all I can say is that their bit of red ribbon was very ill bestowed upon me, for I humbly trust that in that great matter I should not change my opinions and practice though it rained garters and coronets as the reward of apostasy." The man who could write and act thus was already a hero, even if no other deed had been performed by him. Yet see how in the end God revealed his greatness, and how his name will be remembered and blessed long after those of the puppets who had snubbed him and the nonnies who had purchased over him are buried in deserved oblivion.

Are we prepared, each in his own sphere, to act on these principles? Is not this the question which every day is forcing itself, in one form or other, upon our attention: Shall we adopt the devil's plan and accept the devil's conditions, and so vault at once to what looks like success? Or shall we follow the example and imbibe the spirit of the Lord Jesus, and be content to wrestle with difficulties and to wait with patience until God shall crown us with what he accounts success?

Merchant, wilt thou be true to thy God, even though it should rain gold around thee to seduce thee from thy fidelity? Legislator, wilt thou, as in the sight of God, be true to thy country, though liberal largess should be offered thee to win thee from thine integrity? Judge, wilt thou administer justice with impartial hand, remembering that thou shalt thyself be judged at last, even although the magnificent fortune may be in thy immediate reach if thou wilt favor the powerful suitor? Workman, wilt thou be true to thy Savior, even although easy advancement should seem to be the reward of forsaking his ways? Minister of the gospel, wilt thou preach the preaching which thy Master bids thee, diminishing not a word through fear or flattery, even although popularity and position may appear to be the reward of thy time-serving? Are not these the questions which we have to face every day? And, as the devil is thus laying the kingdoms of the world at our feet, on the old condition that we shall worship him, what better answer can we give than that which Jesus made: "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve?"—Independent.

Hebrew Immigration.

Few things in the religious statistics of the census are of more interest than the progress of the Hebrews in the republic. They have more than doubled in numbers in the last decade. They have nearly quadrupled in twenty years. They have doubled the number of their synagogues in each decade. And in point of value they nearly trebled the account in the decade between 1850 and 1860, and nearly quintupled it in the last decade. In 1850 they counted only 18,371 members in the whole republic, and in 1870 they had 73,265. In 1850 they had but 36 synagogues, and in 1870 they had 152. In 1850 the value of their synagogues was $418,000, and in 1870 it was $5,155,234. Such progress as this speaks volumes for the attraction this country has offered this long-oppressed people. In Philadelphia they have 8 synagogues, and in New York 26. Metropolitan centers appear to be their favorite fields, and they will be found strong relatively in all the leading cities of the nation. Their advanced mercantile training makes them a valuable element of population.

It is obvious that such an increase could not have come from the natural increment of population. It must be largely the result of immigration from Europe, and the rapidity of the growth indicates that the influx is increasing. Still the numbers, as measured by this standard, are much smaller in the United States than many have supposed, as they are also smaller in England than on the continent. It is only of late years that they have been treated fairly by the press and public sentiment of America, and we see the result in their growing importance and the large investments in elegant synagogues, which no longer seek obscure places, but are to be found conspicuous and ornamental. Regarding the race as a beneficial feature in our national development, we have endeavored to encourage their immigration as fraught with great benefits to foreign and domestic trade, commerce and finance. The remarkable prosperity of the Hebrews in America will, however, do more to incite emigration from the old world than anything that can be said or written.

There can be no doubt that the activity of trade in New York is largely due to this element, the number of the synagogues telling the story unmistakably. And the same activity seems to be generated wherever they settle. They not only make business active, but they live generously, are friends and patrons of art and amusements, and surround themselves in their houses with all the elegancies of modern taste. Under such circumstances it cannot be charged that they make money only to hoard it, for, in fact, they spend their money as freely as any people do. Looking at the record of the past twenty years, we may undoubtedly expect a large increase of the Jewish immigration, chiefly from Germany and Austria, where the requirements of military service are becoming onerous to all classes alike. Only to a very limited extent do they come hither from other countries.

There are estimated to be about five millions of Hebrews in all parts of the world. Regarding them as a desirable accession to our population, the question arises as to the best method of reaching them, for a large majority of them are in countries from which none of the present immigration ever come—that is, on both sides of the Mediterranean and in the Turkish and oriental countries nearest to Palestine. They are still objects of such persecution and oppression in all these regions, as well as in Russia, Poland and parts of Austro-Hungary, that it would be an act of humanity to encourage their immigration to America, where they can be upon a perfect equality of citizenship and rights with people of all other religions.

We do not know what means can be adopted of reaching these remote Hebrews. No doubt if the emigration goes on from Germany it will gradually extend to Russia, Turkey, etc., but that must be a slow process. Every regular wave of German emigration to America carries with it the usual proportion of migratory Hebrews, and that is the most that can be said on the subject. But in the meantime the religious statistics show that the comparatively few who are here prosper remarkably, and this fact will induce the migration of relatives and friends in the old world, just as the Irish exodus has been going on. Will there be a Jewish exodus to America? Unless there should be a great social revolution in Europe we think there will.—Philadelphia American.

Tools Great Men Work With.

It is not tools that make the workman, but the trained skill and perseverance of the man himself. Indeed it is proverbial that the bad workman never had yet a good tool. Some one asked Opie by what wonderful process he mixed his colors. "I mix them with my brains, sir," was his reply. It is the same with every workman who would excel. Ferguson made marvelous things—such as his wooden clock that accurately measured the hour—by means of a common penknife; a tool in everybody's hands, but then everybody is not a Ferguson. A pan of water and two thermometers were the tools by which Dr. Black discovered latent heat; and a prism, a lens and a sheet of pasteboard enabled Newton to unfold the composition of light and the origin of colors. An eminent foreign savant once called upon Dr. Wollaston and requested to be shown over his laboratories, in which science had been enriched by so many important discoveries, when the doctor took him into a little study, and, pointing to an old tea-tray on the table containing a few watch-glasses, test-papers, a small balance, and a blow-pipe, said: "There is all the laboratory I have!" Stothard learned the art of combining colors by closely studying butterflies' wings; he would often say that no one knew what he owed to these tiny insects. A burnt stick and a barn-door served Wilkie in lieu of pencil and canvas. Bewick first practiced drawing on the cottage-walls of his native village, which he covered with his sketches in chalk; and Benjamin West made his first brushes out of the cat's tail. Ferguson laid himself down in the fields at night in a blanket, and made a map of the heavenly bodies by means of a thread with small beads on it, stretched between his eye and the stars. Franklin first robbed the thunder-cloud of its lightning by means of a kite made with two cross-sticks and a silk handkerchief. Watt made his first model of the condensing steam engine out of an old anatomist's syringe, used to inject the arteries previous to dissection. Gifford worked his first problem in mathematics, when a cobbler's apprentice, upon small scraps of leather, which he beat smooth for the purpose; while Rittenhouse, the astronomer, first calculated eclipses on his plow.

CULTIVATE an humble, willing and docile mind, or desire to be instructed in the ways of God; for persuasion enters like a sunbeam, gently and without violence. And open but the window and draw the curtain, and the sun of righteousness will enlighten your darkness.

Appearance of Schiller.

Schiller's age was forty-five years and a few months when he died. Sickness had long wasted his form, which at no time could boast of faultless symmetry. He was tall and strongly-boned, but unmuscular and lean; his body, it might be perceived, was wasting under the energy of a spirit too keen for it. His face was pale, the cheeks and temples rather hollow, the chin somewhat deep and slightly projecting, the nose irregularly aquiline, his hair inclined to auburn. What his countenance was attractive, and had a certain manly beauty. The lips were curved together in a line expressing delicate and honest sensibility; a silent enthusiasm, impetuosity not unchecked by melancholy, gleamed in his softly-kindled eyes and pale cheeks, and the brow was high and thoughtful. To judge from his portraits, Schiller's face expressed well the features of his mind; it is mildness tempering strength; fiery ardor shining through the clouds of suffering and disappointment, deep but patiently endured. Pale was its proper tint; the cheeks and temples were best hollow. There are few faces that affect us more than Schiller's; it is at once meek, tender, unpretending and heroic.

In his dress and manner, as in all things, he was plain and unaffected. Among strangers something shy and retiring might occasionally be observed in him; in his own family or among his select friends he was kind-hearted, free, and gay as a little child. In public his external appearance had nothing in it to strike or attract. Of an unpresuming aspect, wearing plain apparel, his looks as he walked were constantly bent on the ground; so that frequently, as we are told, he failed to notice the salutation of a passing acquaintance; but if he heard it he would catch hastily at his hat and give his cordial "Guten Tag." Modesty, simplicity, a total want of all parade or affectation were conspicuous in him. These are the usual concomitants of true greatness, and serve to mitigate its splendor. Common things he did as a common man. His conduct in such matters was uncalculated, spontaneous, and therefore natural and pleasing.—Carlyle's Life of Schiller.

THE WIFE.—Only let a woman know she is precious to her husband, not useful, not valuable, not convenient simply, but lovely and beloved; let her be the recipient of his polite and hearty attention; let her feel that her cares and love are noted, appreciated and returned; let her opinion be asked, her approval sought, and her judgment respected in matters of which she is cognizant; in short, let her only be loved, honored and cherished in fulfillment of the marriage vow, and she will be to her husband, her children and society a well-spring of happiness. She will bear pain and toil and anxiety, for her husband's love to her is a tower and fortress. Shielded and sheltered therein, adversity will have lost its sting. She may suffer, but sympathy will dull the edge of sorrow.

A house with love in it—and by love I mean love expressed in words and looks and deeds, for I have not a spark of faith in love that never crops out—is to a house without love as a person to a machine: one is life, the other is mechanism; the unloved woman may have breath just as light, a house just as tidy as the other, but the latter has a spring of beauty about her, a joyousness, a penetrating brightness to which the former is an entire stranger. The deep happiness to her heart shines out in her face. She gleams over. She is airy and graceful, and welcome and warm with her presence; she is full of devices and plots and sweet surprises for her husband and family. She has never done with the romance and poetry of life. She herself is a lyric poem, sitting herself to all pure and gracious melodies. Humble household duties and ways have for her a golden significance. The prize makes her calling higher; and the end sanctifies the means. "Love is Heaven, and Heaven is love."

MODERN ISCARIOTS.—We do great injustice to Iscariot in thinking him wicked above all wickedness. He was only a money-lover; did not understand Christ; could not make out the worth of him. He did not want him to be killed. He was horror-struck when he found that Christ would be killed, threw his money away instantly and hanged himself. How many of our present money seekers, think you, would have the grace to hang themselves whenever they killed? But Judas was a common, selfish, muddle-headed fellow, his hand always in the bag of the poor, not caring for them. He didn't understand Christ, yet he believed in him much more than most of us do: had seen him do miracles, thought he was strong enough to shift for himself, and he might as well make his own by-perquisites out of the affair; Christ would come out of it well enough, and he have thirty pieces.

Now that is the money-seeker's idea all over the world. He does not hate Christ, but he can't understand him; he does not care for him, sees no good in that benevolent business, but takes his own "little job" of it at all events, come what may. And thus, out of every class of men, you have a certain amount of bagmen, men whose main object is to make money, and they do make it in all sorts of unfair ways, chiefly by weight and force of money itself, or what is called capital—that is to say, the power which money once obtained has over the labors of the poor, so that the capitalist can take all the produce to himself except the laborer's feed. This is the modern Judas' way of "carrying the bag" and bearing what is put therein.—Ruskin.

LOWLINESS of mind is not a flower that grows in a field of nature, but is planted by the finger of God in a renewed heart, and learned of the lowly Jesus.

OIL and truth will get uppermost at the last.

Religious Intelligence.

THE Presbyterian Church of Great Britain is to establish a mission in Japan, and is raising funds for the purpose.

THERE are 27 Baptist churches among the Creeks and Seminoles, with 28 native preachers and 2,000 members. Their converts manifest a high type of piety.

ANOTHER life of Jesus is put forth in Germany, this time by Dr. Keim, a professor at Giessen University. The book attracts much attention in theological circles abroad.

TWO MEMBERS of the Canadian Wesleyan Conference have just left to establish a mission in Japan. Revs. A. Strittmater and S. D. Harris left New York, May 19, for our mission in China.

A COMMITTEE of Boston ladies recently examined about 5,000 volumes in several Sunday school libraries, and came to the conclusion that about four-fifths ought not to be in the libraries.

BY A LAW of the State of Pennsylvania, passed at the last session of the Legislature, "all parsonages owned by any church or religious society, with the lands attached thereto, not exceeding five acres," are exempted from taxation.

OF ALL THE churches gathered in Boston prior to the year 1700, the King's chapel is the only one whose place of worship is on the original site. Some of the early Boston churches have moved three or four times, to suit the convenience of worshipers.

THE organic union of the various presbyteries of British America is now assured. The committees, which met at St. John, New Brunswick, have agreed upon terms of union, and nothing remains but the ratification of their work by the several assemblies.

THE Presbyterians are represented in Canada by four branches which have now succeeded, through a joint committee, in adopting a basis of union which will doubtless be ratified by the several General Assemblies, and the union become an accomplished fact.

A REGULAR Presbyterian service will be maintained in Vienna, during the Exposition, at No. 11 Esthenbach strasse. Clergymen of the Church of Scotland will conduct the afternoon services, at three P. M.; and Rev. Dr. Moore, a minister of the Irish Church, will officiate in the morning.

THE Sunday school cause, heretofore discountenanced, is gaining ground and friends in Germany. At a recent meeting of the interested in this cause, assembled at Darmstadt, 25 ladies were present, among them the Princess Elizabeth, mother-in-law of the Princess Alice, of England.

AT THE New England Conference, recently held in Lynn, Massachusetts, an attempt was made to establish a free Methodist church in Boston of the largest size, in which the term of the pastor's service should be limited to his usefulness. It was considered an innovation, and the proposition was tabled.

THE London Missionary Society has a most prosperous mission on the Island of Amoy, on the lower portion of the coast of China, with a population of 300,000. The mission has 26 out-stations, at each of which there is preaching regularly by native evangelists. The native church is very strong, and increasing rapidly. Christianity is triumphing here greatly.

THE General Assembly of the United Presbyterian Church, in session in Philadelphia, does not look with favor on the Evangelical Alliance. On June 3 the Committee on Union reported that, "while cherishing a kind and Christian regard to all evangelical churches, yet the Assembly does not deem it expedient or important that it make any appointment of delegates and representatives to attend a meeting of the Alliance to be held in New York city in October."

THE Scandinavians are moving in a body in New York to see that hereafter there shall be as much attention and care bestowed upon their countrymen coming into the port of New York as are bestowed upon other nationalities. For many years Pastor Hedstrom has labored to secure this end. An amount of obligation has been incurred and toil endured by this Christian pastor for these immigrants, through twenty five years past, which have been unequaled by any other individual.

THE General Assembly of the United Presbyterian Church closed their session at Philadelphia on the fourth, and adjourned to meet at Monmouth, Illinois, on the last Wednesday in May next. The report of the Committee on Statistics shows the following: Synods, 8; presbyteries, 56; ministers, 591; congregations organized during the year, 23; costly houses of worship reported, $133,050; members, 73,452; Sunday school scholars, 47,507; total contributions, $873,078.

THE Wesleyan Missionary Society held its annual meeting in Exeter Hall, London, on the fourth of May, and it was a meeting of extraordinary interest, continuing several hours, the interest continuing during the whole time. Mr. Spurgeon preached in Great Queen Street chapel, a sermon of great power and of wonderful effect. The society was never in a better state. Its receipts have increased £115,910, 12*s.* 4*d.*—larger than ever before. All of its missions were doing a great work, and were fully meeting the expectations of its friends.

THE total receipts of the American Baptist Home Missionary Society were $246,593.44; its expenditures, $245,733.99. Three hundred and thirty-seven ministers were supported in the Northern department, of whom 167 labored west of the Mississippi river, and 32 are beyond the Rocky mountains. They reported 2,117 baptisms, 25,538 Sunday school scholars, and $11,146.37 contributions from churches assisted. The number of missionaries supported in the Southern States and Mexico were 103; churches organized, 41; baptisms, 2,977; freedmen students under instruction, between 700 and 800. The church department fund was increased about $100,000. It had the care of funds, already in possession, amounting to over $200,000, and in the hands of more than 200 churches in 26 States and Territories, and had given loans during the year to 90 churches. The special attention of the society was directed to the French-speaking population, who are immigrating to this country from Canada. They do not take well to the Irish priests they find here, and seem to offer a promising opening to Protestant effort. Measures were taken to look after them more carefully. There appears to have been a hitch in the workings of the society, arising out of the complications of its departments. A paper was adopted defining more fully its objects, and prescribing the manner of appropriating undesignated gifts. A committee was appointed also to look after the expenses of management.

AT THE late anniversary of the Baptist Missionary Society (English) Rev. Thomas Evans, of Allahabad, speaking of the methods of work in India and of the difficulties and defects of missionary operations there, and alluding to the smallness of their missionary force, stated it as his conviction that one-half of the people of India had never as yet heard the gospel preached. With an average of nearly a half million of natives to one missionary, it could hardly be otherwise, even if every available missionary had been engaged in preaching. But of this staff of preachers, utterly inadequate to the wants of the country, many are engaged in necessary literary work, in translating the Scriptures and in giving a Christian literature to the natives, and still more are engaged in teaching, so that the preaching force is greatly weakened. At the late Allahabad Conference there was much warm discussion of the question whether it was right for missionaries to devote so much time to the education of the natives and so little to vernacular preaching; and, while the parties for and against were pretty equally divided, it was, says Mr. Evans, a curious fact that, while most of the younger missionaries were in favor of preaching exclusively, most of the elder missionaries advocated education. After the Conference Mr. Evans endeavored to gather some statistics on this question from various missionaries, and reports that "the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel had in India 41 European missionaries, all of whom are engaged in educational work, and a few of them only do anything in the way of vernacular preaching to the heathen. The Church Mission Society has 102 European missionaries, and fully two-thirds of that number are engaged in colleges and schools. Some are engaged in bazar preaching, as well as teaching in schools; but very few, indeed, are wholly given to vernacular preaching. In the presidency of Bengal alone there are 52 European missionaries in connection with the Church Mission Society; and only seven of the 52, I learned, are entirely engaged in bazar preaching and itineration. The London Missionary Society has 44 missionaries in India, more than one-half chiefly engaged in educational work. The Free Church of Scotland has 19 European missionaries in India; and, as far as I could ascertain, not one of them is fully engaged in vernacular preaching.—The missionaries of the Established Church of Scotland are entirely engaged in education. The Wesleyan Missionary Society has 22 European missionaries in India. None of their men in Bengal are engaged in vernacular preaching, and a majority of those in Madras are occupied in educational work. With the exception of the Orissa mission, the several American societies present a similar array of statistics. Our own society has 29 missionaries in India, only four of whom are engaged in educational work, and three of these preach occasionally in the vernacular, as well as teach in English. The Continental societies follow the same path, having a few vernacular schools taught by native Christian teachers, while the European missionaries give nearly all their time to the preaching of the word. The conclusion of the whole matter is this: of the 488 foreign missionaries in India one-half are fully engaged in educational work, two-thirds chiefly so occupied, while only one-third are entirely free for the simple preaching of the gospel to the masses of the people." Mr. Evans, while not inclined to undervalue the importance of this educational work as a means of propagating Christianity, presented in a forcible way the reasons which have led him to think that undue prominence has been given to it. "Many years ago, when there were but few government schools, the missionaries could introduce a great deal of Christian teaching; but now they cannot. Most of the larger missionary schools and colleges receive government aid, and are therefore subject to government control. The course of study is prescribed by government, and they are obliged to give almost undivided attention to secular subjects. The pupils do not care for the study of the Bible, and the missionaries dare not press it on them, as such a course would soon empty their schools. Many of the missionaries are so fully occupied with teaching in English that they are obliged to neglect the acquisition of the native languages, and hence are unable to preach in the vernacular, even if their other duties would permit. Mr. Evans said, in conclusion: "If we must have schools and colleges, let them be for the children of our native Christians only, who sadly need them; and, as the government of India has taken up the question of education in right good earnest and is establishing schools all over the country, let it do this work, aided, as it is, by the noble efforts of the Christian Vernacular Education Society, and let the missionaries give themselves wholly to the preaching of the word." This question in regard to the wisdom of the present methods of missionary labor in India is of vital importance, and certainly deserves a thorough discussion.—Independent.

Hating Evil.

It is, to say the least of it, rather a singular conjunction of ideas which we find in the Bible where, as in one of the Psalms, it is written: "Ye that love the Lord hate evil;" and, as in a text of the Romans, believers are exhorted to "abhor that which is evil." We can understand how it behooves all men to forsake evil practices, and especially that professors of religion should be consistent by departing from iniquity. There is no true repentance until sin is confessed and given up, and there can be no safety to the Christian who does not constantly study to depart from iniquity, and to avoid all appearance of evil. But why is it that those who love the Lord should be exhorted to hate evil, and that those who are well advanced in religious experience should abhor it? Dr. Arnold, of Rugby, meant something, after all, when he expressed the wish that the young gentlemen under his care should not only love God, but that they should also hate the devil. In general we may suppose that the hatred of evil is connected with the love of God and all goodness, but it may be in an inferior degree. Then, again, the hatred of evil may assist us in ascertaining the genuineness and depth of our love for God. It is doubtful whether we can love the Lord and not hate evil; and it is doubtful whether any believing soul can maintain communion with God and not abhor that which is evil.

Still the hate aspect of religion is prominent in Scripture, and the lovers of the Lord are straitly enjoined to hate evil. We might suppose that this conscious and supreme hatred of sin in all of its forms to be only the negative side of holiness, and the test of a legal rather than of an evangelical experience. But such cannot be the case, inasmuch as it is the lovers of the Lord who are reminded of their business to hate evil, and the apostle appeals to Christians in the midst of the highest privileges and attainments in the life of faith, that they abhor that which is evil. So essential an element is it that Inspiration affirms that "the fear of the Lord is to hate evil." Practically men are to "hate the evil and love the good," and the strongest assertion of fidelity—the means by which the psalmist clears himself of unfaithfulness—is in the hate which he bears to every sort of unrighteousness. "I hate the work of them that turn aside." "I hate every false way." "I hate and abhor lying." We are carried up to the very temper and heart of the eternal Son himself in that description of his majesty and grace wherein it is said: "Thou lovest righteousness and hatest wickedness." This hatred of evil in God is exhibited prominently. He hates putting away, he hates robbery for a burnt offering, he hates idolatry. "For all these are things that I hate, saith the Lord." God is himself a hater as well as a lover, and the hatred of sin in us is after his own mind and in his own likeness.

It is surely something significant that hate is so prominently presented, and that it is enjoined upon those who are supposed to love. It is a good test of our love to see whether hatred of evil is in us, and to inquire whether we hate the devil and all false ways as heartily as we profess to love the Lord. There is a partial and one-sided religious development—a talk exclusively of love, and very sincere perhaps—a continual appeal to this one phase of consciousness and experience, while little is thought or felt or said in reference to evil. It might be well to bring up this side of the balance, and to restore the element which has been too much put aside. The tendency of modern religious thought, especially in the broad and liberal schools, has been to divest God of this hatred of evil, and a corresponding calamity follows in the banishment of the hate of sin from religious convictions and experience. The love taught, and that which is supposed to be felt, is an indifference to evil, and relaxes the sense of human guilt and accountability. It is a false God and a false experience, the offspring of which is immorality and vice. No matter how much a man may think and profess of love for God and all pure and glorious objects, his is a defective if not a deluded religion unless it has this abhorrence of everything that is bad. If in his piety there is not a perfect hatred of all wickedness, he is practicing upon himself a dangerous deception, and is standing in slippery places.

Are there not Christians who are toying with avarice, who are tolerant of libidinous pictures in the chambers of imagery, who are at least complacent rather than shocked at the thought of selfish and envious purposes? Men may be restrained from vice by the fear of retribution, or by the checks of conscience and public opinion, but they do not hate it. Even converted people, loving and professing love to God and their fellow-men, may not be as sensitive to common and popular sins as they should be, and they may have lost that true and fearful conception of sin which the Bible teaches. It is very much, therefore, to hate evil, and much in those that love the Lord to hate it—to hate it under all circumstances, in all its aspects and in all its shapes; to hate it as gilded and worshiped in fashion, as honored in the successful villainies of business and as pursued and panegyrized by the devotees of pleasure; and to hate it whether in others or in ourselves, in our own tempers and lusts, or in the vices of those who surround us.

We point to this subject as indicating a serious defect in the religious doctrine and experience of the day. Love of God and love of the good is but one of the poles of truth and piety; hatred of evil is the other. These are too often divorced, and while love is exalted and distorted, hatred of sin fades more and more from devotional thought. The result is abounding iniquity, a weak and false preaching, and a religious experience which is inferior to the baldest morality. Instead of hating evil professors of Christ are compromising with it, running into it and winking at it. Most adroitly is the devil managing the matter. Talk of love as much as you please, profess it, love God—the devil does not care so long as you do not hate him. To preach against sin, to overcome it in ourselves and triumph over it in the world, we must hate it. It was to establish the true equipoise in our piety, and to guard against a danger never more apparent than now, that we have the inspired warnings: "Ye that love the Lord hate evil," and "Abhor that which is evil." With our love must be this hate—a hate strong, persistent and unswerving, a hate that cannot be overcome by the allurements, the blandishments of a false and shallow theology, nor bought and silenced by the deceitfulness and the artful snares of sin. There is a gospel of hate as well as of love. A good Christian is also a good and desperate hater.

Many Collections.

The more the better, we have always thought, and this we believe is the opinion of the most experienced and generous observers among the laity. Collections are good, good in themselves, and public collections. Let all the people have a chance to do their duty, and let them be instructed in the principle of giving, and informed with reference to the objects. Some there are who take offense at collections, and it will be so until the people are educated and developed in the true spirit and methods of giving. Covetousness as a form of inbred sin, and as a manifestation of hypocrisy, and oftentimes of ignorance, is hard to kill. Let us have the collections, if for nothing else, as a means of manifesting, and, if need be, of weeding out the chaff. If the people do not stand fire at first, they will become seasoned veterans after awhile, and be glad to have the post of honor in the very fore-front of the battle.

It is time the prejudice against public collections, which, we are sorry to see, exists in a considerable degree throughout the church, were done away. The cause of it is in the underlying covetousness of human nature, but it has been countenanced and strengthened by a temporizing and timid method. It is always best to do right, and to insist upon the gospel standard of duty. Some for a time may be offended, some useless elements and dead weights may be thrown off, but after awhile the church will come up to the mark, and there will be a large gain both spiritually and financially. We are not sure but our preachers are often to blame. They have been perhaps much too sensitive and timorous, shrinking from the discharge of their own duty, or performing it in an apologetic manner. A few stingy souls are allowed to deter the pastor from presenting the objects to which the congregation should contribute. It is thought that the collection will keep the people from attending, that this call for money will prejudice them against the church and religion, and that some members, often the richest, will take mortal offense. Covetousness is always playing the bully, and browbeating and opposing all generous devisings, and especially does it cry out against public collections.

Many churches are almost dead—dying of a species of dry rot—because of this fearful aspect of avarice. The older members have not been accustomed to giving, the young people are not instructed, and it has come to pass that collections, instead of being regarded as a privilege and a blessing, are looked upon as an evil. The cure is to take the collections, to explain their objects, and to insist upon the absolute necessity of giving often and of giving much.

On this subject we append an extract from the Northwestern Christian Advocate. It will be seen that the Methodist Episcopal Church has in fact eight stated public collections, while we are disposed to grumble at three or four. The Northwestern says:

We are not talking about what you pay your pastor or for local church support. Those sums are no more benevolences than are your taxes, car-fare or food and clothing bills. For twenty earthly reasons—to say nothing of the heavenly—you have entered into a contract to support your local church, and you are no more entitled to praise for such payments than is your pastor for doing his part of the contract. We are inclined to believe that a Christian's real benevolence does not begin until after he has paid in all of his first ten per cent. of income. The first tithe paid in is bounden, contracted duty; the second and later tenths are benevolences in the proper sense. That first tenth is for your own convenience and blessing; later ones are for others, and their prompt payment brings a blessing brighter than even receiving does.

The Methodist and all genuine churches continue to increase the number of new collections, and the amounts to be paid on the occasion of each old one. That is right. The Lord's capital is well invested, and when he adds his blessing of increased incomes, the divine treasury must, in common honesty, be commensurately enriched. On mere human principles of business it could not be otherwise.

The Methodist Discipline provides for seven kinds of annual collections, and pastors are expected to report something for each when they go to Conference. They are in disciplinary order: 1. Conference claimants. 2. Missions. 3. Tracts. 4. Sunday schools. 5. Church extension. 6. Freedmen. 7. Education. We do not include the collection for support of the Bishops, for that is not benevolence.

Missionary Tour.

BY BISHOP KEENER.

Steamer Harlan, Gulf, June 25.

Mr. Editor: During the past month I have had opportunity to see a good deal of Texas. The reports which have often reached us of its being drought have not been verified by the weather. Indeed, if I might judge by these few weeks past, I should say Texas is the rainiest region I know of. These rains have impressed me because they have cost the Missionary Society, during this time, not less than $1,000.

"On what a slender thread Hang everlasting things,"

It would have been well if missions were held responsible only for the weather; but, would you believe it? the Red river raft, which is a chronic ailment, has been charged up, in a measure, to this same innocent party. The raft is about being cut, and when cut may leave a country high and dry hitherto accessible to steamers; therefore these regions cannot do as much as otherwise they might for the conversion of the heathen! Now that is going a long way off to find a reason for the absence of hope. Meanwhile the crops look splendid—the corn as good as need be, and the cotton wherever clean. All through east Texas both corn and cotton were very promising. I have yet to believe that there can be too much rain for Texas. Should the rains now laid up there will be an immense crop made. It may be laid down as a rule that at some point in the history of every crop the farmer has had a long face. That face is not the least part of the crop. It regulates the market. I am sorry that it should ever have any effect upon the income of our Missionary Society. If men have not faith in a wet season, how will it be in a dry?

These remarks must be taken with discrimination, for some churches have responded without regard to the clouds.

I never expected to see what I have seen both in Tennessee and Texas—that is, official members getting out of the way upon the announcement of a missionary meeting; in several instances scarcely one to be seen. How can the church of Christ prosper with such a timid race in the van? The poor little paltry sum of $100, which with some of them would feebly express their individual obligation to send into the dark places of earth the gospel of God, is swollen by the mist of the atmosphere of the enemy into proportions the most appalling, and all sense of duty is forgotten in the general alarm. Now such men ought either to resign or be resigned as standard-bearers of the church militant.

I am glad to say that the people, even when forsaken of their leaders, have in not a few instances done well; and they give indications of a better state of things. The Sunday schools are displaying a new zeal and a new measure in their estimate of this noble cause. The dear children are the hope of all new eras. They first publicly hailed Christ as Jehovah, and their hearts, tuned and touched by the Spirit of inspiration, were first in harmony with the prophetic numbers of David that long before announced the King. If they may be but organized, so that they can be employed fairly in this purest of all work, we shall soon see it prosper gloriously.

Besides missionary collections and meetings, other matters of interest came to my notice during the trip. For instance, the parsonage at Shreveport is a very creditable achievement both to preacher and people. The city itself is growing apace. So, too, is Marshall. We had there a pleasant district meeting. The brethren are determined to rid the church, if possible, of its incubus of drunkards and dram-sellers—a healthy sign. Another growing trouble in the land is in the Swedenborgians, who have been directed by their General Assembly to stick to every orthodox church so long as the church will allow them. Our preachers ought to feel no delicacy in dealing promptly with such indelicate people, who, denying the Trinity and the atonement, persist in afflicting their hooks, their views and themselves upon the unwary. Then we have a dreadful race of spirit-rappers, who are on the high road to infidelity and mania, scattered about, who should be warned, visited and expelled unless the reformation be immediate and complete. That, too, claims to be a species of religion, and as such, not to say worse things of it, should be expelled from our church. The preacher should take steps, according to the Discipline, for unchristian conduct. Necromancy (the consulting the dead) is set forth as a vice throughout the Scriptures, from Exodus to Revelation. Saul was slain for it. The question as to the truth or the falsehood of the vision did not save the King from the sentence of death. The sin was in the consulting.

At Chappell Hill I found Rev. E. D. Pitts at the head of the female college, which has been newly built and is all paid for. It has in attendance a fine body of young ladies. The school is prosperous; its influences are all decidedly Methodistic, its discipline admirable and its scholarship excellent. I was sorry that I could not remain until the close of the commencement.

The trustees of the Soule University are repairing the building. It is now out of debt. A school has been taught there during the year, and it will be presently fully opened to teach young men Latin, Greek and mathematics as far as they can be advanced at the very best high schools in the State.

The society and Sunday school here were liberal to Mexico. The school had already sent $50 to the treasurer at Nashville for that mission.

The country lying all around Chappell Hill and Brenham is the most fertile and picturesque I have seen in the State. The lands are held at good prices. A good many Germans have found homes there, and are making themselves slowly but surely a wealthy class of farmers.

Houston is thrifty. Her lines of railroad run out like a spider's web. The Germans there gave Mexico a good benefit. Bro. Pauly is training his church, after the gospel style, to be a liberal people, and he says that they are all getting rich at it. Several wealthy members have adopted the tithe system. They give the Lord one-tenth of their income as it comes in. Would that we had one such church in every county, by way of example!

In Galveston I took up no collection—have reserved it until just before leaving for Vera Cruz. But there I saw St. James church—built through the indomitable will and zeal of Bro. Ayers, backed by his own and others' liberality. Its school-room is a finer one than that of the Mount Vernon church of Baltimore. I hope that the "old disciple" will live to see this church finished, and then he will die in peace. Dr. Alexander is stationed here and is doing good work.

Of the whole this is the sum:

|---|---|
| In subscriptions and cash for Mexican mission at | |
| Jefferson | $76 50 |
| Marshall | 201 00 |
| Shreveport | 86 00 |
| Houston, of the Germans | 180 00 |
| Houston, of the Americans | 114 50 |
| Brenham | 76 40 |
| Chappell Hill | 231 20 |
| Total | $971 60 |

A good deal of this is in the hands of the preachers in charge, in the shape of promissory cards, which they will please keep in mind, collect and forward to me at an early day.

Letter from Rev. Lovick Pierce, D D.

My Dear Brethren of Felicity Street Church Sunday School and Missionary Society, New Orleans:

I have been frequently surprised at unexpected evidences of affection for me, but never more than yesterday, when, on arriving here, I received your letter of May 2 and the certificate of my life membership in this model missionary Sunday school society. Nor was I ever more gratified. At this time of life, when old men like myself are looked upon as a thing worn out and to be laid aside, as a matter of course to receive such a token of love, and receive it from a set of Sunday school children just bursting into life like rose-buds in spring—when rude, untutored children in many places would look upon me as a chronic burden upon their mirthful joys—is doubly pleasant. I have no doubt it will be well for you children to grow up deeply imbued with the belief that a hoary head is a crown of glory, if it be found in the way of righteousness, and only in the way of righteousness. Ask your children whether they voted me this life membership because I am in my eighty-sixth year or because I am living in the way of righteousness? Reflections of this kind become a germ of religious life in many children. Tell them I have been in the church seventy-two years; been preaching sixty-seven years, and so far into the sixty-eighth. Therefore my hoary head is now a crown of righteousness. But suppose I had lived in sin all this time—how abhorred must my name have been! I should have been now one of the miserable old sinners Solomon alludes to, who have lived on until too old to enjoy natural life, and too wicked to have any moral and spiritual comfort. Their funeral dirge is: "I have no pleasure in them."

Tell the children I am delighted at the honor done me in being made a life member of a Sunday school missionary society. I will put it into a handsome frame. And if it was not so hot I would come to New Orleans just to see them; but, as it is, I can promise to pray for them. I want them to pray for me—to pray that the long day of my mortal life may end in the beauty and brightness of a calm summer evening. God hears all prayers that are offered in humble obedience; but I have always felt as if God especially loved to hear children pray when they love him.

I have been a Sunday school agent—have had a great deal to do with Sunday school children. I love them. A Sunday school, properly managed, is offering up our first fruits to the Lord in a way to insure his blessing upon all the future harvest. There must come a time when all will know the Lord—must come, because unerring prophecy says so. I see not how this time can ever come only by Sabbath school instruction and Sabbath school conversions. God's great universal family will have to be raised up. The world can never be saved in old age, after it is corrupted in youth. To make ready a people prepared for the Lord is the appropriate work of Sunday school indoctrinations; and it can be done. To this work I beg to call your attention as superintendent, and the attention of all your teachers. Keep your children's minds right on the subject of regeneration. Never let them even dream of any other idea of religion but the new-creature idea, which is the new-creation idea. Children must be removed, as far as there is any land to stand upon, from all the ensnaring evils of a grand ritualism. This is satan's game-card in his gambling for souls. Herein our pure form of Wesleyan religion will lose its salt and saving efficacy, if it ever utterly fails, in a form of godliness, without its power. We are tending that way all the time. Sunday schools can forestall it.

But there is no end to this thread of my mind's spinning. I will close with a brief address to the children of Felicity Sunday School Missionary Society:

Dear children, you are doing just what Christ meant when he said: "But lay up for yourselves treasure in heaven." The money you are sending to China, to aid in Sunday school benefits there, is treasure laid up in heaven, if you are doing it with pure, Christ-like love. You deny yourselves of the selfish indulgences of which unchristian children will partake. You cultivate that Christ-like love of others which makes itself poor that they may be made rich, not in money, but in saving grace. In a word, my dear children, give your money in honor of Christ, who gave his life for you, and not for the honor of your Sunday School Missionary Society. Your honor will drive from you Christ-like motives. And now, my dear Sunday school missionary children, let us love one another, for God is love. Affectionately yours,

L. Pierce.

A Word to the Louisiana Preachers on Missions.

Dear Brethren: It is in the fall season that most of our District Conferences, camp meetings and missionary collections take place; and, in advance of some, let me make one or two suggestions. You are aware that our whole church—from Baltimore to Brownsville, from Charleston to San Francisco—is being quickened with new zeal in the cause of missions. Liberal things, you know, were devised at the last annual meeting of the Board of Missions—new tracts of Immanuel's mint were taken in, and large appropriations made for the immediate sowing of the seed of the word of God therein. Therefore ordinary collections for missions will not suffice for the increased demands upon us this year. A very great advance upon former contributions will be needed. Now is the time to prepare to meet these demands, and to lay our plans, and to fix the mark toward which we shall work in this matter. It will never do for Louisiana Methodism to fall short of her full proportion of the missionary estimate. The honor is ours of starting the mission in Mexico, the doing of, which has so sprung the whole church to renewed activity in the great missionary cause. Let us now hold our advanced position as a Conference by contributing more liberally than ever to the success of the same. Let us come up grandly to the help of the missionary treasury this year. Let us do more in this cause than we ever did before—let us put forth more effort to awaken and arouse the Methodists of Louisiana to their duties and their privileges in this matter. Let none of us rest satisfied until our hands are filled with plenty for our missions and missionaries. To this end let me suggest that the subject of missions be well agitated among the laity during the session of each of our District Conferences, and that a sermon on the duty and privilege of supporting missions be preached at the Sunday morning service of every District, Conference and camp meeting within our bounds this fall, taking up a collection at the same time. Times of religious fervor should be times of liberal giving to prosper the work of Christ among men. Further, let every one of our preachers make it his aim to obtain at least $1 for missions from each member of his charge. By all means let the stewards attend to the collecting of what is needed for ministerial support, but let each preacher, as in the case of Paul, attend to the work of collecting for missions. Let us, in connection with our pastoral visits, make a personal application to every member, once a year, for missions; and I have no doubt the result would quadruple the old system of congregational collections.

Brethren, what district and which charge shall rank first among us this year in the Macedonian grace? The "cloud of witnesses" will look eagerly for the answer in the Minutes of the twenty-eighth session of the Louisiana Conference.

John Wilkinson,
Sec. Board of Missions, La. Conf.

Shreveport, La., June 21, 1873.

To Contributors.—We are made to groan under the occasional reception of long articles and serials. We do not like them, but sometimes put them in. Some subjects may require a series, but in that case each number should be exceedingly short. Ordinarily from one to four letter pages is long enough. Beyond four pages foolscap is absolutely unreasonable. Sometimes we receive an obituary signed "A Friend," and other communications without the name of the writer. These will not appear until the name and address are given.

We call attention to the advertisement of that old and excellent college, Emory and Henry, most delightfully located in Washington county, Virginia, and presided over by President Wiley, than whom there are no more experienced or better qualified educators in the whole land. Boys who do not go to Greensboro or Centenary or Homer may go there. We expect it is equal to any of our Southern colleges, and the climate makes it a desirable place for boys who require a bracing atmosphere.

Prefer loss before unjust gain, for that brings grief but once, this forever.

Christianity in Japan.

Scarcely a week passes without our surprise being excited afresh over the wonderful approaches of Japan toward our religion and civilization. When Mr. de Mori, the late embassador from that country to our government, publicly advocated the introduction of the English language as the tongue for the population and the court, we were greatly amazed, for the language is next to the faith of a people in its hold upon their attachments and prejudices. But we are just now in receipt of direct information from Japan which throws even that gentleman's proposition in the shade as an innovation upon the life of the citizens. An article has appeared from a native author in one of the native papers, the Minato Shimbun, under the head of the "Christian Religion," in which there is a full and impartial description of all the religions which have become national in Japan. They are shown to fail in adaptation to the great wants of the mind, and to have certain defects which it is impossible to remedy. He then passes to the Christian religion, and refers to the attempts now made by its adherents to introduce it into the country. Whether it should be resisted or accepted is a question which he handles with much dexterity and vigor. The reader is not long at a loss to know which side he takes. He soon adopts the affirmative, and gives his reasons. The entire paper is a marvel; and, that our readers may judge its scope and quaint style, we give its close:

"In various countries of the West there is the system of worship of the Lord of heaven, which forbids the worship of idols of wood or stone.

"It teaches that which is of daily use to men, and the tendency is toward an increasingly careful observance of its precepts. Its teachers, in proclaiming its doctrines, teach what is for the benefit of all, and thus, slieneing a narrow spirit, they incite to a broader and better, which teaching is the secret of the civilization of the West.

"Since the government of the Tenno has been renovated, the time has come for the abandonment of evil habits. A religion there must be, but if Shintoism is proposed we know not how to teach it. If Confucianism or Buddhism, these will not do.

"If, therefore, despising the foolish charge of changing the national customs and of defiling the country, the religion of Jesus be introduced, it will be well for the people. Nor will such a course involve anything incompatible with the customs of the country or true reverence for our ancestry. If this religion should be tolerated, it would spread like a fire in the dry grass of the plain when lighted at a hundred points. Should some who hate this religion break out in rebellion, this, by the thoughtfulness of the followers of the new religion, might be easily subdued."

Wesleyan Methodist Conference in Canada.

The fiftieth annual session of this body opened in London, Ontario, on Wednesday, June 4, under the presidency of Rev. S. D. Rice, with Rev. E. B. Harper as co-delegate. Dr. Rice and Mr. Harper were both cordially greeted. The gratifying announcement was made that during the year there had been a net advance in membership of 1,087.

During the third day's proceedings resolutions highly complimentary to Dr. Punshon, and appreciative of his five years' service as president of the Conference, were adopted.

Rev. W. Scott read the report of the Jubilee Committee, which though not complete, inasmuch as the committee is to meet again and make still further arrangements, still the following items, taken from the report, will be interesting to our readers. During the months of September and October of the present year the jubilee of the Wesleyan Methodist Church in Canada is to be celebrated. That the objects aimed at in the celebration shall be spiritual and financial, the free-will offerings presented shall be applied for the benefit of superannuated ministers and the theological education of probationers, and the erection of suitable missionary premises in Toronto. Deputations shall be sent into the different sections of the country to assist in holding public meetings. A jubilee volume shall be prepared as a memorial of the goodness of God toward the church during these fifty years.

Rev. Dr. Ryerson read a paper relating to the Centennial Conference which is to be held in Philadelphia in July next. Sabbath, July 13, is to be observed in all the Methodist churches on the American continent as the day of celebrating the centenary of Methodism, and the three following days the Conference will be held in the same church as the first Methodist Conference was held one hundred years ago.

On motion of Rev. R. Jones, seconded by Rev. J. Elliott, the Conference resolved to take part in these centennial celebrations, and appointed Dr. Ryerson as our representative to the said Conference. A committee was also to be appointed which shall prepare an address to the said Conference, and consider what is the best mode of celebrating July 13, 1873.

ADVICES from Rio de Janeiro to May 23 have been received. The conflict between the clergy and secret societies continued to agitate Brazil. The ministry had taken strong ground on the subject and were gaining support for their policy. In the Lower House the premier made a speech defending the Free Masons, and promised that energetic measures would be taken to prevent the Bishops and the Jesuits from interfering with the society.

HONORARY DEGREES.—The trustees of Stewart College, at their late meeting, conferred the degree of L. L. D. on Rev. R. L. Dabney, D. D., of Union Seminary; and the degree of D. D. on Rev. Thomas R. Markham, of New Orleans.

MISSIONARY PERILS IN MEXICO.—Rev. Mr. Carter, of our Mexican mission, writes to our secretaries that a young native minister of the Presbyterian Church baptized a child in one of the towns (Capuhac,) and was afterward attacked in the street by a mob of Romanists, who struck him to the ground with a club. As he lay prostrate one of the assailants raised a dagger and struck at his breast. The blow was arrested by a friend, who was struck with him, so that it only tore through his coat; but his friend, who saved him, was turned upon and instantly killed on the spot. Three other Protestants were severely wounded. The native minister, with his wife, four children and his little flock of about a dozen persons have all fled, and are wandering about, not daring to return to their homes.

Mr. Carter adds: "As I left Real del Monto after preaching, April 13, I was myself surrounded by an excited crowd of about seventy or eighty persons, many of them intoxicated, who were displaying the most servile adulation to an itinerant priest who had been preaching among them. A young man who was looking on afterwards told me that he feared for me. I felt that almost the turning of a straw would have set them, drunk as they were, upon me. Happily their attention was not directed toward me, and I escaped unmolested."
New York Christian Advocate.

ARE WE WISE?—In looking over the catalogue of one of the largest colleges in the United States, we noted the fact that, while the State where this institution is located sends the largest number of students, Texas stands next on the list. Though among the most remote from that point, yet Texas is extending to it a more liberal patronage than any other. This fact is suggestive. It shows the deep interest our people feel in higher education. We cannot commend them for this too highly. At the same time we could but comment on the absence of forethought which leads our people to contribute so liberally to the support of schools in other States, when we can easily have institutions with better endowments and as able faculties at home. Even when we secure from other States the best talent and culture the land can afford, they are rejected as soon as they offer to teach on Texas soil, and our young men are sent abroad to support and build up the fame of other institutions. Texas will pay to that single institution the present year between $25,000 and $30,000.—Galveston Christian Advocate.

WE PUBLISHED last week, says the Galveston Christian Advocate of June 18, the charter of the Texas University, which passed both houses of the Texas Legislature; and the intelligence that some two hours before the adjournment, and when no time could be taken upon it, Governor Davis returned it with his veto, did not reach the office until the paper had gone to press. We are not advised as to the reason assigned for this unexpected action, and withhold comment for the present. Those having this important enterprise in charge will not permit this action to arrest their efforts. It will, we doubt not, arouse all the friends of the movement to redoubled zeal.

WE SEE, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, that certain Northern Methodist editors are determined to do all they can to prevent the success of our suit for indemnity by the United States government for the use of our Publishing House during the war. While many Northern men, of high position and of different political belongings, favor our claim, and wish us to succeed in securing it, our Northern co-religionists—at least some of them—seem disposed to do all in their power to frustrate it. We have good hope of succeeding, but if there be a failure we shall not be at a loss to assign a cause for it. We know what influences are at work against us.

THE supposed "smallest minister in the world, the Rev. T. Noble," was advertised to preach the other day at the Mission Hall, Grosvenor street, Manchester, England. No doubt he had a good congregation. The smallness of the minister would be a much greater attraction to the multitude than the largeness of his message. A minister with two heads, however, could have preached the benches of this clerical dwarf bare in a fortnight; and a minister who could proclaim the gospel from the flying trapeze would draw far better than either of them.—Independent.

A MEETING OF CARDINALS.—A meeting of cardinals has taken place at Rome and was presided over by Cardinal Antonelli. The Fanfulla states that among other objects it discussed the measures for preventing any disorders among the numerous inhabitants of the Vatican, in case of the death of the Pope. The same paper states that the council of the Vatican has requested those powers having representatives at that court to take the Vatican under their protection in the event of the Pope's death.

LATEST FROM MEXICO.—Rev. Dr. Butler, says the New York Christian Advocate, sends us an interesting communication for insertion in the Christian Advocate, which we are compelled to lay over because of its great length. An accompanying private note, dated Mexico, May 31, adds: "We are in the midst of a fearful excitement. The Jesuits are flying from the country, and the government is on their track."

BISHOP EARLY.—We are happy to inform our readers, says the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist of June 21, and the many friends of Bishop Early that he has greatly improved in health. A few days since he was able to take a ride out, and on returning went through the ceremony of ordaining a young candidate for the ministry.

A PROVERB is the child of experience.

SEE NOTICE of the lake-shore camp meeting among special notices on the eighth page. Let all who propose to attend the meeting make special arrangements in due time. It is expected that the services of the occasion will be opened promptly by preaching on Friday morning, August 1. Campers and comers should be on the ground on Thursday, July 31, and have all things ready, that they may wait on the Lord without distraction.

HIWASSEE COLLEGE, advertised in the present issue, is entitled to a liberal patronage. For salubrity of location and for economy it has no competitors. Address Rev. J. H. Brunner, Sweetwater, Tennessee. We should remark that Hiwassee is under the patronage of the Holston Annual Conference.

HOMER COLLEGE, Claiborne parish, Louisiana, is the property of the Louisiana Conference, and is fully entitled to the confidence and support of our people. President Borden is a successful educator, and should draw to the institution a large patronage. See advertisement in another column.

CLARKSVILLE FEMALE ACADEMY, Clarksville, Tennessee, is advertised in the present number of the ADVOCATE. This institution, is of long standing, located in the most thriving part of middle Tennessee, and is most ably conducted.

THE venerable David Ayers, formerly of Galveston, wishes us to say that his address will be Ocean Springs, Mississippi, from this date.

THE late Bishop McIlvaine, of Ohio, who was highly revered for his ability and piety, and who died in Europe some weeks since, was one of the two or three liberal-minded Bishops of the Episcopal Church, who recognized other evangelical churches as entitled to respect and consideration. Considering that there were other churches that divided the territory of Ohio with his own; he refused to call himself the Bishop of Ohio, but always subscribed himself "Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the Diocese of Ohio." He did this in the face of remonstrances from his church, but remained firm to the last. Those, however, in charge of his remains after his death disregarded the feelings and convictions he had entertained, and mocked the dead Bishop by inscribing upon his coffin, "Bishop of Ohio," thus making him wear in death a badge of bigotry which he, living, had discarded and condemned.—Raleigh Christian Advocate.

I SUPPOSE that many might have attained to wisdom had they not thought that they had already attained it.—Saadi.

The Child's Corner.

A CHILD'S NIGHT MUSING.

From her chamber window peering
Stood a little child, one night
As the deepening shadows nearing
Mingled with the warning light.

Soon the landscape, faint and fainter,
Which she loved to look upon,
Lay a gloomy mass before her—
All its grace and form were gone.

Gazing thus, her eyes grew tearful
When the day's last beam had fled,
While her little heart grew fearful,
To herself she softly said:

"Who will mind the sheep, I wonder?
For the shepherd cannot see
And the cattle roaming yonder,
Oh, how lonely they must be!

"Grandpa says the Savior keepeth
Watch o'er all things here below,
That he slumbers not, nor sleepeth,
Nor doth ever weary grow.

"Are the stars so brightly beaming,
And the moon with silvery light,
O'er the darkened earth now streaming,
Helps to Jesus in the night?

"Does the moon shine round the steeple,
So that he should see the way
To the homes of all his people
When the sun is gone away?

"I love to think he stands beside me
When I say my evening prayer,
And, though all is dark around me,
His watchful love may share."

THE London Daily Telegraph thus describes the arrival of some otters at Regent's park:

About noon, on the twelfth instant, the little visitors from the Land's End were presented to their purchaser in Albany street, Regent's park. "On opening the basket," says he, "I found the little things curled up like the babes in the wood, and their pretty little bright eyes looked up at me imploringly, as much as to say: 'Please don't hurt us; we are dreadfully frightened, hungry and sleepy, and we have lost our poor mother.'" It is needless to add that, if the orphans could but have known it, a better substitute for their lost mother than the lover of nature into whose hands they had fallen could not well have been found. He proceeded at once to supply all their wants, and, fearful of trusting "his prizes" to any one but himself, set off to carry them down to Brighton, in propria persona. On arriving at Victoria station he took a look at his treasures, and was horrified to find one lying upon his back and apparently dead, while the other seemed far from being in vigorous health. Appealing to the humanity of the guard, Mr. Buckland asked where he could find a fire, as he saw that his two little charges were perishing from cold. He was at once shown into the waiting-room, and the burners of the gas-stove were delighted without delay. "I put," says Mr. Buckland, "the basket with the otters on the top of the gas-stove, and turned up the gas as high as I dared, without burning the animals; but still the poor sick otter did not move, although his companion got better. Just as the train was starting a porter came with foot-warmers. I immediately procured one, and placed the otters in the basket upon it." At Croydon the kind-hearted narrator tells us he was delighted to find the healthiest of the two otters lying half asleep on the foot-warmer, while the sick one opened his eyes, and gave other tokens of reviving vitality. Feeling sure that the invalid wanted more warmth, Mr. Buckland bethought him of his sealskin waistcoat, in which he swaddled the patient. Upon arriving at Brighton he was met by Mr. Lawler, one of the attaches of the aquarium; and, together with their charge, they both jumped into a cab. The next scene must again be told in the narrator's own words. "A few minutes after we left the station," says Mr. Buckland, "I felt something nip my leg. Looking down into the basket I found that both otters were loose in the cab. My foot-warmers had been so effectual that I had made them too lively. I told Lawler to keep perfectly quiet and do nothing, and even if he was bitten not to move his legs." When they read these words many persons will be apt to imagine sensations which they would have experienced had they been in Mr. Lawler's place; but it must be remembered that he and his companion are both naturalists, and that a nip from an otter is "all in the way of business." After describing with much quiet humor the antics by which he got the fugitives back into their basket, Mr. Buckland succeeded in landing them at the aquarium, where it was at first believed that both were in perfect health. We regret, however, to be compelled to add that the sickly otter has since died. Let us hope that his surviving companion will continue for many years to delight the visitors to the Brighton Aquarium with the "grace and elegance" of his swimming, and to remind all who see him of the trouble and tenderness which Mr. Buckland lavished upon his early days.

Music and Mercy.

The citizens of Antioch, irritated by some exactions which the Emperor Theodosius had imposed on them, broke out into open revolt; and, among other excesses, pulled down the statues of the Emperor and Empress and dashed them to pieces. Shortly after, when the heat of their fury was passed, they began to repent their indiscretion, and to be filled with alarm for the danger into which they had brought themselves and their city. Flavianus, their Bishop, took a journey to Constantinople, in order to appease Theodosius; but the Emperor indignantly repelled all supplications, and vowed that nothing but the most signal vengeance would satisfy him for the insult put upon his crown and dignity.

The good Bishop was in despair at the danger impending over his flock; but being a man of lively fancy, and learning that the Emperor was in the habit, while feasting, of having a number of young boys to sing to him, he conceived the idea of making yet another appeal, through music's powerful influences, to the sensibilities of the Emperor's heart. He prevailed with those who had the charge of the songsters to place them under his direction for a short time, during which he taught them to sing in mournful strains the woes of the Antiochians; the sorrow they felt for their transgressions, and their despair at having fallen under the displeasure of their prince.

A day was at length fixed on which the boys were to try the effect of their lesson on the Emperor. The attention of Theodosius was instantly arrested by the peculiar pathos of the strains addressed to him; he soon discerned the import which they conveyed; yet continued to listen to them with undiminished fascination; and such at last was the effect produced that, watering the cup of wine which he held in his hand with his warm tears, he forgot all the displeasure he had conceived against the Antiochians, and called aloud: "The city of Antioch is forgiven!"—Percy Anecdotes.

The Cherry-Tree's Advice.

The grasses were heartily tired of lying in bed, as they had done all winter, wrapped up in thick coverlids of snow. The south wind had taken the coverlids off, which made them think it was high time to spring up.

"Wait," said the Cherry-tree; "be patient. The wise do not hurry without good reason. It is not quite time for work. Stretch yourselves before you get up. The sun has not yet cooked the air, and April may serve you ill. She will wash you enough, I dare say. Her cisterns are full of rain-water; but she may keep you too long in the wet. There is reason in all things. Wait till you hear May coming."

"Let us wait," said the Dandelions and Buttercups. "The Cherry-tree is better and older than we are, and has had a wider field of observation: she knows."

"Or thinks she does," cried a Clover saucily.

"It seems to me you have lost your sweetness," said a Currant-bush, remembering how people turned from her when she was sour.

The Clover felt ashamed and mortified. "Oh!" she whispered to herself, "I must be a poor dependent thing to be sweet only when the sun kisses me." The reproof was not lost on her. It is sometimes good to see ourselves as others see us.

"How soon will May be here?" asked a Plautain.

"All in good time," said the Cherry-tree pleasantly. "God has an eye on us. He does not forget the least one. He is sometimes slow, but he is very sure. 'Seed-time and harvest' never fail; only let us follow his leadings. Be quiet a little longer, and then—"

"And then, and then!" they all shouted, only it was the wind you heard, and not them.—The Child's Paper.

The Right Way to Begin.

A little girl once said: "Oh, mother, how very hard it is to do right! I don't believe I shall ever be able."

"Have you really tried, my dear?"

"Oh, yes; I try every day. When I awake, before I get up, I say to myself: 'I will be good all the day; I will be gentle and kind; I will obey my parents and teachers; I will not quarrel; I will always tell the truth.' But then, mother, I don't know how it is, I do so often forget. Then, when evening comes, I have to say: 'There, now, what is the use of trying? I have been in a passion; I have been disobedient, and once or twice, mother, you know, I have said what was not true.'" The dear child seemed very much ashamed while saying this, so her mother looked kindly at her, and only said: "My dear, I do not think you have begun right." The little girl looked up wonderingly, and her parent went on: "The first thing is to have a new heart; have you asked for this?" "No, mother, I am afraid not." "Then, my child, do so at once. Good fruit, you know, can only come from a good tree. If your heart is wrong your conduct will be wrong. You cannot make it right yourself, with all your good resolutions; but ask God, for Christ's sake, to help you. He will give you his Holy Spirit, and you will not find it any longer impossible to do right." I am glad to say that the child took her mother's advice. That very day she asked God earnestly to change her heart, and help her to do right. She prayed, she watched, she strove hard against her sins, and was able, by God's grace, to lead the life of a lovely young Christian.

THE PRECIOUS LITTLE PLANT.—Two little girls, Bridget and Walburgia, went to the neighboring town, each carrying on her head a basket of fruit, to sell for money enough to buy the family dinner. Bridget murmured and fretted all the way, but Walburgia only joked and laughed. At last Bridget got out of all patience and said vexedly:

"How can you go on laughing so? Your basket is as heavy as mine, and you are not a bit stronger. I don't understand it."

"Oh! it is easy enough to understand," replied Walburgia.

"How so?"

"I have a certain little plant that I put on the top of my load, and it makes it so light that I can hardly feel it. Why don't you do so too?"

"Indeed it must be a very precious little plant. I wish I could lighten my load with it. Where does it grow? Tell me. What do you call it?"

"It grows wherever you plant it, and give it a chance to take root, and there is no telling the relief it gives! Its name is patience!"—Herder.

HOW TO OBEY.—Do it at once. Never wait to be told a second time. Do just what you are told to do. Do not try to have your own way, even in part. Do it cheerfully. Do not go about it in a surly, cross, peevish way. Don't fret and grumble and talk back. Only cheerful obedience can be pleasing to God and man.

NO TRIUMPHS are comparable to those of piety, no trophies so magnificent and durable as those which victorious faith erecteth; they do far surpass the most famous achievements of pagan heroes.

Farm, Garden and Household.

Sheep Walks.

In parts of Great Britain vast tracts of land are found too poor or too rugged for cultivation, and possess a money value only because they furnish good ranges for sheep. On the other hand, in the best-cultivated and most fertile portions of that country sheep play an important part in agriculture. So in the South I believe we have no lands too rich or too valuable to be advantageously used for sheep—none that are by nature too poor. I say by nature, because every farmer unfortunately can remember instances of miscalled "cultivation," the final result of which has been absolute barrenness.

Sheep are indiscriminate feeders, and hardly any green thing comes amiss to them. All the ordinary wild and cultivated grasses, the greater number of weeds, young bushes, shrubs, etc., are eaten with avidity. They are fonder than any other stock of variety in their food, and sometimes show this taste in unexpected ways. For instance, a friend told me lately that his flock had exterminated from his lawn that annoying weed, the narrow-leaved dock. My sheep are devoted to young cockle-burrs, and will never let one "head out," if they can get at it. When a flock is changed from a clean pasture to a weedy one they are apt to eat all the young weeds before touching the grass.

The Bermuda has always seemed to me the most promising of our Southern grasses—valuable alike for sheep and cattle, but, owing to the fact that it does not grow through the winter and remain green like blue grass, it is valuable only for summer grazing. I speak of it as seen two hundred miles south of Memphis—perhaps further South it may live and keep fresh all the year. The short, close turf it makes is exactly what sheep like best. I may add that there is nothing they like better than clover and peavines—green or cured.

The system of keeping sheep practiced at the North and here, depending on a succession of inclosed pastures for them, I take to be generally inapplicable at the South. The "let-them-alone" style has been well tried. The plan of employing a shepherd to remain with them day and night may answer where things are done on a large scale, but its expense and the nature of the country will preclude its general adoption. Where the sheep walk is uninclosed, if a few acres can be fenced off near the owner's dwelling, for folding them on at night, it will probably be found the cheapest and best plan. The folding lot will become extremely rich in a short time, as sheep leave most of their manure where they lie at night. They may be salted in or near it, so as to make them easier to drive up. When the lot becomes dirty they should be changed to a new one, as it is filth, rather than confinement, that injures sheep. Plenty of bells on your sheep are desirable, both to prevent loss by straying away, and as a protection against dogs. One to every ten sheep is a good proportion for a small flock—one to every twenty for a large one.

It is scarcely necessary to mention that by this method of folding you secure in a year a large amount of valuable manure, evenly spread—except, indeed, that it is apt to be thickest on the highest points in the field, just where most needed.

If possible, the folding lot should contain or be convenient to a stream of pure water. It is safe to suppose that sheep can do well without water, and they are very particular as to the quality and cleanliness both of their food and drink. Indeed one great attraction of sheep husbandry is that it compels cleanliness as requisite to success. The dirty stables and pastures which a cow or hog will endure with resignation would soon prove fatal to sheep.—C. Brown, in Southern Cultivator.

CUCUMBERS ON TRELLISES.—Everywhere we go we see the cucumber in the open air suffered to run on the ground. This is, no doubt, a relic of European culture. There it is necessary. The climate is not hot enough, and the plants have to be started, if not grown altogether, in low, flat glass frames. But where the cucumber grows wild it spreads over bushes and trees, and the growth and product is enormous. All plants with tendrils prefer to ramble in this way. The grape vine, it is well known, seems fairly to rejoice when it can find a large mass of twiggy brush to ramble over as it wills; and so does the cucumber. No one who has not tried can have any idea of the luxurious growth of a cucumber when trained to a stake which has a set of stubby side branches left along its length. Some which the writer saw had been taken at a distance for some vigorous kind of ornamental gourd, and the crop was enormous.

A great advantage in this style of culture is that the plants occupy far less ground than when permitted to spread over the surface in the usual way. This is a great gain to small gardens, and to large ones, for that matter; for if we have land enough and to spare, few of us have time to waste in preparing more of it than is necessary to the perfection of a crop. Gardeners' Monthly.

A PREVENTIVE of the potato disease is found by a French farmer, who for three years has introduced a small quantity of the residue of the bark used in tanning into each hole on planting his potato crop, and each time he has been completely successful in preserving his fields free from the annoying disease.

TO PREVENT the teeth from decaying brush them with lime-water. Even if they are far gone it will cause them to decay with little or no pain. Saturate the brush well, and use with tooth-powder.

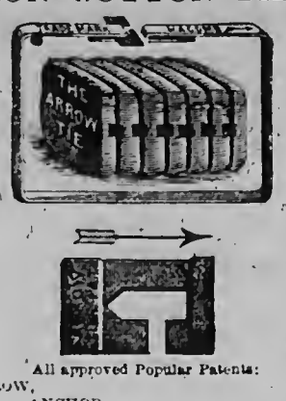
CIDER APPLE-SAUCE.—Boil down good cider until it is of the consistency of molasses, then put in the apples, pared, quartered and cored, and boil until the fruit is tender.

MACHINERY, TIES, ETC.

THE DUBOIS FLANGE COTTON GIN.

By the Flange the Cotton is kept in contact with the teeth on each side, until the fiber is taken from the seed, without allowing them to be taken up by the return motion of the roll, as in other Gins.

The Flange prevents bolls, stems, sticks and hard substances from being cut, consequently making a better sample out of roughly-picked cotton than other Gins.



We have sold more from this point than any agency of any other Gin for the crop of 1872-73; consequently we can furnish more and better references, and they are warranted to come up to all that is said of them.

We keep constantly on hand all sizes, from 40 to 80-SAW STANDS, left or right. Price, $15 per Saw.

IMPROVED

EAGLE COTTON GINS.

The great popularity of the EAGLE COTTON GINS is established from the well-known fact that they are the most reliable, strongest and best built Cotton Gins ever made. The Eagle Cotton Gin runs lighter than any other Gin, thus having a great advantage for planters who wish to run by horse power. All the numerous planters who use the Eagle Cotton Gin will certify to the fact that when their cotton is sent to market it always brings the highest market price, as no other gin can produce a finer or a better sample of cotton than the Eagle Cotton Gins. Over seventeen thousand of the Eagle Cotton Gins have been made and sold. During a period of twenty years the undersigned has had the agency of the Eagle Cotton Gin in New Orleans. He has never had a gin returned or rejected out of the immense number sold. The saw cylinders of all the Eagle Cotton Gins are twelve inches in diameter, which is two inches larger than most other kinds of gins, thus giving our forty-saw gin more teeth, and they are more than equal to the fifty-saw gins of other makers, who use only a ten-inch cylinder, and the same great advantage of the twelve-inch cylinder in larger-sized gins can be easily estimated. Planters who wish a reliable cotton gin, with an established reputation, can purchase an Eagle Cotton Gin with a certainty that they are not making an untried experiment, but will obtain a cotton gin which is indorsed by the oldest and largest planters in the country as the best in use. A large stock of the Eagle Cotton Gins are always kept on sale in New Orleans, ready for immediate shipment. Planters should be particular to state if they want right or left-hand motion gins.

OCEAN SPRINGS HOTEL,

SITUATED AT THE CELEBRATED OCEAN SPRINGS, MISS.

This house is now open and in complete order for the reception of guests. The bathing and fishing is the best of any place on the coast, and persons seeking either health or pleasure cannot do better than to visit the Ocean Springs Hotel, where they will receive every attention during their stay at the hotel. The table will always be supplied with the delicacies of the season.

I would refer invalids seeking health to the pamphlets (to be had at the Hotel, or at Messrs. Schmidt & Zeigler's, New Orleans, Louisiana,) containing an analysis of the waters of the Springs and their wonderful cures, which are certified to by some of the most eminent physicians of our country.

Terms are more reasonable than at any of the other watering-places on the coast for the same accommodations. Liberal arrangements made with families and those wishing to remain during the season.

There are also connected with the house a Ten-Pin Alley and Billiard Saloon; also fine Croquet grounds for the guests of the house.

The proprietor has made arrangements for a Band of Music, which will be in attendance during every evening of the week, besides a fine Piano for the use of the guests of the Hotel.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE CONVERSATION FAN.

THE LAST AND MOST ABSORBING SENSATION OF THE DAY IS, TO USE A theatrical phrase, "a great take." Everybody, to be en regle for the season, and to avoid the proscription of imperious fashion, must have

A CONVERSATION FAN.

No family circle is complete in social diversions and entertainments without one, and in order to enjoy the pastime it should be distinctly understood that the answers do not numerically follow the questions, but to spice the amusement an answer must be looked for that will afford a fitting response to an interrogatory.

Where a direct answer is not to be found to a direct question, it will be discovered that it furnishes the sequel to a sustained conversation, so that couples can carry on a tete-a-tete, which they may not wish to make audible, by silent indications of numbers.

THE CONVERSATION FAN

is an infallible remedy against dullness, breaking the spell of silence by a suggestive inquiry, furnishing congenial pleasures for an evening's entertainment, and opening up a novel and ingenious method of whiling away agreeable hours at home, in the promenade, at a party or private gathering.

ONLY TEN CENTS A FAN.

DOMESTIC.

NEW YORK, July 2.—Walworth has been found guilty of murder in the second degree.

The charge of Judge Davis in the Walworth trial was if the jury were satisfied from the evidence that young Walworth came to New York with the intent to murder his father, then the crime was murder in the first degree; but if the crime was committed in a sudden manner, and in an instant, then it would be murder in the second degree.

The judge also charged that the jury should not regard the fears which the prisoner entertained for the life of his mother, as they could not be regarded as any justification of his crime; that they should only regard those fears which were personal. The law, he said, did not make it justifiable when the killing was done through fear that the life of another was in danger. They could, however, consider whether the fear that his mother's life was in danger did not give point to the fear which he entertained for his own life, on the meeting on the morning of the third of June.

At the conclusion of the judge's charge the jury retired, and after an absence of three hours returned, at ten minutes past eight P. M., with a verdict of guilty of murder in the second degree.

NEW YORK, July 3.—The Senate to-day passed a resolution condemning the back pay bill, and commending the senators or representatives for this State for opposing it. The Senate rejected the bill providing for a constitutional convention.

The heat to-day exceeded any that has been experienced this summer. The thermometer, during the afternoon, ranged between ninety-seven and ninety-eight in the shade.

BOSTON, July 3.—The Anderson School of Natural History, on Penike Island, Buzzard's bay, will be opened on the eighth of July by Prof. Agassiz.

BROWNSVILLE, July 4.—The first bale of cotton raised on the Rio Grande this year was brought to this market yesterday by J. L. Hynes, of Santa Maria, Cameron county. The gentleman on whose farm it was raised arrived too late for the steamer, but it will be dispatched to New Orleans by the first vessel leaving.

NEW YORK, July 5.—There were numerous cases of sunstroke yesterday, including several among the militia during the morning parade.

Frank Walworth was to-day sentenced to the State prison at Sing Sing, at hard labor, for life. Judge Davis, in addressing the prisoner, said he had fearful doubts whether his case did not justify conviction of murder in the first degree. The prisoner stood the trying ordeal without moving a muscle of his features. He left the court with his mother immediately after the judge had concluded.

While on his way to the Tombs, after sentence had been pronounced, young Walworth retained the self-collected appearance by which he was characterized throughout the trial. He remarked to the deputy sheriff: "I am glad that I did not have to endure the long lecture I had anticipated that Judge Davis would inflict on me. I thoroughly understand my position, and did not desire any instruction in relation thereto. I simply wish time to arrange my affairs, and shall then submit myself to my fate with all the equanimity I can command."

Mr. O'Conner, it is understood, intends to move at an early day for a new trial, or for such further proceedings as may give the case a new phase, and in addition to move that Walworth may be permitted to remain in the Tombs until the questions raised shall have been determined.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—The Attorney General has received the following dispatch from New Orleans: Governor Kellogg has called upon Governor Powers, of Mississippi, to prosecute the parties who left the State of Louisiana and participated in the duel which resulted in Judge Cooley's death.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., July 5.—Two men, two women and a boy went over Niagara Falls yesterday. They were sailing in a boat at Chippewa, got into the rapids, and were carried over the falls. The parties are not known. Pieces of the boat have been found.

Later.—The young man and woman who went over Niagara Falls were to be married to-day. The bodies have not been recovered.

BUFFALO, July 6.—Three distinct shocks of an earthquake were heard here this morning; one quite strong was heard about five o'clock, another about seven o'clock, and a third, quite strong, at half-past nine o'clock this morning, causing considerable alarm by the rocking of buildings and shipping in the harbor.

NEW YORK, July 6.—Since the abolition of the franking privilege, on the first instant, there has been a marked decrease in the amount of mail matter passing through the New York postoffice. The postmaster says the reform has caused a falling off of eighteen thousand free newspaper exchanges burned this week.

WASHINGTON, July 7.—A dispatch received from Stanley's Yellowstone expedition, dated at camp seventeen miles west of Bismarck, Dakota, June 30, states that the health of the whole command was good. The Indians were offering no serious resistance to the location of the railroad through their hunting grounds. Abundant coal, of good quality, was found twenty-seven miles west of the Missouri river on the surveyed line of the road, and the country thus far traversed by the expeditionary force is an excellent one, well watered and supplied with grass.

MEMPHIS, July 7.—There were twenty-two interments to day; only three from cholera.

CINCINNATI, July 7.—Seven deaths from cholera reported at the health office to-day.

BUFFALO, July 7.—Another shock of an earthquake occurred at six o'clock this morning. The only damage done by the shocks of yesterday was the throwing down of a chimney in the center of the city.

NEW YORK, July 7.—Stokes, Simmons and King will, it is supposed, escape the death penalty, through the new law requiring proof of deliberate intent to kill, for conviction of murder in the first degree.

NASHVILLE, July 7.—Total deaths on Sunday twelve, of which seven were from cholera. Total deaths to-day four, none of which were from cholera.

A special from Chattanooga reports thirty deaths there in the last forty-eight hours, fifteen of which were from cholera.

NEW YORK, July 7.—A letter from Geneva to the World gives a conversation with the ex-Empress of France. She says her visit to France is for a political purpose, and it is useless to try to conceal it.

She believes there will soon be a general return of the people to order, and said the government at home, the anti-Christian and pagan court at Berlin and the wild Communists at Madrid are filled with fear at the awakening of Catholic France.

Now that the wretched Thiers is gone, and all the moves of McMahon are prudent, the future, said Eugenie, is ours, and France will lead the reaction against the forces which have seemed to threaten the existence of society and religion throughout Europe.

She saw in the future that France would again be at the head of the nations, the robbers driven out of Rome, the Pope restored, Germany divided into harmless States, and Austria again strong.

NEW YORK, July 8.—A special from London to the Herald announces that Sir Samuel and Lady Baker are in the enjoyment of perfect health.

NASHVILLE, July 8.—Not a single case of cholera reported for the past forty-eight hours, and there were only three deaths from other causes to-day. The city was never in a more healthy condition.

FOREIGN.

MADRID, July 2.—The constitutional committee of the Assembly have completed their draft of a federal constitution. It provides that the president of the republic shall hold office for four years and will not be eligible for a second term; the deputies cannot officiate as ministers; the public powers are divided into the judiciary, legislative and executive departments; the Cortes is to hold two sessions and the members are to receive salaries. Europe, Asia, Spain is divided into eleven States, and Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands are constituted territories.

MADRID, July 3.—In consequence of the passage of the bill abolishing constitutional guarantees, the irreconcilable deputies have withdrawn from the Cortes, which action has served to restore quiet in Madrid. Detachments of troops are, however, yet posted at various points throughout the city, and the utmost precautions have been taken by the authorities for the suppression of disturbances.

VIENNA, July 5.—The number of foreign visitors to the exhibition is increasing daily. The great majority are from England. The juries are now hard at work, and it is generally thought that a considerable number of prizes will be awarded American exhibitors.

LONDON, July 7.—True bills have been found against George Bidwell, Austin Bidwell, George McDonnell and Edwin Noyes, the Bank of England forgers. They will be tried at Old Bailey in August.

HALIFAX, July 7.—The Inman steamer City of Washington, from Liverpool, went ashore on Saturday, west of Sambro. All hands saved.

HALIFAX, N. S., July 8.—The City of Washington left Liverpool on the twenty-fourth of June, and saw neither sun nor stars during the passage. It was therefore impossible to make observations. When she struck on Saturday afternoon objects could not be seen three yards ahead. She was going at the rate of about nine knots when she stranded. Perfect order prevailed on board. Twenty-eight cabin and four hundred and eighty-one steerage passengers were safely landed by the ship's boats and the small craft attracted by the steamer's guns. The sea was calm. The distance to the main land was a quarter of a mile. The vessel's escape from total destruction with all on board was truly providential.

It is hoped the City of Washington will get off, if the calm continues. The passengers are supplied with cooked food. The ship has a full general cargo, part of which is very valuable.

LONDON, July 8.—Eighteen Norwegians, belonging to the Tiberman Steam Navigation Company's service, who were left on Spitzbergen, alive were found dead by a party who soon after found to their relief.

BAYONNE, July 8.—Don Carlos has ordered the arrest of the Cure of Santa Cruz.

From the Work.

REVIVAL.—Mr. Editor: Be it known to the praise of divine grace, and for the church's encouragement, that we have entered into a spirit of revival in this (Georgetown) circuit. At each of the four churches believers are quickened. At our last Quarterly Conference, in response to an invitation from the presiding elder—who is the right man in the right place—two ladies and two gentlemen came forward to join the church. Many in the congregation were deeply affected. Yesterday, at the close of our service at Bethesda, six ladies and seven gentlemen came forward and knelt at the altar. On inquiry I found one was a backslider, some were seeking justification, others sanctification. Several of them retired rejoicing in God. We are expecting great things. We intend (D. V.) to commence protracted meetings at Mount Pleasant church, July 19. Will my fellow-laborers help us all they can, and will the churches pray that this stranger may be made a great blessing among them? It is "not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts."

E. HICKS, P. C.

CRYSTAL SPRINGS, Miss., June 30, 1873.

MARSHALL (EAST TEXAS) DISTRICT CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: We have closed an interesting District Conference at Marshall, for the Marshall district, East Texas Conference, made the more so by the presence, counsels and preaching of Bishop Keener, who presided to the entire satisfaction of all. As this was the first time a Bishop has attended a District Conference in the East Texas Conference we highly appreciated his visit. The district was well represented in her ministry and lay delegates. The most of the charges were shown to be in a hopeful condition. There has been a decided improvement in the Sunday school cause; many new schools have been organized since our Annual Conference. Our preachers and members are waking up on the subject of meeting the increased demands of our Missionary Board. Bishop Keener knows how to press this question upon the hearts and consciences of our people. His feelers have claws; they lay hold, and don't let go until the purse-strings give way. Departing from us he has carried with him our love and esteem, and left behind his large "footprints."

I have held one quarterly meeting since the close of our District Conference. So impressed was the preacher in charge (Bro. William H. Moss) by the Bishop's urgent call for all to rally in support of the cause of missions that he presented the claim in such a manner as to collect in cash and subscriptions $113 at one of the appointments on the Elysian Fields circuit—a good start toward collecting the $200 assessed to this charge. We all feel inspirited, and intend not only to "double our diligence," but also to double former collections. I presume no one would be hurt, on our side, if they were quadrupled. We are at a loss to assign a valid reason why our branch of the church should lag behind our sister denominations in supporting her ministry and all the benevolent enterprises of the church. If this cannot be done otherwise, let them be worried into a disposition to devise and execute more liberal things.

We are at work with dram-drinkers and liquor-sellers in our church. We propose to take the responsibility in dealing with them as violators of the rules of our Discipline; they may have the benefit of an appeal to the Annual or, if need be, to the General Conference, and ascertain if there they can get the "benefit of the clergy." I think it is high time we "show our hands" on this subject, and, if possible, rid our church of these plague-spots; for I assure you whisky is now doing about as much devilment as dancing-masters, clowns and spiritualists, all of whom need the brakes screwed down tight.

Yours truly, DANIEL MOUSE.

MARSHALL, TEXAS, June 23, 1873.

WINNSBORO CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: I have been thinking for some time past of sending up a report in relation to my circuit. It may seem rather inopportune to refer to the Quarterly Conference at a date so remote from the time of its session, which was on the nineteenth of April. Up to that time nothing worthy of note had transpired, but it was a very impressive occasion. Most of the members of the Quarterly Conference from various parts of the circuit were in attendance, who seemed to be deeply impressed with the importance of the duties assigned them in their official capacity. Their deliberations were full, free and in the spirit of love. I do not hesitate to say that the advent of the presiding elder and the brethren in our midst did much in magnifying the work of a Quarterly Conference, thereby setting forth, in a clearer light, that the object of their assembling was not for the promotion of any secular ends, but fully demonstrating that their labor was a labor of love—for the good of the church and for the conversion of the world.

On Sunday morning of the Quarterly Conference we held a love-feast at nine o'clock, which was to us a season of refreshing.

The presiding elder preached to a large and attentive congregation in our new church, which had been lately finished. The subject was, "The duty of pastors and church-members," in which he gave a clear exegesis of the relation of pastors and members and people, and their relative duties, which we believe resulted in much good in building the waste places of our Zion in these lands. Since that time the brother laboring with me has zealously and effectually assisted me in cultivating the seed that, I trust, was sown on that occasion, and I think I would not exaggerate to say that the church occupies a more prominent position spiritually than ever before since I first took the pastoral care of the work. Notwithstanding this comparative high spiritual state of the church, I have been from a sense of duty necessitated to use the knife of amputation in cutting off branches bearing no fruit, and I believe now that the remaining branches will be more fruitful in the future.

I think it due the charge to say that the recent political excitement in our parish militated greatly against the progress of our church; perhaps this is the reason the knife of excision was applied to the fruitless branches of the vine.

The Sabbath school interest is looking up where we can get superintendents.

The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE is generally circulated throughout the circuit, there being a copy taken by nearly every Methodist family. I believe the paper is doing us a valuable work in promoting personal piety; therefore I am unwilling that its circulation should be so circumscribed and confined to Methodist families, and I hope to be able to report, at the close of this Conference year, that all families in the circuit are the recipients of this weekly messenger that is sowing precious seed.

Your brother,
JAMES M. MCKEE.

JACKSON (MISSISSIPPI) DISTRICT CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: The District Conference for Jackson district was held at Yazoo City, June 5-7. H. H. Montgomery, presiding elder, in the absence of a Bishop, presided to the entire satisfaction of all present. John T. Cameron was elected secretary, assisted by Rev. R. B. Downer. The district was poorly represented as to numbers, not half of the delegation being present, and three being wholly unrepresented.

The various interests of the church, as laid down in the Discipline, were rightly inquired into as far as the circumstances permitted. The spiritual state of the church was considered generally as hopeful and encouraging, several charges reporting gracious revivals and considerable additions to the church; others are looking forward to better times. The cause of missions is looking up. The Sunday school reports were quite encouraging. The financial interests of the church are improving materially. A large improvement in the building of church-houses and parsonages was reported. Altogether the district is doing well. A historical association was formed for the purpose of collecting and preserving the earlier history of Methodism in the district. A district Sunday school convention is to be held at Canton on Wednesday before the fifth Sunday in August, at which time also the historical association adjourned to meet, when several essays will probably be presented and read.

The following are the delegates to the Annual Conference: E. C. Pastell, Thomas E. Horton, W. L. Nugent and J. T. Cameron. Reserves—J. J. Birdsong, G. W. Galloway, J. W. Ellison and William H. Foster. Canton was selected as the place for holding the next conference.

The following resolutions were adopted, and the secretary directed to forward a copy to the ADVOCATE for publication, viz.:

WHEREAS, It is apparent, from the various reports received from the different charges in the district, that the abuse of intoxicating liquors is an evil that threatens and endangers very greatly the interests and even the very existence of the church in our midst; AND WHEREAS, It behooves the church to give forth no uncertain sound in regard to an evil so pernicious and demoralizing in its effects, and furthermore to use all legitimate and judicious means to counteract and correct this great evil; therefore, be it

Resolved, By this District Conference, assembled to consider the spiritual interests of the church, that we regard both the drinking of intoxicating liquors, unless in cases of necessity, and the selling of them otherwise than for medical or sacramental purposes, as clearly a violation of the discipline of our church, and also expressly forbidden in the word of God.

Resolved, That we as pastors and as laymen in the church will use all our efforts to suppress these evils and save the church by faithful instruction and earnest admonition, coupled with prayer to God that he will give us success in our efforts to reform the parties engaged in these sinful practices; but if they will not reform, we will be faithful in the administration of discipline, and cut off these dead branches from the church of Christ.

JOHN T. CAMERON, Sec.

FIRST JUDICIAL CONFERENCE.—Bishop Simpson presided over a Judicial Conference at Beaver, Pennsylvania, Wednesday, June 4. It is said to be the first of the kind held since the General Conference instituted this new Court of Appeals. Twenty-one triers of appeal were summoned, seven each from the Erie, Ohio and North Ohio Conferences. Twenty were present. They were called to try the appeal of Andrew Gregg from the decision of the Pittsburg Conference. The action of the Conference was sustained.—New York Christian Advocate.

New Orleans Abroad.

The health officers of Milwaukee and other cities having persistently, in their reports, misstated the facts respecting the yearly rate of mortality in this city, the following letter was recently addressed by Dr. C. B. White, president of the Board of Health in this city, to the editor of the Milwaukee Sentinel. It is a just vindication of the reputation of New Orleans against a stereotyped misrepresentation.

NEW ORLEANS, June 21, 1873.

Editor Milwaukee Sentinel:

SIR—On page 24 of the report of the Board of Health of Milwaukee, for the year ending April 1, 1871, occurs a list of American cities and their yearly rates of mortality per thousand of living inhabitants. New Orleans is made to head the list at 54 per thousand.

On page 45 of report of the same body for the year ending April 1, 1872, a similar list occurs, and, as in the former one, New Orleans is put at the beginning of the list as having a yearly mortality per thousand of 54.

On page 47 of the report for the year ending April 1, 1873, the same statement is repeated, death rate 54 to 1,000 inhabitants. During the past four years, the period of my connection with the Board of Health in New Orleans, the rate of mortality per thousand has been: 1869, 29.21; 1870, 36.25; 1871, 29.21; 1872, 30.61 to 1,000 of population. Average death rate for four years, 31.32 per thousand. Of the deaths occurring in 1870, 587 were by yellow fever, and 528 by smallpox.

These rates of mortality are calculated upon the basis of the population as furnished by the United States census of 1870. The large floating population present in New Orleans, during the war, somewhat diminishes the value of its vital statistics in determining the health of its population. But for fifteen years there has been but one year in which its death rate has been 54 per thousand, namely: the great epidemic year of 1867. The very next year the death rate was but 27 per thousand.

If the death rate for one year is to be the standard rate for all time, why not select that of 1868?

The average death rate for ten years has been 34.26 per thousand—certainly different from the rate of 54, as given by the Milwaukee Board of Health.

Drainage has been carried forward, and, by reference to the report sent, it will be seen that a fair amount of other sanitary work has been done.

New Orleans should have the credit of the lowest death rate that results from the efforts at improved health.

It may not be improper to inquire if all other figures of the Board of Health of Milwaukee be equally reliable?

I take this method of calling public attention to this subject, as copies of our annual reports are promptly furnished to the sanitary authorities of Milwaukee, and last year by letter their attention was directed to this inaccuracy.

MR. THOMAS M. COOLEY, the author of "Constitutional Limitations," the Jay professor of law in the University of Michigan, formerly one of the justices of the Supreme Court of that State, and editor of the Commentaries of Justice Story on the Constitution of the United States, in an editorial note on the guaranty clause of the Constitution, speaks thus of the Louisiana outrage:

"In the case of Louisiana, in 1873, an inferior Federal judge, without a shadow of authority, and consequently in defiance of law, and for that reason supported by no presumption of correct motives and with scarcely a pretense of observing even the usual forms, by the process of his court, aided by a military force, installed in power a State government which he sided with as against rival claimants, and, in consequence of a pressure of business in Congress precluding prompt attention to the case by that body, has been enabled to sustain this government in power until the present time." Judge Cooley is acknowledged to be one of the ablest lawyers in this country; and here, in the above terse and graphic manner, he characterizes the Kellogg usurpation by the orders of Judge Durell, carried into effect and sustained by the President. He speaks of it as an unparalleled wrong. "What government," he says, "can be more despotic than one elected by an injunction and continued in power by military force under the order of a judge who, having no jurisdiction, is restrained by no law but his own arbitrary will?" Such a precedent, if tacitly assented to, "cannot fail to threaten constant danger to our liberties, especially at those periods of high political excitement when prudence, caution, and the strictest regard for the Constitution and the laws are most important." Every lover of justice and legal order will thank Judge Cooley for these plain and honest words. Congress ought to rip up this Louisiana outrage to the very bottom. It should not be suffered to stand as an unrebuked precedent in our political history.—Independent.

Long Tour in the Indian Country.

MR. EDITOR: By the good providence of God I find myself at home again, after a long tour in the Indian country, leaving home on the sixteenth of April and returning on the fourth of June. During that period I visited most of the towns and some of the prominent settlements in the Indian Territory. I am glad to say that we are holding our own everywhere and in some places we can report progress. I attended two District Conferences, one at Boggy Depot, for the Chickasaw district, and our Creek District Conference at North Fork. I have promised to attend the Cherokee District Conference on the nineteenth and twentieth of July, at Muddy Spring.

I had also the pleasure of attending the grand council of all the tribes, which met at Okmulkee on the seventh of May, and closed on the fifteenth of the same month. The design of Congress in ordering this council was doubtless to influence the tribes to form and adopt a constitution for the Indian Territory. This is the third session they have held; two years ago they did adopt a constitution and sent it round to the local councils, but it was rejected. Twelve of the tribes were represented in the last council, viz.: Choctaws, Creeks, Cherokees, Wyandottes, Ottawas, Senecas, Eastern Shawnees, Absentee Shawnees, Quapaw, Sacs and Foxes, Confederate Peorias, etc., and Miamis. Major Hogne, the superintendent of Indian affairs, presided. In opening the council he urged upon them the importance of adopting for themselves a constitution; that in the event of a failure on their part Congress would in all probability adopt one for them. All they did, however, was to adopt the old constitution and send round to the different tribes, to be ratified or rejected, as the case proper.

The number of Indians present on that occasion gave me the opportunity of preaching to them several nights, and also on the Sabbath. The council house was crowded at every appointment, and on the Sabbath crowds stood round the windows to listen to the story of the cross. I preached all the time through an interpreter. I was disappointed in not seeing the Indians from the plains or grand prairies—none of them came in to the last session.

There were but two Indians present that had a savage appearance, the Sacs and Foxes—hair cut close, faces painted and a red blanket wrapped round them. I felt a desire to converse with them, so the interpreter was called up, when the following questions and answers passed between us, viz.: I said, "Do you believe in the existence of the Great Spirit?" "Certainly I do; everybody believes that." "Do you believe in the immortality of the soul?" "Don't know." "Do you believe there is a heaven for good people to go to when they die?" "Don't know anything about it." "Where do you think bad people go to when they die?" "Down in the ground, I reckon." "Do not all people, good and bad, go down in the ground when they die?" "Yes, for awhile." The other Indian sitting by said to the interpreter that he wished to talk to me some. I answered that I would be glad to hear him. So he commenced interrogating me: "You white people got good book—teach you all good things?" "Yes, we have that book." "Then tell me why it is that you have so many more bad white men among you than we have bad Indians among us?" Now, Mr. Editor, was not that a poser? All that I could say was: "I am sorry to say that we have a great many bad people among us; we also have many good people among us." To which he made no reply—perhaps did not believe it.

The superintendent informed me that a white man some time before made an effort to give one of the tribe a history of the introduction of sin into the world—that it was the devil that tempted Eve to violate God's law—to which the Indian replied: "I know that was a white woman; if it had been an Indian woman she would have gathered a club and run him off." So you see that these red men have strong prejudice against the white race, even charge them with all the wickedness there is in the world. Indeed a large majority have a strong opposition to mixing with the whites. They dislike to give up their nationality.

One of the delegates came to me, and in broken English said: "White man give Indian Bible?" "Yes, we give you the Bible." "Bible say anything about running off land?" "No, nothing at all." "Bible say anything about territorial bill?" "No, not a word on the subject." "Bible good book; territorial bill mighty bad; make Indian pay taxes; if he got no money, take land from him." So you see the opposition these people have to becoming citizens of the United States. Peace to you and yours.—J. Harrell, in Western Methodist.

VAN BUREN, ARK., June 16, 1873.

LITTLE ERRANDS.—A good deacon was accustomed to pray, "Lord, make us willing to run on little errands for thee," and it is a prayer which it would be well for many persons whom we know to adopt. They want to do some great thing for Christ, we verily believe, but in waiting for the gracious opportunity they, alas, in the meantime do nothing for him. We should do for the Master whatever our hands find to do, and do it with our might—run on little errands as well as great, run as fast as we can, and do them as well as we can.

GRIEVE NOT THE SPIRIT.

Oh, grieve him not away!
That sacred Spirit, inward pleading;
Not always will he stay
If thou resist his holy leading.
He calls thee now;
To Jesus bow;
O soul, for thee the Lord hung bleeding!

A crown is on that brow;
For thee, O sinner, is that dear head wounded!
Canst thou not see it now,
That loving face with thorns surrounded?
Accursed for thee
Upon the tree,
The blessed One in whom all grace abounded.

He knocketh yet once more,
Where many a time, with dewy face and sighing,
He's called to thee before;
Ah! what, O soul, was thy replying?
"Oh, go thy way!
Some far-off day
I'll listen to thy tears, thy groans, thy dying."

A time will surely come
When thou, O soul, thy Lord denying,
Shalt meet him in his home,
And see the throne, the angels lowly lying.
In that sad day
The Judge will say:
"Depart, accursed, thou heedest not my dying."

Then grieve him not away;
Once more those wounds, that dear side riven,
Are calling thee to-day.
Stay not, but seek—implore to be forgiven.
Now he will hear—
His Spirit's near—
The angel waits to write thy name in heaven.

The Desert Island.

TRANSLATED FROM THE GERMAN OF JEAN PAUL RICHTER.

Once a wealthy and benevolent man, wishing to make one of his slaves happy, gave him his freedom, and allowed him to fit out a vessel with costly wares. "Go," said he, "and sail to a foreign land, trade with these wares, and all the profits shall be yours."

The slave departed, but he was scarcely at sea before a violent storm arose, and the ship, dashing upon a rock, was wrecked. The costly wares sunk in the sea, all his crew perished, and he himself arrived, with the greatest difficulty, on the shores of an island.

Hungry, naked, and without any aid, he proceeded farther inland, weeping over his misfortune, when lo! in the distance he saw a great city, out of which a crowd of the inhabitants came to meet him with loud shouts of "Long live our king!" They set him on a magnificent chariot and conducted him into the city. He arrived at the royal palace, where he was clothed in regal robes of purple, with a diadem upon his brow, and was allowed to ascend a throne of gold.

The nobles and people of rank, gathering around him, knelt down and swore, in the name of the whole people, the oath of allegiance to him.

At first the new king believed all this splendor to be only a beautiful dream, until the continuation of his happiness banished all further doubt. "I cannot comprehend," said he to himself, "what has enchanted the eyes of this wonderful people, that they should make a naked stranger their king. They know not who I am, they ask not from whence I come, and yet they place me upon their throne. What is this for a remarkable custom in this land?"

Thus he wondered, and asked one of the nobles at his court, who appeared to be a wise man, for the solution of this riddle. "Vizier," he said, "why have you made me your king? How did you know that I had arrived upon your island? What is to become of me?" "Sire," answered the grand vizier, "this island is inhabited by fairies. They have for a long time prayed to the Almighty to send them a son of Adam to reign over them. He has answered their prayer, and arranges that every year, on the same day, a mortal lands on their island. The inhabitants, as thou hast seen, hasten to meet him, and joyfully receive him for their sovereign. But his reign lasts no longer than one year. When this time has elapsed he is deposed, stripped of his kingly attire, and, clad in poor garments, his servants carry him by force to the shore, where he is placed in a ship which bears him away to another island, barren and desolate. He who but a few days ago was a mighty monarch arrives here naked, and finds neither subjects nor friends. No one can share his unhappy lot, and he must lead a sad and dreary existence on this desert island if he has not spent his year prudently. After the banishment the people go forth joyfully to meet the new king, in like manner as formerly. This, sire, is the immutable law of this realm, which no sovereign can abolish."

"And were my predecessors," the king asks further, "also instructed of the short duration of their power?"

"Not one was ignorant of this unalterable law," answered the vizier; "but some allowed themselves to be dazzled by the splendor that surrounded the throne, so that they forgot the sad future, and trifled away their time. Others became intoxicated with the sweetness of their happiness; they dared not think of the desert island for fear of embittering the delight of their present enjoyment, and so they reeled, like drunkards, from one pleasure to another, until their years were spent, and they were sent away in the vessel. When the unhappy day arrived they all were seen to bewail their lot, and sigh over their blindness, but only when it was too late, and they were without mercy abandoned to that misery which they failed to prevent."

This story filled the king with fear. He shuddered at the fate of the former kings, and wished to avoid their unhappiness. He saw with consternation that already a week of his short year had passed, and that therefore he must hasten to make better use of the remaining days of his reign. "O wise vizier," said he to the fairy, "thou hast revealed to me my future fate and the short duration of my royalty; but tell me also, I pray thee, what I must do to escape the misery of my predecessors."

"Sire," replied the fairy, "remember, naked thou camest to our island, and even so again must thou go hence, and never more return. There is, however, a means to escape the want which follows banishment, viz.; thou must fertilize the island and till it with inhabitants. This is permitted by our law, and your subjects are so perfectly obedient to your will that they will go wherever you send them. Send thither, therefore, a number of workmen, and let the barren fields be changed into fruitful acres; build also cities, magazines, and provide them with all the necessary means of life; in a word, prepare for yourself another kingdom, whose people shall joyfully receive you after your banishment. But hasten, for the time is short, and the more thou dost for the improvement of thy future abode, so much the happier will be thy residence there. Think as if thy year ended to-morrow; use thy freedom like a fugitive who would escape destruction. But if thou despise my advice, or tarriest, thou art lost, and long misery is thy lot."

The king was a prudent man, and the discourse of the fairy gave wings to his resolution and activity. He immediately sent off a number of workmen, who departed willingly and set to work with zeal. The island soon found itself tilled and beautified, and ere six moons were past, behold! already there stood a city among its blooming pastures. But still the king allowed no cessation to his zeal; he continually sent thither more colonists. These last departed yet more willingly than the first, because they went to a cultivated land, where dwelt their friends and kindred.

Meanwhile the end of the year ever drew nearer. The former kings had trembled before this moment, but this one met it with longing, for he would go to a land where, by his industry, he had built for himself a lasting abode. The appointed day came at last. The king was seized in his palace, deprived of his royal robes and crown, and placed in that inevitable ship which was to bear him away to his exile. But hardly was he landed on the shores of the new island when the people hastened toward him with joy, loaded him with honors, and for every diadem of that splendor which lasted but for a year he was crowned with a never-fading wreath of flowers.

The Almighty rewarded him for his wisdom; he gave him the immortality of his subjects, and made him their king forevermore.

MORAL.

The rich and benevolent man represents God; the slave whom his master sent away is mankind by his birth; the island where he landed is the world; the inhabitants who came joyfully to meet him are his parents, anxious concerning him, naked and weeping; the vizier who awaits him and instructs him of his sad destiny is wisdom; the year of his reign is his human life, and the desert island whither he must be carried is the future world; the workmen that he sends thither are his good works, which he performs during his mortal life. But the kings who have passed away before him, not heeding the unhappiness which threatened them, are the foolish men who occupy themselves with mere earthly joys, without ever thinking upon the life which follows death. They must suffer eternal punishment, because they appear before the throne of God with hands empty of good works.

PERDITA.

Mary and Martha.

All the words of Jesus, whether spoken to friend or foe, have a significance and an applicability to all times. Mary and Martha were his friends in the quiet retreat of Bethany. They had the tenderest regard for him. But there are none perfect, and even with these he finds an occasion to rebuke sin, as well as to reward virtue. Jesus was here on a visit, during which time, the narrative says, "Martha was cumbered about much serving," while Mary "sat at Jesus' feet and heard his words." Martha, becoming worried, came to Jesus with a complaint that she had to serve alone, when he replied in these words: "Martha, Martha, thou art careful and troubled about many things; but one thing is needful, and Mary hath chosen that good part, which shall not be taken away from her."

Martha and Mary are representative characters—Martha, the busy and perplexed worldling; Mary, the devout and venerating Christian. If we scrutinize these characters in the light of the divine penellings we may obtain a most profitable view of the distinctions drawn between them.

Martha was burdened with care. A morbid, worldly anxiety had supplanted entirely the religious sentiment. She had set her heart on accomplishing certain objects pertaining to the reception, without due deference to religious duty. She took an extremely worldly view of what an entertainment of a distinguished guest implied. It is the nature of sin to deceive. It causes us to engage in labor with the wrong spirit. It makes labor a drudgery. It encourages a wrong view of the object for which wealth is acquired. It fosters a mistaken notion of true responsibility.

But add to the toil of her hands the stress of her mind, and you have another of the characteristic evils of sin. Where there is a strong need felt, there is a corresponding anxiety for its accomplishment. There are doubts which harass, disappointments which irritate.

And again, in addition to the mean service and the hardened heart, there are "many things" which rise up for their share of attention, and distract the mind. These claims conflict one with another, and send the effects of their contradictions to the soul, destroying all settled policy, and consequently all peace.

But we turn now to consider the other side of the picture—the beautiful and the blessed. Mary had chosen the good part. Hers was the true entertainment. We do not indorse the opinion now that there is no religion in service, neither will we hold with those who believe that Mary was derelict in any respect in this entertainment. If she was, certainly the discriminating mind of that Guest ought to have pointed it out. There is no general, stereotyped form of entertainment. Entertainment to one guest would not be entertainment to another. The same honor is not honor to every one alike. Although the Son of Man ate and drank, yet that was not the object of his coming. A painful solicitude about attending to every little want renders a guest unpleasant. There was much more honor paid to Jesus by listening to his words and receiving blessing from his lips than in looking after his temporal wants. It was his meat and drink to do his Father's will. He who fasted forty days, on a different occasion, could fast one day on this.

But the "good part" which Mary had chosen goes further than this occasion of Jesus' entertainment. She had obtained the true secret of paying honor to her divine Lord, and, in a merely æsthetical point of view, deserves all the praise. But the question has a practical bearing in every business of life, and it is in this respect that its chief goodness consists. In this blessed office Mary stands as a type of every devoted follower of Jesus. Long before the coming of Christ in human flesh, and ever since, have men known how to entertain him, and have experienced the blessed fruits of such entertainment. It is nothing more than bestowing the greatest honor of which immortal souls are capable—not earthly gifts; not making the path of life smooth (for he must be acquainted with grief;) not even crying, Hosanna to the King! It is giving the heart—surrendering all to him, making him Lord of all. This is the "one thing needful." Jesus demands nothing but the heart. When that is obtained the devil is defeated, the flesh is subdued, angels rejoice, Heaven comes down on earth! And when Jesus says, "which shall not be taken away," we imagine he means, "No good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly," for this is a consequence. Solomon prayed for "wisdom," and he received also "riches and honor." David "never knew the righteous forsaken." The Savior says that if we "seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness all these things shall be added." St. Paul says: "Godliness is profitable for all things." M.

Collegiate Institute, Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: We have just enjoyed another of those rich feasts afforded by the annual exhibition of this excellent institution. I wish I could supply your lack, and that of your readers who were not present, by such a description of the occasion as it merits; but my pen is inadequate to the task of transferring to paper the picture which lies with such enchanting beauty upon my heart. I can at best give but a brief outline of some of its features.

These exercises usually take place in the open air, as no ordinary room could contain the people who attend them; besides, it is more pleasant at this season of the year. It rained up to a late hour of the appointed evening, preventing many, no doubt, from attending, yet the beautifully illuminated grounds were thronged with people, who were comfortably seated in a crescent form, before an ample stage, near which our home band sat and discoursed, ever and anon, delightful music. Upon this stage each young orator stood forth, in his turn, under a beautiful arch of gas-jets, and rendered his piece in a style of elocution that could hardly be excelled. I express not only my own conviction, but also the avowed opinion of men of the first intelligence and best culture among us—some of them ranking high as orators themselves—when I say that the students of our Collegiate Institute exhibited on this occasion a degree of cultivation in the art of elocution rarely reached by the same number of students, of their several ages, in any institution. From the golden-haired little chap who, donning his apron and cap, rendered "I'm a little boy," to the full-grown young man, with his side-whiskers, thundering his appeal as to a spell-bound senate—they each seemed the best; so uniformly excellent were all the efforts, and so manifestly fine the judgment displayed in the selection and assignment of the several parts. Elegant taste was shown in the selections, and wonderful adaptation was manifest in the various assignments. I wish, Mr. Editor, you could have heard the inimitable rendering of "Tell me, ye winged winds," by that little orator—the youngest son of our mutual friend and brother, ——. But I must not go into particulars, as I am not attempting a description. It will not, however, be invidious to mention the two original orations of the occasion: "Louisiana and her Destiny," by J. E. Davis, and "Study of the Classics," by W. H. Magruder. These compositions were of a high order, and were spoken in a style of oratory which inspired the friends of these young men with high hopes of their future. An incident occurred during these exercises, affording an opportunity for a display of generalship of the highest order. You know we were all seated in the open air, beneath the spreading trees and amidst the sparkling light of many brilliant jets, which rendered the scene so fairy-like that even your prosy correspondent was conscious of something like the glow of a poetic fire. This, however, was soon effectually cooled, for about midway of the exercises, without the least wavering and just as a brave young orator was stepping to the front, the rain poured down. In a twinkling the master of ceremonies said to the excited multitude: "Go to the school-room." Never was a military order more promptly obeyed; and never did a general achieve a more masterly retreat, and turn it into a victory more handsomely than Prof. Magruder did on this occasion. But a few minutes elapsed before the band was again dispensing sweet music, and then the orators were on the stage, discoursing, in their turn, to as many as could find standing-room in the large hall of the Institute. The interest was fully maintained to the last, and the large assembly dismissed in order with the benediction. I must say I never saw any one put through a programme as successfully as Prof. Magruder did on this occasion. But this must suffice for the exhibition, as I want to say, in this connection, a few things about this school, which, I think, ought to be more widely known.

The Collegiate Institute is situated in the suburbs of Baton Rouge, on elevated grounds of ample dimensions and delightfully shaded. It is the elegant and pleasant home of Bro. W. H. N. Magruder, where from thirty to forty boys and young men have, during the past year, lived as the children of one family. I never saw a more orderly and gentlemanly set of youths anywhere. They have regularly attended the Sabbath school and church. I have often met them in the social circle, and everywhere they have impressed me with their excellence and good behavior. Every parent who has had to send his son from home to be educated has felt, perhaps, more anxiety about the moral character and habits of his child than anything else. I know of no school where young men would be more under a home-like influence and where they would have more incentives to maintain a high order of moral character than at the Collegiate Institute. Here they live in the midst of a Christian family, and are taught by Christian men, who seem to sacrifice everything to a conscientious discharge of duty.

The well-known capacity and character of Prof. Magruder as a veteran educator renders it unnecessary for me to say anything upon this point. The school is of the highest order, the instruction thorough, and the teachers faithful and laborious. I have spoken particularly of the moral and social advantages of this school, because I have learned to know the value of this feature, and have been impressed with its prominence in connection with this institution. But, lest I weary you and your readers, I leave unsaid much that I would like to say about this school, and close by saying that if I had a son to educate from home I know of no place I had rather send him than into the Christian family of Prof. W. H. N. Magruder, of the Collegiate Institute, Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

Selling Spirituous Liquors.

MR. EDITOR: The selling or giving away of spirituous liquors, except for strictly medicinal purposes, is a subject frequently discussed in our periodicals, and one, I think, that should be thoroughly investigated. That it is productive of an incalculable amount of evil is too patent to be denied. How shall the evil be removed? This is a question of no small magnitude. One says: "Bring the law of the church to bear upon members engaged in the sale of intoxicating drinks." Here two important questions present themselves:

1. What law?
2. Against what class of dealers?

In answer to the first question some very confidently refer you to our general rules. Let us briefly examine particular heads of the general rules, under which some think such offenders should be arraigned. These are two:

1. "Doing no harm."
2. "Doing what we know is not for the glory of God."

Under these heads several particulars are specified. Under the first: "Taking the name of God in vain, profaning the day of the Lord, drunkenness," etc. Under the second: "Putting on gold and costly apparel, softness," etc. There is certainly here no specific rule under which one may be tried for the offense under consideration.

Do these rules lay down moral principles under which such offenders can be arraigned and tried? Here we may expect a variety of opinion, especially in the application of these principles to different persons in different localities. This brings me to notice the second question. To what class of dealers shall these principles apply? Shall they apply to the distillers; to the wholesale grocer, who sells from one to ten thousand barrels annually; to the commission merchant, who purchases for a hundred retailers, or only to the inferior venders?

I have not yet given my opinion, which I now proceed to do, whether it be regarded as worth anything or not. I will, however, preface my opinion with regard to the proper course to be pursued by saying that it is no new evil that we are combatting, but one under which the church has suffered for more than a century. Our present efforts to free ourselves from the evil show that we are improving, not retrograding. To free ourselves from this sum of all evils let preachers, all preachers, speak out plainly upon this subject. Let the trumpet give no uncertain sound. Let our next General Conference either enact a specific law upon this subject, or make a specific declaration of its opinion with regard to the application of the principles of our general rules to the traffic in intoxicating drinks. Let there be no distinction with regard to different classes of dealers.

I do not know but it would be well for prominent men to be required, as the politicians say, to "show their hands" before delegates are elected to our next General Conference.

JOHN C. HUCKABEE.

CANEY, TEXAS, June, 1873.

LIKE most garments, like most carpets, everything in life has a right side and a wrong side. You can take any joy, and, by turning it around, find troubles on the other side; or you may take the greatest trouble, and, by turning it around, find joys on the other side. The gloomiest mountain never casts a shadow on both sides at once, nor does the greatest of life's calamities.

"Descend, O sinner, to the gloom!
Hear the deep judgment-knell
Send forth its terror-shrieking sound,
These walls of adamant around,
And filling to its utmost bound
Thy woeful, woeful hell.

"Depart, O sinner, to the chain!
Enter th' eternal cell;
To all that's good and true and right,
To all that's fond and fair and bright,
To all of holiness and light,
Bid thou thy last farewell."

Obituaries.

DIED, at his residence in Livingston, Alabama, June 1, 1873, HENRY OTTO VOSS, who was born in Berlinchen, Prussia, March, 26, 1840, and at the time of his death had just completed his thirty-third year. At the age of ten years he came with his parents to America, and settled near Covington, Louisiana, where he resided until the beginning of the late war. Having served through the war as a Confederate soldier, he came soon after its close to Livingston, Alabama, and began business as a merchant. On the eighth of December, 1869, he was married to Miss Bettie Mason, who survives him. About three years before his death he contracted pulmonary consumption, which resulted in his death.

It is the religious life of this estimable man that deserves our notice. He first made a profession of religion in 1861 or 1862, while in the Confederate army, and although he had no opportunity at that time of uniting with the church, yet during all those years of privation, hardship and temptation, such as undermined the religious life of many, he held fast the profession of his faith. In 1867 he joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South at Livingston. From the very first he took a prominent part in all the enterprises of the church. He was a man of marked piety and deep devotion, who carried his religious convictions and principles with him into his business, and was recognized as a citizen of sterling integrity and great worth. As a Sunday school teacher he was in every way efficient, always being punctual in meeting his class, and ready to impart instruction.

Soon after uniting with the church he was elected a steward, which position he held until his death; and in this position none were more faithful than he.

Two years before his death Bro. Voss was appointed a class-leader, and it was here that his purity of spirit always shone brightest. At the first class meeting before his death he bore this testimony, the remembrance of which now comforts our hearts:

"Brethren, I tested the religion of Christ when I was in health, and found it full of enjoyment, and a source of strength when I was tempted. I am now testing it in affliction, and I find it full of comfort and consolation, and it is the will of God for me to die. I have no doubt his grace will be sufficient for me." How valuable this testimony to those who were acquainted with his beautiful and consistent life!

Even to the last he was ever ready to speak of the mercy of God, and when the power of speech had left him his eyes would fill with the tears of joyful anticipation at the mention of heaven and the reward of the righteous. His pastor,

J. M. MASON.

CAPTAIN J. E. HAWKINS was born in Perry county, Alabama, May 1, 1831; united with the Methodist Episcopal Church South when sixteen years of age; was married to Miss Paralee Self at the age of twenty, with whom he lived agreeably nineteen years, when death dissolved the happy union. He died at Canton, Van Zandt county, on the twenty-fifth ultimo, and was brought to the Marshall Cemetery, where, in the presence of a large concourse of people, he was buried with the usual solemnities of Masonic honors. Mr. Hawkins removed from Alabama to Natchitoches parish, Louisiana, where he lived five years; then removed to Mansfield, where he served in the Southern army as post quartermaster until the close of the late war. He then engaged in the mercantile business in that place until August, 1869, when he removed to Hallville, Texas, where, by his untiring effort, he greatly assisted in promoting the early prosperity of the town—was active in her commercial and educational interests. By an honest and upright course he gained the confidence of those who knew him most intimately.

He originated a Sabbath school, numbering but a few scholars at first, which increased, under his fostering superintendency to more than eighty scholars, all of whom were greatly endeared to him. He removed to the city of Marshall in the fall of 1871. A good man has fallen. It has seldom fell to the lot of the writer to record a death so much lamented as that of Bro. Hawkins. To say that he was a good man simply would not be sufficiently expressive; he was an active, energetic, persevering, good man, with head, heart and hands enlisted in doing good wherever his services were called into requisition to promote the welfare of the public. Such was his philanthropic and enterprising spirit that he at once pushed forward the initiative to the consummation of salutary results.

Whenever the church of his early choice needed his counsels or his financial aid he responded with liberality and without hesitation. The ministers of the gospel of all denominations will not soon forget how cordially they were received and how pleasantly entertained by him. He served the church as steward for many years, setting the members an example of liberality, and pressing the claims of the gospel upon their hearts and purses every way worthy their imitation; he was never too busy to attend his Quarterly Conferences, and always ready to give an account of his stewardship. He had piety enough to pray in his family, and when called upon, in the congregation. The crape worn by his brother Masons, and the resolutions adopted by the fraternity, show how much he was endeared to them and their benevolent order. His greatly bereaved companion reached the room of [illegible] two days before his [illegible] happy spirit took its flight [illegible] clime. He had a strong [illegible] at home in the presence [illegible] children at Marshall, [illegible] than resignation submi[illegible] of his heavenly Fa[illegible] him was not a fallu[illegible] useful; success e[illegible] efforts with a con[illegible] and family. He was of great price".

God in youth. For twenty-three years he exemplified his faith by his works, and died a peaceful, glorious and triumphant death.

He will be missed in the walks of life; his seat will be vacant in the house of God; we are no longer to enjoy his genial smiles, nor to be benefitted by his counsels; most of all will he be missed in his own dear domestic circle by his bereaved companion and sorrowing children. When such a man dies society sustains a heavy loss.

May God bind up the wounds of this stricken family, and prepare the widow and orphans for a happy reunion in heaven.

DANIEL MORSE.

MARSHALL, June 16, 1873.

MRS. MARIA MILLER LOWRY, wife of General Robert Lowry, and daughter of Bartlett V. Gammon, Esq., was born in Dallas county, Alabama, June 20, 1831; was married on the ninth of September, 18[illegible], and died at Brandon, Mississippi, on the eighteenth of June, 1873.

In her childhood her parents moved to Jasper county, Mississippi, near Montrose, where she received the instruction of Chancellor Wardell, who was then the principal of Montrose Academy, under whose direction she acquired the most practical and useful part of her education.

In her religious sentiments she was a Methodist, and was a member of that communion many years.

She was the mother of thirteen children, eleven of whom survive her.

Having briefly given these facts, it is but proper to speak more particularly of her superior intellect and those noble and excellent traits of character which she was known to possess. She possessed an extraordinary mind—it was vigorous and comprehensive. The details of every-day domestic life did not enfeeble nor circumscribe its range. She was always equal to any emergency where sound, discriminating judgment was required, and was capable of taking a just and correct view of all questions of practical life. Her mind seemed at once to comprehend a subject in all its details and bearings.

She was remarkable for energy and industry and force of character. Her qualities of mind and heart shone conspicuously during the late war. Though devoted to her husband, yet when he obeyed his country's call and repaired to the battle-field she indulged in no vain regrets, but yielded to the necessity of the time like a true Southern woman, and throughout the struggle cheered and comforted him, without complaining at the hardship which separated them and devolved the care of the family upon her. Their family was large and all girls, but her remarkable energy, industry and sound judgment enabled her to discharge her duty to them to the fullest extent.

To her family she was devoted. As a wife she was all that a fond and devoted husband could desire. Not only did she perform, with singular tact and ability, all the duties of the household, from the greatest to the least, and study and promote the pleasure and happiness of her husband, but she was his companion and counselor and friend. He confided to her all his plans—from him he concealed nothing—and she rewarded his confidence by her affectionate counsel, based upon sound judgment. No man ever had more confidence in the judgment of his wife than he had in hers, and no woman was ever more entitled to it. As a mother she was assiduous and untiring to promote the comfort and welfare of her children. No woman would have made greater sacrifices for her children.

No lady dispensed a more generous hospitality or made her guests feel more at ease. She was a true friend, a good neighbor, and was kind and charitable to the poor.

Amid the cares and responsibilities of her domestic life she so economized her time as to be able to devote her energies to her church; and the beautiful edifice that has recently been erected in this place will be an enduring monument to the zeal and efforts of the ladies in behalf of the Master, among whom was no more zealous and efficient than the deceased.

In all efforts to promote the interests of her church she was among the first, and labored with zeal and energy. She was religious from principle. She believed in the truths of our holy Christianity, and united with that branch of the church whose doctrines and economy accorded with her views. Yet she had a catholic spirit that loved Christians of all denominations. In her death her church has lost one of its most useful and efficient members, society one of its brightest ornaments, and her family have sustained a loss which is irreparable; yet all are sustained by the assurance that her life gave that she is now in the land of eternal joy and happiness.

She had been in declining health for some weeks, but no one believed she was so dangerously ill; and when the summons came she passed away gently and sweetly without a struggle! If she was not permitted to converse with her family in her last moments, she had by her daily walk and conversation—by precept and example—given them the highest evidence of her life and character, and shown to them the influence which religion exerts upon the dying, and how it soothes and comforts the soul in the dying hour. May God comfort them in their affliction, and may we all remember the

"They mourn the dead who live as they die."

A FRIEND.

NO MAN is so happy as a true Christian; none so rational, so virtuous, so amiable. How little value does he feel, though he believes himself united to God! How far is he from abjectedness when he rates himself with the worms of the earth!

IN PROSPERITY we need moderation; in adversity, patience.

HE THAT speaks ill of others burns his own tongue.

NO SECTS IN HEAVEN.

A DREAM FROM AN ENGLISH POEM.

alking of sects till late one eve,
f the various doctrines the saints believe,
hat night I stood to a troubled dream,
y the side of a darkly-flowing stream.

od a "Churchman" down to the river came;
Then I heard a strange voice call his name:
ood father, stop; when you cross this tide ou must leave your robes on the other side."

et the aged father did not mind, nd his long gown floated on behind
s down to the stream his way he took,
is pale hand clasping a gilt-edged book.

n bound for heaven, and when I'm there shall want my Book of Common Prayer;
nd, though I put on a starry crown, shall feel quite lost without my gown."

hen he fixed his eyes on the shining track, ut his gown was heavy and held him back;
nd the poor old father tried in vain single step in the flood to gain.

saw him again on the other side,
ut his silk gown floated on the tide;
nd no one asked, in that blissful spot,
Whether he belonged to "the church" or not.

hes down in the river a Quaker strayed;
is dress of a sober hue was made;
coat and hat must be all of gray;
cannot go any other way."

hen he buttoned his coat straight up to his chin, nd stably, solemnly waded in;
nd his broad-brimmed hat he jerked down tight ver his forehead so cold and white.

n a strong wind carried away his hat;
moment he silently sighed over that,
nd then, as he gazed on the further shore, is coat slipped off, and was seen no more.

e entered heaven his suit of gray ent quietly sailing away, away;
nd name of the angels questioned him bout the width of his beaver's brim.

nd after him, with his MSS.,
ohn Wesley, the pattern of godliness;
ll he cried: "Dear me, what shall I do?
he water has soaked them through and through."

nd there on the river, far and wide, way they went down the swollen tide;
nd like saint, astonished, passed through alone,
ithout his manuscripts, up to the throne.

hen gravely walking, two saints by name, own to the stream together came;
t as they stopped at the river's brink saw one saint from the other shrink.

rinkled or plunged, may I ask you, friend, ow you attained to life's great end?"
ne, with a few drops on my brow."
t I have been dipped, as you'll see me now.

nd I really think it will hardly do,
I'm 'close communion,' to cross with you;
on're bound, I know, to the realms of bliss,
e you must go that way, and I'll go this."

hen, straightway plunging with all his might, way to the left, his friend to the right,
part they went from this world of sin,
t at last together they entered in.

nd now, when the river was rolling on,
Presbyterian Church went down;
women there seemed an innumerable throng,
d the men I could count as they passed along.

nd concerning the road they could never agree;
e Old or the New way, which it could be;
or ever a moment paused to think at both would lead to the river's brink.

nd a song of murmuring long and loud me up from the moving crowd:
on're in the old way, and I'm in the new;
at is the false, and this is the true."
: "I'm in the old way, and ye n're in the new;
at is the false, and this is the true."

t the brethren only seemed to speak;
odest the sisters walked and meek, nd if ever one of them chanced to say hat troubles she met with on the way, ow she longed to pass to the other side,
or feared to cross over the swelling tide, voice arose from the brethren then:
et no one speak but the 'holy men:'
or have ye not heard the words of Paul,
i, let the women keep silence all?"

watched them, in my curious dream, ll they stood by the border of the stream,
hen, just as I thought, the two ways met;
t all the brethren were talking yet, nd would talk on till the heaving tide ried them over side by side:
de by side, for the way was one,
e toilsome journey of life was done,
nd all who in Christ the Savior died, me out alike on the other side.
o forms or crosses or books had they,
o gowns of silk or suits of gray,
o creeds to guide them, or MSS., or all had put on Christ's righteousness.

A Petrified Forest.

On the western horizon of the Lyan Desert, as viewed from the mmit of the Great Pyramid of izeh, a conical hill stands in soliry grandeur, far removed from the ute of desert travelers. This has g been supposed to be the ruins of pyramid, yet nowhere is it recorded have been visited by any but the edouin tribes who pass within a w miles of it, on the old caravan ute to the Faloom. It is enumer-ed by Lepsius as one of the pyraids of Egypt, and in a recent work the Great Pyramid it is called Dr.
lder's Pyramid, "until a better me be found for it," merely from having been pointed out to the thor by the late Dr. Lelder, of iro, who, however, had never sited it.

The following narrative of a visit tho eminence by Mr. Waynman xon, engineer, and Dr. Grant, of iro, and of their discovery of a ry remarkable petrified forest near base, whose gigantic trees lie ttered about the desert in pro-sion, has been communicated to us the former gentleman:

"Leaving the pyramids behind,
d lighted by the clear, silvery oonlight, we set out into the desert the caravan route to the Faioom, ading up a solitary valley, in the eks of which are cut ancient gyptian tanks and mummy-pits.
resently we turn off from the regur track and take our way into the frequented desert, steering straight estward for the pyramidal hill.
he sand of the desert is here hard
d compact, and traveling easy; deed, with the exception of one or o places where the sand is soft and avy, a wheeled carriage might ive all the way, and to most travers would be much preferable to mel or even donkey-riding.

"After many hours' hard riding e at last reach the top of a slight minence, and across the wide valley front of us is the place of our des-nation.

"These long valleys, or 'wadys,' ve much of interest about them;
roughout may be seen the dry ater-courses where the rare rainowers carry down the sand into e bed, and leave all the little hills d eminences covered with flints as g as potatoes, and with surfaces so ightly polished as to give the desert silvery look by moonlight, or by y to cause the appearance of riped water where they reflect the nlight. The zoology and botany,
, of the desert are very interest-
g. There are numbers of the little er boa,' a species of rat, with long nd legs and long tail with a tuft of r at its end, which hops about ke a kangaroo. Now and then may seen a gazelle or two scampering
f at the unusual sight of a caravan.
few small birds get a precarious istence, and in the sky an eagle or vulture sometimes wings its way. The insects are few, and the herbage is extremely scant, and it is a marvel what the animals live on. There are here and there in the water-courses small tufts of camel-thorn—a little shrub not unlike a whip—another with a coral-like growth, and now and then a handful of a tough, wiry sort of grass, but what these again subsist on it is hard to say, for there is not a shower more than once or twice a year, and for nine months there is no dew, while the heat of the sand at midday in summer is over one hundred degrees.

"Arrived at our destination before daybreak, we dismount from our camels, and while the Bedouins are unloading the baggage, we hasten as fast as our legs, still with camel-riding, will permit, up the heaps of sand and flints to the summit of the so-called pyramid, to find on attaining it that it is but the conical end of a prism-shaped hill, stretching westward, and standing boldly out of the desert plain.

"Near the top the rock crops out, and appears to be a species of friable sandstone fretted by the weather into curious shapes; but the actual summit is covered with flints and sand, and, what strikes one as being very strange, many fragments of petrified wood.

"Taking a general survey from this point of vantage, we choose the best spot to the north of the hill to pitch our camp, exposed to the slight north wind which blows incessantly here; and, descending its steep sides, at the bottom are surprised to find near the chosen spot three large stone-trees lying prostrate on the sand. The largest is fifty-one feet in length and three feet six inches in diameter at its widest end, and two feet at its smallest; they are branching exogenous trees, apparently a species of pine, and the one before us has the fork of a large branch very complete.

"Wandering on up the wady to the north of the hill, named by us 'Kom el Khashob'—the hill of wood—we find the whole desert littered with fragments of petrified wood, from twigs the size of one's finger to pieces of large branches or trunks of trees; and on the flank of the hill to the north are hundreds of immense trees, lying half buried in the sand, some seventy feet long, and in many instances with part of the bark still attached. All of them are exogenous trees—no single instance of a palm could we discover—and from the absence of roots it may be presumed have been drifted here by the sea. The stratum is apparently sandstone, overlying the limestone of the Nile valley; there are also here and there patches of a dark chocolate-colored, friable mineral with specks of green which looked like copper, but proved, on subsequent analysis, to be carbonate of iron; beds of what the Arabs call 'Gyps' or gypsum, and nodules of an intensely hard black granulated-looking stone—not unlike emery-stone—the whole geological character suggesting the (possibly delusive) suspicion of the existence of coal under the surface.

"Having carefully surveyed this neighborhood, we again climbed the 'Kom el Khashob,' taking instruments to measure its height and determine its position; the former of which we found to be seven hundred and fifty-two feet above the Nile level at Cairo, six hundred and two feet above the northeast socket of the Great Pyramid, and consequently about one hundred and forty feet higher than its summit.

"Having secured one or two skeletons of the hill, and the sun being now near setting, we 'fold up our tents like the Arabs, and silently steal away.' Mounting our camels again, and taking a slightly different route on our return, we pass some ancient solitary well-tombs away in the desert, but without mark or hieroglyphic inscription on them. All the way we notice fragments of petrified wood, and near to the pyramids extensive beds of oyster-shells. This forest may almost be said to be a continuation—doubtless going much farther westward than we penetrated—of the well-known petrified forest in the Abbasieh Desert to the east of Cairo, which extends a long way in the direction of Suez, but is inferior both in extent and in the size and perfectness of the trees to that of the newly-discovered forest. The formation of the land here would lead to the supposition that it has been the ancient coast-line, and that the trees drifted to where they are now found, and were then left in the briny waters of an evaporating sea or salt lake; and, as the fiber of the wood decayed slowly away, the space of each cell has been filled up by the crystallizing silica held in solution in the water.

"Since the discovery of this forest it has been visited by many Europeans in Cairo, and English travelers, and to geologists especially it is well worthy of a visit. It may easily be reached from the Great Pyramid, either by donkey, camel or horse, and is distant under three hours from it—a journey which in the winter may with comfort be accomplished in one day from Cairo. Indeed, if his highness, the Khedive, who has done so much for the comfort of travelers in making a magnificent road to the pyramids, were to extend it for some half mile further through the tract of soft sand, carriages could easily drive all the way to the Kom el Khashob. The locality is now well known to the Pyramid Arabs, and most able and intelligent guides will be found in All Dopree, Omar or others of this Bedouin tribe."—London Nature.

"HUMPH!" said an Englishman to a Scotchman, as they were walking over the fields, "oats are all very well in their way, but in England we feed them to our horses, while here they are food for men."

"Ay, ay!" said the Scotchman, "an' just see what fine horses there are in England, and what fine men we have in Scotland!"

IN MEDITATION, those who begin heavenly thoughts and prosecute them not are like those which kindle a fire under green wood, and leave it so soon as it begins to flame.

The Jesuits Conspirators.

Catholicism is a religion; and under the law of religious equality we are bound as citizens to treat it as we would any other religion, giving it free course and fair share in all the advantages of the State. As Christians we are bound to regard it with charity, and to overcome it not with evil, but with good. But Jesuitism is not religion; Jesuitism is, and always was, conspiracy. It conspired of old with Catholic despots for the overthrow of Protestant governments, and of the liberty in which Protestantism has its being. It conspires with factions for the same purpose now. When Bismarck expelled the Jesuits, we are told that he cruelly banished a set of pious men, entirely engaged in performing the offices of religion, ministering to the sick and educating the poor. In which of these pious offices were the Jesuits engaged when they secured by their intrigues the arms of Philip the Second, and prepared the way in England for the Armada; when they dictated to Louis the Fourteenth the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, and the elimination of the French Protestants; when they instilled into English Catholics the treasonable sentiments which led to the conspiracy of Guy Fawkes; when they filled the Swiss Confederation with malignant jealousies, brought it at last to civil war, and compelled a republic, in which Catholics and Protestants have long dwelt together in peace, to send the order over the frontier; when the other day they instigated the French invasion of Germany, for the purpose of destroying a great Protestant power? Those machinations against German unity which they were continuing to carry on, and which brought down Bismarck's heavy hand upon the authors of them; did they belong to the duty of performing religious offices, or of educating the poor, or of ministering to the sick? Against conspiracy society has a right to guard itself, though it has none to interfere with the exercise or the propagation of any religion. The main object of a Jesuit university would not be education, but intrigue. It would be a center, established by the nation, of conspiracy against the national life. The British Parliament is bound to refuse its sanction to the establishment of a Jesuit university, or a university to which Jesuits are to be admitted; so is any Canadian legislature, and the Dominion Parliament, if the question ever comes before it, as the case of the New Brunswick school act shows that such questions may be.—Goldwin Smith, in Fortnightly Review.

No More Jacobs.

A good story about sermons is told by John Miller Ross, formerly of Edinburg, now pastor of the Chalmers Presbyterian church, Manchester, England. The pastor of a large Edinburg church being unexpectedly called away for three Sabbaths, was unable to do better than engage, as his supply, a young student from the university. Knowing the high standard of his people, and fearing the weakness of the student, he told him that he had laid upon his study-table three of his own earlier sermons, never preached to that people, and that he was welcome to make any use of them he pleased. On the first Sabbath morning the young minister looked the sermons over, and, being much delighted with one on the text, "Jacob was a plain man, dwelling in tents" (Genesis xxv, 27,) resolved, in accordance with the hopes of the absent pastor, to preach it instead of his own. The people were much delighted, and not a little surprised, to get such good food from the young minister, who, leaving the sermon where he found it, went his way to return, as he supposed, and take another from the same pile the next Sabbath. Alas! as Scotland's Burns bemoans, so did it befall our young Scotlander, who, being sick, was in his turn obliged to procure a substitute, to whom he forgot to mention the three sermons. They, however, attracted the eye, and won a careful perusal of the second supply, who, unconsciously acquiescing in the wise judgment of his predecessor, announced to an appreciative audience the text: "Jacob was a plain man, dwelling in tents." Quite pleased with the sensation which he perceived he had made, the young man replaced the sermon and departed. Yet another substitute, on the third Sabbath, following in the footsteps of those who had gone before, again proclaimed as his subject, "Jacob was a plain man, dwell—" when he was silenced by an old woman, who rose near the desk, exclaiming in broadest Scotch: "Awa' with y'r Jacobs—we'll ha' no more of y'r Jacobs!"—Congregationalist.

AN OLD APPLE.—In the window of the store of Messrs. E. R. Leighton & Co., on Congress street, is exhibited a genuine curiosity, perhaps the only one of its kind and age extant—an apple one hundred years old—the property of Mr. Henry Shute, of this city. It was picked up in the year 1772, the outside being carefully stuck with whole cloves, so that no part of the fruit could be discovered peeping through. The grandfather of Mr. Shute, who died at the age of eighty-five years, came into possession of this curiosity when quite a youth, and at his decease it descended to the present generation. The flavor of the cloves even is still quite perceptible, while the apple itself is plump and solid. Looking at this remarkable specimen of fruit preservation, we are reminded that a gentleman of this city has a doughnut which is within a few weeks of being twelve years old, kept as a relic of a donation party held in Stratham in 1861. It is in good condition, and with care must last for many years yet.—Portsmouth Journal.

LONG-LIVED ARTISTS.—A dictionary of 1,200 old artists contains the names of more than 800 who lived beyond 60 years. Titian was 99 years old, and died of the plague then. Bellini was 90 years old, and Murillo 72 years old at death.

Simplicity of Nature.

The extreme simplicity of the ultimate elements which constitute all organized beings, and the endless variety of the proximate elements, arising from different combinations of the former, which serve to build up the animal and vegetable tissues, may well be cited as an illustration of the infinite wisdom by which such arrangements were established. The four elements, oxygen, hydrogen, nitrogen and carbon, constitute the bulk of organization. The chief constituents of vegetable tissue are oxygen, hydrogen and carbon, or, it may be said, water and carbon, as the oxygen and hydrogen exist in the same proportion in water; and various proportions of these constitute the proximate elements of vegetable tissue, such as starch, gum, sugar, glucose and lignine, or woody fiber, as may be shown by pouring a little strong sulphuric acid on a small portion of sugar; the acid will, by its stronger affinity, abstract the water and leave a black, spongy mass of carbon behind. Nitrogen enters sparingly into the constitution of the vegetable tissues, but almost universally into that of the animal tissues. The power of vegetable life in combining the inorganic elements, and thus preparing them for a higher state of organization in animal development, may likewise be noticed; but this power is wholly wanting in animals. Thus an important function may be ascribed to some of the humblest members of the animal economy; the despised earth-worm, for example, is employed in continually reclaiming to a higher state of organization the effete vegetable matters on which it feeds, that are fast relapsing to the inorganic world.

One cannot but be struck by the simplicity of the arrangement by which carbon and water—elements of both earth and air—are combined into the various materials of vegetable tissue; and, moreover, that these proximate elements are so readily interchangeable by merely slight variations in the relative proportions of carbon and water; as, for example, the conversion of starch into sugar by the agency of warmth and moisture only, in the process of converting barley into malt, and of acid into sugar in the ripening of fruit. It may also be stated that while animals are incapable of combining for their own nutrition the inorganic elements, they are capable of assimilating and drawing nutriment from those elements when already combined in the formation of vegetable tissues. And the same simplicity of construction, but variety in design, marks the building up of animal tissues; they are mostly slight modifications of a basis called proteln, which is composed of oxygen, hydrogen, nitrogen, and oxygen in certain definite proportions.

As remarkable compensatory actions, it may be stated that the combustion of carbon, or, in other words, its conversion into carbonic acid by combination with oxygen, is the chief source of that heat which is essential to the due discharge of the functions of the higher animals; while, on the other hand, the reduction of carbonic acid, and the corresponding evolution of oxygen, is constantly going on in the development of the vegetable kingdom.—Charles Brooke, in Faith and Free Thought.

FACTS IN NATURAL HISTORY.—The rattlesnake finds a superior foe in the deer and black snake. Whenever a buck discovers a rattlesnake in a situation which invites attack, he loses no time in preparing for battle. He makes up within ten or twelve feet of the snake, then leaps forward and aims to sever the body of the snake with his sharp, bifurcated hoofs. The first onset is most commonly successful, but, if otherwise, the buck repeats the trial until he cuts the snake in twain. The black snake is also more than an equal competitor against the rattlesnake. Such is its celerity, both in running and entwining itself around its victim, that the rattlesnake has no way of escaping from its fatal embrace. When the black and rattlesnake are about to meet for battle, the former darts forward at the height of its speed, and strikes at the back of the neck of the latter with unerring certainty, leaving a foot or two of the upper part of the body at liberty. In an instant he encircles him within five or six folds; he then stops and looks the strangled foe in the face, to ascertain the effect produced upon his corseted body. If he shows signs of life, the coils are multiplied and the screws tightened, the operator all the while watching the countenance of the victim. Thus the two remain thirty or forty minutes; the executioner then slackens one coil, noticing at the same time whether any signs of life appear; if so, the coil is resumed and retained until the incarcerated wretch is completely dead. The moccasin snake is killed the same way.

THE following legend relates how a certain Grand Duke of Florence built a bridge without expense to the State: The Grand Duke issued a proclamation that every beggar who would appear in the grand plaza at a certain designated time should be provided with a new suit of clothes free of cost. At the appointed hour all the beggars of the city assembled, whereupon the officers caused each avenue of the public square to be closed, and then compelled the beggars to strip off their old clothes, and gave each one, according to promise, a new suit. In the old clothes thus collected enough money was found concealed to build a beautiful bridge over the Arno, still called the Beggars' Bridge.

TO THE assertion that Buddhism is equal if not superior to the religion of Jesus, Wendell Phillips replied: "To all this the answer is, India, past and present. Asiatic civilization has failed from no lack of intellectual vigor or development. The force wanting was a spiritual one. Body and brain, without soul, Asia rotted away. From Confucius to Cicero there is light enough, but no heat."

Religious Intelligence.

THE Roman Catholic Seminary of Foreign Missions in Paris sends for 15 missionaries to send to Japan.

NINE hundred and ninety-three home missionaries of the Presbyterian Home Mission Board averaged salaries of $277.

AN ASSEMBLY of Sunday-school teachers was recently held at Nimes, France, when it was reported that there were 950 Sunday schools in the republic.

THE pioneer party of the Oriental Topographical Corps from New York, engaged in the exploration of the Bible lands, have gone from Egypt to Syria and Asia Minor.

BISHOP'S COLLEGE, at Calcutta, belonging to the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, is giving ten natives a Christian education, at an expense of £2,000 per year.

THE Sunday School Board reports that in the Southern States the Baptists have 4,535 schools, 26,690 officers and teachers, 310,000 scholars, 3,277 scholars baptized, and $30,500 in contributions to the Sunday school work.

THE receipts of the American Board for April were $35,920, and thus far during the present financial year, $248,490.50, an advance of a little more than $5,000 over the receipts of last year during the same period.

AN ALABAMA PAPER.—During the session of the Southern Baptist Convention at Mobile the Alabama delegation had several private meetings, and finally decided to establish a weekly organ to be published in Mobile, with a stock capital of $10,000.

ARCHBISHOP PURCELL, of Cincinnati, has laid down a rule especially aimed at trade unions, that no Roman Catholic can unite with any association requiring an oath as a condition of membership; and the sacrament of communion is refused throughout his diocese to Crispins and all such.

AT COLOGNE, ITALY, the Old Catholics have elected Prof. Reinkens bishop. Eighty-two heads of religious orders in Rome have signed a document protesting against the bill for the suppression of religious corporations, and appealing to "the Pope, the law of nations and to God."

REV. S. S. SCHMUCKER, of the German Reformed Church, has published an elaborate plan of Christian union, the leading feature of which is the formation of a General Assembly, in which each denomination shall be represented by at least five delegates, the authority of the Assembly being simply advisory.

THE Southern Presbyterian General Assembly, at Little Rock, Arkansas, adjourned on Saturday, May 24. No definite action was taken in relation to an organic union, but the general sentiment was clearly in favor of uniting with the Reformed Church in America, rather than with any other body of Presbyterians.

THE London papers state that the clergy and Jesuits of Belgium are making great efforts to organize a pilgrimage into the heart of France to the celebrated shrine at Paray-le-moulal, there to pray for the restoration of the temporal power of the Pope. Each province of the realm is also invited to dedicate a banner to Our Lady of the Sacred Heart.

THE reports from the Liberia Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church, which held its session at Robertsport, January 29, have come to hand. The statistics show 100 probationers, 2,000 members, 44 local preachers, 100 deaths, 25 churches, valued at $11,975; six parsonages, valued at $8,000; 26 Sunday-schools, 221 officers and teachers, 1,200 scholars, 722 volumes in library.—Missionary Advocate.

THE budget of benevolence reported to the Presbyterian General Assembly (North) by a committee, of which Mr. John Taylor Johnson is chairman, and unanimously adopted, is as follows: Foreign missions, $600,000; home missions, $352,500; sustentation, $82,500; education, $105,000; church erection, $120,000; freedmen, $75,000; publication, $75,000; ministerial relief, $90,000. Total, $1,500,000.

LARGE CHURCH.—Mr. Spurgeon's church in London now numbers 4,417 members. During the past year it has formed one new church by colonizing. Five hundred and seventy-one members have been added within the year to the present church, and 263 have been removed by death, emigration and change of residence, making the net gain for the year 308. Connected with the church are almshouses for aged women, members of the church.

ABOUT two-thirds of the immense debt of the American Presbyterian Board, $128,695, has been provided for by pledges given at the General Assembly. The entire debt will be divided among the presbyteries, and they expected to meet it. It is greatly to be hoped that the effort to meet this debt will not cripple the regular contributions for current expenses. The debt is probably due to efforts for new causes—jubilee fund, sustentation, etc. We are glad that no other foreign missionary board is now seriously in debt.

CANON LIGHTFOOT made an address at the anniversary of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, in which he sought to show, by historical proof, that recent allegations of the failure of missions were "as unreasonable as they were faithless." Comparing the position of Christianity in the middle of the third century with its position now, he contended, upon the basis of various statistics, that whereas, in the middle of the third century, the proportion of professed Christians to the population of the earth was about one in 150, the proportion now was about one in five.

MRS. JENNIE F. WILLING, on the seventh ultimo, closed a series of revival meetings at Springfield, Missouri, which lasted ten days, and resulted in about 40 conversions and 20 persons entering into the higher life. Mrs. Willing is equally felicitous in promoting the spirituality of the church and leading sinners to Christ. Her services were largely attended to the last, and her sermons listened to with marked interest and profit. Mrs. Dr. Boyle, a Southern Methodist of St. Louis, was also there, and rendered efficient service in promoting the revivals.

MISSIONARY ITEMS.—All the educated Japanese can read the Chinese Bible, and there are over 500 copies of that translation already in the hands of the people. The work in Madagascar was never more prosperous. Greatly has the gospel triumphed there; they come to Jesus by thousands. The number of converts in the Protestant missions of the world is computed at 1,334,993. The number of missionaries and native clergy in the mission-field is 2,176. Five new missionaries have been appointed to the foreign field by the American Baptist Missionary Society. Rev. D. W. Thomas, for eleven years a missionary in India, has arrived in this country, where he will stay some time in recruiting his health.

RITUALISM IN MASSACHUSETTS.—In the recent meeting to elect a bishop Dr. DeKovan used the following language: "I believe in (and this will be printed to-morrow, and I will write it down, if necessary, for anybody who wants to use it) the 'real, actual presence of our Lord under the form of bread and wine upon the altars of our churches.' I 'myself adore,' and would, if it were necessary, 'teach my people to adore Christ present in the elements under the form of bread and wine.' And I use these words because they are a bald statement of the doctrine of the real presence." Immediately after making this statement of his faith Dr. DeKovan received 40 clerical and 34 lay votes. Dr. Paddock was finally elected bishop.

IN THE Presbyterian Assembly, Baltimore, a few weeks since, a Dr. Bell offered a resolution to the effect that "the mobility of ministers be founded on system," the occasion of the resolution being a remark from another member of the Assembly that the ministers of the Presbyterians were staying a less time, on an average, in their pastorates than the Methodist preachers. The hit was deemed a good one, and was received with "loud and prolonged laughter." In further explaining his resolution Dr. Bell remarked that he was in serious earnest, and that his resolution was offered in the interest of a numerous corps of mobile ministers who are constrained "to keep one foot in the stirrup," and who "do not look on the subject as an affair for laughter."

THE Episcopal Diocesan Convention of Maryland, at its late session repealed a canon of the diocesan code forbidding theatrical exhibitions and light and vain amusements. Bishop Whittingham, who was not present, wrote a letter to the convention protesting against this action. He says that the existence of that canon, which is a peculiarity of the Maryland code of lay discipline, "had much weight in bringing the undersigned to undertake the responsibility of the episcopate" thirty years ago. He avers that he has found it exceedingly helpful in his administration, and thinks that the currents of the times require a greater stringency, rather than a greater laxness, in matters of this character. On the reception of this protest it was moved to reconsider the vote by which the canon was repealed; but pending the discussion the convention adjourned sine die.

THE WORK IN ROME.—There are now within the walls of Rome 14 Protestant Christian churches, and between 20 and 30 preaching places, with good congregations. There is also a Female Bible Readers' Society, the members of which visit regularly from house to house, distributing the word of God. Formerly Bibles were given away, but now they are sold at a small charge. This method is far better, because, under the old arrangement, the priests would secure as many of them as possible and then secretly put them into the fire. To prevent this the small charge is made, and the book is therefore more certainly cared for. Rome is now becoming the center of a powerful scriptural evangelization. Already the change is great. Gavazzi, in a recent lecture in London, referring to the zeal now put forth by the papal authorities in sending abroad the Romish workers, especially the Jesuits, well stated that when Africa sent Hannibal to Italy, Rome replied by sending Scipio to Africa and destroying Carthage. The poor Italian told them that Rome was sending out shoals of prelates, friars, nuns and priests of all kinds to convert them from their glorious Protestantism. He implored them to save their country—to send out their Scipio. Let them send the Bible to Rome, and that book would crush the spiritual power there in its cradle.

THE memorial fund of $300,000 for the endowment of Richmond College, which the Baptists of Virginia have undertaken to raise in connection with their semi-centennial, is nearly all secured. Over $265,000 is already pledged, and arrangements are made which will insure the raising of the remainder at an early day. The following description of the manner in which this fund was increased at the recent jubilee is from the Richmond Inquirer: "Dr. Jeter arose amidst a storm of applause, which the gavel of the presiding officer could not control. He said he supposed he was the happiest man in the audience. He proposed to give $500 in addition to what he had already given. Rev. A. E. Dickinson also gave an additional $500. The announcement proved a key-note of liberality, and subscriptions began to pour in from every part of the immense structure. Men, women and children opened their purses; and even articles of jewelry—such as watches, bracelets, ear-rings and breast-pins—were donated. Ladies tore off cherished ornaments without the slightest hesitation; and men were lavish with their heirlooms, piling up their gold and silver watches upon the desk of the secretary, until a pyramid was formed that will ever be a monument in the history of the denomination. $18,000 was raised, and the amount was afterward increased to $40,000."

The True Riches.

Earthly treasures may be regarded as the shadow and image of something supremely desirable, and which the great Teacher has described as "the true riches." The earthly treasure is contrasted with that which is to be laid up in heaven, and in such a manner as to warn against the idolatry of wealth. The unrighteous mammon suggests the true, and the connection is even more intimate as faithfulness in the unrighteous or temporal is followed by the bestowal of the true. Riches are mentioned in many different lights by the inspired writers. In the Old Testament they are enumerated among the benefits of piety, and as the gift of God to his children. Among other excellent things which are affirmed of wisdom it is said that "Length of days is in her right hand, and in her left hand riches and honor." Job, Abraham, David and others were blessed with riches, and their wealth is mentioned as indicating the favor of Divine Providence. In the New Testament we seem to be surrounded by different testimonies, where we hear of the deceitfulness of riches, and, most startling of all, that "It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God." These words might derive their force and emphasis from the fact that in espousing the cause of Christ, then property as well as reputation would have to be sacrificed, and that under the pressure of persecution the rich man, above others, would be deterred from becoming a disciple. Such was the fact in the case of the young man who went away sorrowful; but he went away, "for he had great possessions."

This, however, explains only in part, since the Savior locates the danger in trusting in riches, and elsewhere points out the deceitfulness of riches, and admonishes against laying up treasure on the earth. Paul's language is also adapted apparently to all times and circumstances: "But they that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition. For the love of money is the root of all evil; which, while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows." Is there any contradiction between the Old Testament and the New? As we move into the Christian dispensation has wisdom been stripped of the riches and honor which were in her left hand? The abuse and danger of riches are often mentioned in the Old Testament: "If riches increase, set not your heart upon them," and "he that trusteth in his riches shall fall." The author of Ecclesiastes saw what has been familiar to every generation: "There is a sore evil which I have seen under the sun, namely, riches, kept for the owners thereof to their hurt." Covetousness is constantly exposed and condemned. The prophets charge the people with it as a great sin; and David, conscious of his peril, utters a prayer which we have never heard repeated in a Christian prayer meeting, when he says: "Incline my heart unto thy testimonies, and not to covetousness."

There is, after all, then a substantial agreement in the deliverances of the two dispensations. The trouble, as pointed out by David, Solomon, Christ and Paul, lies in the trusting, the loving, the idolatry of wealth. Paul asserts that covetousness is idolatry, that the love of money is the root of all evil; and Christ explains, while he does not soften, the figure of the camel and the needle's eye, by saying: "How hard is it for them that trust in riches to enter into the kingdom of God!" The teachings of Christ and of the apostles can scarcely mean that Christians are required to take the vows of poverty, and that to be rich is to be guilty of a great sin under the gospel. The hands of wisdom still come to us full of the same blessings she bore in the ancient times. "Length of days is in her right hand, and in her left hand riches and honor." Riches are to be desired, and to be received as the boon of a beneficent Providence. Without them there would be no capital to forward the enterprises of commerce, and if there were no wealthy men, even our religious and educational and charitable institutions would lack support. The blessings of wealth are indeed, manifold, and it is not wonderful that the desire to be rich is so universal. Can it be wrong, either in the pursuit or in the possession, if the heart is kept from the love of money in an inordinate sense, and the principle of consecration is allowed to govern the entire life? The heavenly treasure is the archetype, of which earthly wealth is the mere reflection, and the true riches stamp the unrighteous mammon with a certain dignity and value.

A great blessing, wealth may be, perhaps generally is, a great curse to its possessors. It is a responsibility of the highest grade, and but few rich men reach it. It is a condition fraught with peculiar temptations, and not many who attain it escape the snares and deceitful enticements to which they are exposed. Hence the warnings which God addresses to rich men, and to those who desire to be rich. There is danger in great possessions—there is peril in the pursuit and in the possession. But there is a power of good in this same wealth which we cannot well overestimate, and the only safety lies in realizing this power and developing it to its utmost capacity. It is a significant circumstance that the Savior connects the bestowal of the true riches with the right use and improvement of the unrighteous mammon. Giving is a means of grace, and the true riches are realized as the earthly are consecrated. In the sense of a heavenly reward, it would seem that the true riches can only be apprehended and enjoyed by those who have been faithful in the use of the temporal.

And then we have in the very name of the spiritual and the heavenly treasure the lesson of duty and of wisdom. Earthly riches are good; certainly in themselves they are not false, nor are they sinful; but they are not the true riches. However desirable the temporal, and however enjoyable, there is something higher and infinitely better. Temporal riches are deceitful, they make to themselves wings and fly away, they are environed with peculiar and fatal perils, and with all their fertility of resources in ministering to the comfort, pleasure and taste, they cannot prevent nor heal the deepest of human troubles. Neither do they satisfy those who trust in them, and make them their idol. Except associated with higher ends and interests, the mammon of unrighteousness is the veriest sham and imposition. But it is related to the true riches, even as this life is to the world to come, and as all transitory and dying forms are in the vestibule of the everlasting. Are we more pursuing the shadow or the substance, and are we absorbed in the love of money, while we have bestowed no thought upon the everlasting habitations?

A Danger.

That many will fail to educate their children. These are trying times in some sections, and parents who do not fully appreciate the prime importance of a good collegiate course will, under the pressure of poverty, give up the purpose to send their children to college. Our earnest advice is, let nothing hinder but the absolutely impossible. Economize in every other way before you take your sons and daughters from school. Next to their souls' salvation, it is the thing most essential to their happiness and success in life.

We have a number of excellent institutions in the South, male and female, and the cost need not be great. Now is the time to begin to determine that you will send, and where. Get circulars, correspond with the principals of the different schools, advise with your pastors, ascertain all the particulars and details, and devoutly and prayerfully ask God's help and blessing. Our present distress and poverty are very afflictive, but ignorance added to poverty will be a far greater calamity. We would, of course, insist that our people should patronize their own institutions. We would not send to an inferior school simply because it is under our church control. But we would never think of sending a boy where the religious influences are not decided, and where the professors and teachers are not men of exemplary piety. We would give a wide berth to those institutions that claim no special religious character, and whose commencement occasions wind up with dancing and wine-drinking.

In our own choice of schools we should be greatly influenced by the character of the teachers. Splendid grounds, and buildings of faultless architecture, costly apparatus, large libraries and elegant halls are nothing without teachers of merit and experience. The best faculty, intellectually and religiously, makes the best school. The mind and character of the student is molded by personal contact with his preceptor, and it is of first importance that our youth be placed under the care of those who, by the greatness, dignity and purity of their natures, are capable of giving the highest and noblest development, and the most perfect finish to the mind and heart. If the teachers are men and women of learning and piety, and models in temper, manners and conduct, we can hopefully commit our children to their care and instruction. In any wise, educate the children, send them to school, and keep them there until they have mastered the entire course of a liberal education. We find in the Picayune, of this city, a brief reference to this subject, which we commend to the attention of our readers:

At this season of commencements—when we see and read so much of the interesting exercises and concluding ceremonies at the graduation of the youth of the country, the coming men and women—we cannot but urge upon parents the vast benefit of this training and equipment for the field of active life.

Poverty has overtaken our people and prosperity ins for the time left us. Uncertainty, disappointment and frequent failure attend our labors, however earnest and devoted. We are in the midst of trying times, and the difficulties of giving education to the young are very great and discouraging. But let us fully appreciate the importance of the preparation and do all that may be done, assured that the harvest will certainly be great.

There is no greater or more permanent evil attendant on parents than the failure to educate, and the degradation of ignorance. "Knowledge is power," and the force of the human mind, if exercised, has no limit to its improvement. Honest and systematic labor in the paths of learning and mental achievement often makes men of capacity, at first ordinary, become great. The trained student has the same advantage over the untrained as the practiced pugilist or gymnast has over persons of common physique, without exercise.

One of the greatest dangers of the South is degeneracy and inferiority in the education of the young. We therefore take occasion to impress upon all the grave duty of doing all that is possible in this direction—for the sake of the country, as well as their own posterity.

Camp Meetings.

The season for these meetings is at hand, and we hear many notes of preparation. While perhaps not now an absolute necessity, they are a well-proved utility, and greatly blessed to the quickening of the church and to the conversion of sinners. We need not inquire too closely into the motives and the attractions of these occasions. Mainly religious, as we believe, the social accessories, the novelty, the fresh and healthful change of air and mode of living, and the love and enjoyment of nature, are not things to be condemned.

The institution, though not wholly of Methodist origin, seems to be given up to us, and is now confined to our church. Well, the Methodists have always had ways and methods of their own, and they have generally flourished most where they have stuck to them. We advise that camp meetings be held wherever practicable. Select good grounds, buy them and improve them, and drive down stakes that are meant to stay. Economy should be consulted, but still the arrangements should be on a generous scale. The camp meeting should be for all—the rich and the poor—and all superfluities of fashion and table luxuries should be discouraged. Have comfortable quarters for the preachers; but it is not absolutely necessary to put them all in one tent.

As for the preaching, we would recommend that the fine sermons be left at home, and only a very few great ones be allowed, while the most shall be plain, strong gospel talks, such as the Holy Ghost can breathe upon, and apply to the hearts and consciences of the people. It may happen that all the preachers may not be called on to preach. Some of the best even may be left out where the supply is abundant. Care not for it, but help in the singing, praying and altar work, enjoy the luxury of hearing sermons, and seek a special blessing and a deeper work of grace. For the rest, may he "that dwellest between the cherubim shine forth," and may the glory of the Lord come down and rest upon all our tabernacles.

The Promises.

There is nothing more inspiring to a man than a promise that is believed. In this world of strife and toil, of disappointed desire and baffled energy, of weary labor and weak benevolence, a promise of present help and future reward is the best thing a man can have. And when he feels that this promise is made by the All-wise and All-good "one jot or tittle" of whose word can never fail, he knows that there is nothing equal to it. To the humble, devout soul there is nothing in this broad world so full of comfort as the smallest promise of a good heavenly Father. If the Lord had left only one promise on record in relation to the future of his saints, that one promise, coming from Infinite Goodness, would have rendered his people rich forever. How opulent, then, has God made his children, for we see that his promises of good sparkle upon almost every page of his word! How affluent do those children appear, for life is enriched and made doubly valuable by the vitalizing influences of the numerous promises of an ever-faithful Lord, and their pathway glows under the steady light of a most marvelous love!

These promises are the light of the Christian's life. In some form or other they mingle with every duty: in some way or other they are connected with every pleasure and pain; every joy and sorrow of probation. They give freshness to weary energy. They add impulse to flagging zeal. They impart zest to oft-repeated duties. They throw over all religious obligations a sacredness with which no right-thinking man will dare to trifle, and invest them with a beauty which no sane man will desire to mar. To the man whose ear is attuned to catch the harmony of divine love these promises come, mingling their sweet cadences with the discordant notes of this world's strife, and calling to mind the consoling thought that there is One who sits above the billows and holds the storms in his hand. To the man whose eye is opened to see the "beauties of holiness" these promises come, flashing their radiance down the vistas of life, and attracting the attention to the grand things which they reveal. In the darkest sorrow through which the child of God has to pass these promises belt the horizon with a line of light which, to the trusting heart, says that the sun is yet in the heavens, and a world of beauty and glory on the other side of the clouds. To the man whose soul is stayed on God these promises make weakness strong, bring "sweetness out of woe," create bows of enduring encouragement out of the tears of anguish, apply a healing balm to wounded hearts, and produce a calmness the world cannot ruffle.

What a variety of promises there is in the book the Lord has given his children! Every condition of heart, every state of mind, every circumstance of life has its corresponding promise. If the Christian feels himself without strength—destitute of power to persevere in his course through the ills and trials of life—there is the blessed promise, written by the hand of unfailing sympathy: "I will help thee!" If he feels himself friendless—if he has to sit down by the wayside of the world and complain, like the psalmist, "No man careth for my soul"—there comes the promise of infinite and condescending love to cheer his lonely heart: "I will never leave thee!" And we might go through the catalogue of life's circumstances and draw from the Bible a promise of hope and help for each.

The Christian should aim to live among these promises. Here should be his home. As Adam lived among the flowers of Eden, so the regenerated man should live among these promises with which the beneficent hand of the Lord has dotted and fringed the garden of religion. He should open his eyes and look at their marvelous beauty. He should take deep inspirations of the atmosphere which is full of their fragrance. All the sweetness of life is right here, and the Christian should try to extract it. The higher joys of existence begin among these promises and end in their accomplishment. Here, then, let every child of God abide, realizing these joys and qualifying his soul for the enjoyment of higher and yet still higher joys as the years of life run out into the unending cycles of eternity!

OUTIS.

THE late chancellor of the New York University, Rev. Dr. Isaac Ferris, died at Roselle, New Jersey, June 16, at the ripe age of seventy-five years. With him passes away one of the venerable ministers of the Reformed Church before it dropped the word "Dutch" from its title. After filling pastorates in the Dutch churches of New Brunswick, Albany and New York he became, in 1853, the head of the University of the latter city, where for seventeen years his attainments, dignity and personal character brought to him more than a local reputation, and won for him the profoundest respect.

Los Angeles Correspondence.

MR. EDITOR: As quite a number of my friends in Georgia requested me to give them information relative to the physical features of this portion of California, I ask your permission to do so through the columns of the Southern Christian Advocate.

CLIMATE.

After a residence here of five months I can truly say that I consider this the finest clime I ever visited, and I have been in every Southern State south of the Potomac except Arkansas. The climate is unsurpassed for mildness and healthfulness.

The yearly average of temperature is about fifty-five degrees Fahrenheit.

The following tabular statement is the result of actual observation for 1872, showing the monthly average:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| January | 52° | July | 75° |
| February | 55° | August | 75° |
| March | 59° | September | 75° |
| April | 61° | October | 59° |
| May | 62° | November | 57° |
| June | 73° | December | 50° |

During the winter it seldom becomes cold enough for frost. Vegetables of almost every variety may be raised in winter as well as in summer. I have seen flourishing tomato-vines and beets two and three years old. The same clothing worn in July can be worn with all comfort in December. The nights, however, are sufficiently cool the entire year to require a blanket for comfortable sleeping. The air is exceedingly clear and pure; so pure that frequently the carcasses of dead sheep or cattle literally dry up without putrefaction; while fresh meats can be kept for several days when hung up in the open air. Hogs can be butchered almost every month in the year.

Flowers bloom all the year round. I have been feasting on fine strawberries since January. I sat in my study during January and February without any fire, and felt no inconvenience from the cold. The hills and plains begin to look green in November, and remain so until spring. During the latter portion of spring and all of summer the hills and plains are covered with the best of hay, as the vegetation simply dries and remains as hay upon the ground.

The facts and figures demonstrate the unequaled mildness and purity of this climate.

SOIL.

The soil is unsurpassed for fertility and productiveness, repaying the laborer most abundantly. A crop can be made here with at least one-sixth of the labor necessary to cultivate the same number of acres in Georgia. On five acres one man can make more than a good-sized family can consume. Frequently a fine crop of barley, hay and Irish potatoes are gathered from a volunteer growth. Sometimes a splendid yield of corn is had from a field which was never plowed after it was planted. Some crops are plowed once after planting. As for the mere question of meat and bread, I never saw a country which assures them with more certainty than this. Corn, forty to fifty bushels per acre; potatoes, eight to ten tons per acre; hay (Alfalfa,) ten to fifteen tons per acre; beets, twenty-five to thirty tons per acre; barley, two to four tons per acre; beans, two to three tons per acre; pumpkins by the thousand, weighing from twenty pounds to two hundred pounds each. All kinds of vegetables grow in the greatest profusion.

Lands, however, capable of such productiveness must be situated so as to be irrigated, since it never rains here from April to October.

PRODUCTIONS.

There are raised in this country grapes, oranges, almonds, English walnuts, lemons, limes, olives, peppers, all the fruits grown in the South, and almost every cereal and fruit and berry common to the torrid and temperate zones. The most profitable productions are the orange, lime, lemon, English walnut, grape and barley.

Agriculture, from the absence of a market, does not pay a large per cent. as to actual income. In fact I don't think it ever will be the general avocation, from the fact that fruits pay so much better. For instance, an acre yielding fifty bushels corn, worth $30 or even $50, will yield $500 in oranges or limes. Hence this is no country for a man to attempt to make a fortune rapidly by farming. The advantages, however, in this direction will increase with railroad facilities.

COST OF AN ORANGE ORCHARD.

For instance, I give the following statement, on a basis of ten acres, as to the cost of an orange and lime orchard, from the time of setting out trees up to the time when they begin to yield a profit, some eight years, putting cost of land at $100 per acre:

|---|---|
| 10 acres, at $100 each | $1,000 00 |
| 5 x 60—300 orange-trees, 3 years old, at $1 each | 300 00 |
| 5 x 120—600 lime-trees, 3 years old, at $1 each | 600 00 |
| Setting out 900 trees | 250 00 |
| Irrigation for 8 years, at $125 | 1,000 00 |
| Outfit, wagon, team, etc | 500 00 |
| Total | $3,650 00 |

At the end of eight years your orchard will be worth at least $30,000. As to the first item I will state that fine orange-growing land can be bought in certain localities for $30 per acre.

By proper management an energetic man can support himself and family from the same ten acres occupied by his orchard, until his trees begin to yield an income. The yield of such an orchard will be from $600 to $1,000 per acre.

For fruit-raising this country surpasses even Florida; and to any one desiring to engage in the business I would unhesitatingly say: Come to Los Angeles.

GENERAL MERE MENTION.

The valleys have no natural timber growth upon them. Timber is confined to the mountains. A large portion of the wood is obtained from the live fences, composed of willow and cottonwood, which surround the farms. Both corn and the cob are often used as fuel. Much of the fuel is hauled from the mountains. Water may be obtained by digging wells from six to sixty feet. Though very good, yet it is not so good as that of middle Georgia, but better than that of southern Georgia.

Dwellings, as a general thing, are small and inferior, owing to the scarcity of building material.

Since servants are not easily obtained, the ladies are compelled, as a general thing, to attend to all their domestic affairs, such as cooking, washing and ironing. Yet Chinamen can be hired to do all these if you are able to pay one.

Owing to the level nature of the land the farmer can use all kinds of improved agricultural implements upon his farm, thus enabling him to accomplish a much larger amount of work than where the lands are broken. Grain may be harvested and left stacked in the fields without fear of detriment until the rainy season comes on.

COST OF LIVING.

For the information of those desiring it I subjoin a list of the leading articles of food, with the prices:

Flour, per barrel, $6@7; barley, $1.45@1.62 per 100 lbs.; potatoes, $1.70@2 per 100 lbs.; beans, $3.75@4 per 100 lbs.; corn meal, 2 cents per lb.; butter, 20@30 cents per lb.; eggs, 25 cents per dozen; hams, Cala., 12@14 cents per lb.; bacon, Cala., 13@14 cents per lb.; cheese, Cala., 15@19 cents per lb.; Eastern, Cala., 20 cents per lb. All these are gold prices.

DISADVANTAGES.

All countries possess their advantages and disadvantages. The universal law of compensation must operate in all localities. Hence this country has its drawbacks. It is sometimes visited by sand-storms, lasting from a few hours to a whole day. They are quite disagreeable while they last. The whole atmosphere becomes charged with dust, and houses must be kept closely shut to keep it out.

Again, there is some trouble as to irrigation. Water must be bought. An irrigator must be employed, or you must do the work yourself. Sometimes your crop may suffer for want of water.

Again, communication with the great outside world is not very good. There is but one short railroad running from this city, and it only goes to the harbor, some twenty-two miles. Hence the market for the productions of this country is at present almost exclusively a home market.

Again, society is not so good as in the older States; but it is improving every day. Churches and schoolhouses are building. A purer moral tone is infusing itself into the people. These are the principal disadvantages of this country. They will largely if not altogether disappear as immigration increases and society grows older.

When I take into consideration the mildness of the climate, the fertility of the soil and the variety of its products I can but have a strong faith in the rapid growth and ultimate prosperity of southern California. In fact I already discover presages of the result. Hundreds of letters, from every portion of the Union, are received here from parties desiring information, while immigrants are continually coming and settling up the lands. I verily believe that in a few years it will be almost impossible to buy a farm here.

Just think of it! How valuable must land become when, with only thirty days' labor, it will yield $600 per acre, as every acre in oranges and limes will? True, a large number of acres perhaps may never grow fruit. These are comparatively few.

Would I advise people in the States to sell out and come here? No, I advise no one to do so without first coming to spy out the land and see for himself. I state facts as I know them. I express opinions formed from observation. If I was not a minister—one whose duty it is to go into all the world and preach—I would never think of leaving this country. I see for it a glorious future prosperity, and I would link my destiny with it.

In conclusion I would say to any of my friends if there is any particular point upon which they desire further information, write me and I will cheerfully give it.—A. M. Campbell in Southern Christian Advocate.

LOS ANGELES, June 3, 1873.

ON THE first of July a duel was fought by Colonel J. B. Rhett, editor of the New Orleans Picayune, and Judge W. H. Cooley, a member of the New Orleans bar, in which the latter gentleman was killed. Without passing upon the grounds of quarrel, or reflecting upon the general character of the parties engaged, it is our duty to protest against this mode of settling personal difficulties. We do not see that the merits of any question are determined, or that character is vindicated. A certain sort of courage is displayed in the combat, but not the highest type of moral bravery. On religious and moral grounds we think the practice utterly indefensible, and open to unreserved condemnation.

AN INTERESTING COMMUNICATION, in reference to the Baton Rouge Collegiate Institute, will be found on our second page. The Collegiate Institute is the best boys' school we know of, and we commend it most heartily to the patronage of our people. The students there have the refining influences and the comforts and care of a Christian family, and Prof. Magruder will have none but young gentlemen in his institution.

REV. A. R. WINFIELD, D. D., gave us a call last week, en route to Centenary College, where he was to deliver the annual sermon. The doctor looked well, but evidently worn with much labor, and covered with the dust of three States. We were glad to hear from his lips that Methodism in Arkansas is advancing, and that the general condition of the State is improving.

NATIONS and men are only best when they are gladdest, and deserve heaven when they enjoy it.—Richter.

Turned up Again.

It seems that Horton, "of blessed memory" about Canton, Mississippi, and whose exposure as a "Clerical Confidence Man" appeared in the Advocate more than a year ago, has turned up in Wilmington, North Carolina. Under the name of Charles Wesley Warren he was admitted into the North Carolina Conference last winter, and was appointed by Bishop Paine to a church in Wilmington. Having some trouble in his charge, he set up an independent church, and drew after him some followers. Next comes the exposure and flight. Where will he turn up next? We have not as yet received full details. The following, from the Wilmington Morning Star, refers to events of which we have as yet no account, but is sufficiently intelligible to the most of our readers:

In our issue of yesterday we gave the particulars of the arrest of C. W. Warren on a warrant issued by Justice Cassidey, his release on his personal recognizance to appear for trial at three o'clock, his flight on the 8.15 Northern train, and the consequent forfeiture of his recognizance when called for trial.

When released by the magistrate he had only about twenty-five minutes to make Union depot; so, after making a very hurried visit to his boarding-house, he put on his best pair of legs, and, by a feat in pedestrianism rarely equaled, he reached the train which was to bear him from the ills he had to others, perhaps, that he knew not of.

He left Wilmington with the ostensible purpose of filling appointments to lecture at Goldsboro and Newbern; but he had his baggage checked to Weldon, having no doubt heard that was the quickest route to Goldsboro. Impressed still further with this reasonable belief, he took the train from Goldsboro for Raleigh, and at the latter point took a freight train over the Raleigh and Gaston road for Weldon, reaching the latter place yesterday morning, where he remained until half-past nine o'clock and took another freight train, over the Seaboard and Roanoke road, for Portsmouth or Norfolk, since which time we have received no intelligence of his movements.

While Charles Warren was aboard the train at Weldon, Captain J. C. Borden, of the Wilmington and Weldon road, saw him sitting at a window in the conductor's car. The sheriff of Halifax county being near at hand, Captain Borden asked him if he would not like to see the preacher who had been creating such a sensation in Wilmington. The sheriff replied in the affirmative, when the two started for the car. The sheriff, being the first to enter, looked around and remarked to Captain Borden that nobody was in the car. Captain Borden replied that he saw Warren in the car but a few moments before, and as he made this remark he opened the water-closet and there stood the redoubtable Charles Wesley Warren. Captain Borden and the sheriff then stepped aside, and the latter said to the former, not intending it seriously: "Well, Jim, if you want anybody arrested, I'm at your service." Warren, hearing the remark, and pale with fright and apprehension, approached Captain Borden and said, in a tremulous tone: "I suppose you have a warrant for my arrest, and intend to take me back to Wilmington?" Captain Borden replied: "No sir; I have no warrant for your arrest;" and with this he and the sheriff stepped from the car, leaving Charles Wesley the best-pleased man that ever wrote a letter from Berlin, or "chained up a dog."

After this interview Captain Borden and Dr. Deems, who was at Weldon en route for Everittsville, were standing near the railroad track engaged in conversation, when they saw Warren approaching. Captain Borden asked Dr. Deems if he knew Warren. The doctor replied that he did; had been called on by him in New York; supposed Warren was then coming up to speak with him; and requested Captain Borden to note carefully anything that Warren might say. As soon, however, as Warren approached sufficiently near to recognize Dr. Deems he turned suddenly around and, with commendable alacrity, placed a very large ear between himself and Dr. Deems.

As before intimated, the foregoing narrative includes our latest intelligence as to the whereabouts of Warren the Wanderer.

Concerning the course of this man while in Wilmington, we do not care to go into details at this time further than to publish the annexed copy of the Berlin letter, which has been the theme of very general discussion on our streets. We have seen the original, in Warren's own handwriting, including the signature of D. Rumley. The fact that this letter was written by Warren, in the collector's office, will be testified to by several witnesses. The letter is as follows:

CUSTOM-HOUSE, WILMINGTON, N. C.,
Collector's Office, January 21, 1873.

To the American Consul, Berlin, Prussia:

DEAR SIR—I wish to trouble you to do me a favor, which is to deliver the inclosed packet to the person to whom it is addressed (Rev. George E. Reed,) if called for any time previous to February 4, 1873, and if not called for by that time at your office, to use the inclosed cover to prepay the postage on the packet to the address as indicated on the envelope. By doing this you will assist me in remedying an act of carelessness of my own, and greatly oblige

Yours, etc., D. RUMLEY.

We believe it is generally conceded now by those who proved themselves Warren's best friends—those who honestly believed in his integrity—while he was here, that he will never return; that "the place that knew him once will know him no more forever;" that he has "gone glimmering;" "where the woodbine twineth;" "up the spout;" to parts unknown, or words to that effect.

Charles Wesley Warren, alias Horton, alias "Chain up the Dog," thou art indeed a fraudulent "gem of purest ray serene;" a dead-beat of the first magnitude; a hungry wolf clad in the habiliments of an innocent lamb. You had hosts of friends here who stood up and battled for you with a heroism unparalleled, as long as there was hope; or, as Shakespeare has most beautifully expressed it: "As long as there was a pea in the dish" or "a button left on Gabe's old shirt."

"Old missis married Warren Weaver;
And Warren was a gay deceiver."

But for all that, Charles Wesley, your retiring disposition must ever commend you to those who patiently awaited your coming at three P. M., Monday, in the office where justice is dispensed by J. J. Cassidey, J. P.

Farewell, a long, sad farewell, C. W.; many of us will see double before we see C. W.; but your memory will ever be fresh and green with those of us who recklessly deposited our "fractional" in those enormous "tlles" that were passed around whenever you delivered one of your eloquent sermons in the opera house. "Chain up the Dog." Alas! that chain didn't hold worth a cent; and Charles Wesley now runneth at large, the sole occupant of every freight train that he can find, and the announcer of soul-stirring lectures that will never stir any to speak of, as we learn from the inhabitants of Goldsboro and Newbern.

The next lecture by C. W. will be entitled: "Ticket-of-Leave Man," and the time and place of delivery will be duly announced.

Homer College.

MR. EDITOR: As one of the visiting committee appointed by Bishop Pierce, it has fallen to my province to visit Homer several times since Conference. I must confess being a new man. At first I thought that the condition of the college was deplorable, and I had grave doubts of its final success. It seemed as if it had lost the confidence of the citizens throughout this portion of the State. The new president, Bro. Borden, resolved that he would use every effort to restore the lost confidence and unite the people upon Homer College. In this he has succeeded. Bro. Borden is certainly the man for this people. He is the right man in the right place.

I have just attended the commencement exercises of the college. Bro. Wilkinson preached the commencement sermon to a large and attentive congregation, as I understood. I did not hear it. The sermon was singularly well adapted, and justly received commendation from all quarters. Bro. Evans, owing to sickness in his family, to the deep regret of all, was not present. D. B. Hays, Esq., and B. G. Cravens delivered addresses to the Polytechnic Society—creditable to themselves and well liked by the audience. The latter is a chip of the old block, being a son of the Rev. N. A. Cravens.

The meeting of the board of trustees was most important, as matters and questions of the deepest interest came up for discussion and adoption. Their labors lasted for three days, and with the deepest interest did I attend their proceedings. Truly they are a fine body of men, and seem to have the interests of the college at heart. Their noble president, the Hon. W. F. Moreland, is one of a thousand. The prospects of Homer College are now bright indeed, and flattering. The people, board of trustees and faculty are a unit now; and truly has God blessed us in our labors. The report of the financial secretary, Bro. Upton, was most gratifying, and shows that the finances of the college are steadily improving. Bro. Upton received the hearty indorsement of the board. The faculty was increased, and it is intended to have five well-qualified instructors for the fall session. Most heartily do I indorse the management of Homer College, and I say to all Methodists: Here is the place to send your boys. The total expenses are only $207 per annum.

Brethren, let us rally to the support of our own college. Let us fill its halls with students. I for one shall throw myself, heart and soul, into this good work. Pray, brethren, for the success of Homer College.

R. W. FLOURNOY.
Chairman of Committee.

HAYNESVILLE, June 25, 1873.

THE Toronto Christian Guardian contains a report of the fifteenth Annual Conference of the Wesleyan Methodist Church of Canada. From it we learn that the year's death-roll includes the names of E. S. Washington, B. A., the veteran Rev. W. Ryerson, Rev. Rowley Heyland, Rev. Thomas Hurlbut, Rev. J. L. Sanders, Rev. James Thompson and Rev. W. H. Williams. A resolution was offered providing for the constitution of one general Methodist Union in Canada, and the consequent Conference and several Annual Conferences. Several brethren hoped the resolution would be laid over for a year. The president, however, ruled that it was discussible, and the Conference proceeded to its consideration at considerable length. Dr. Jeffers expressed the fear that the smaller Annual Conferences would not be interesting, and would lose the inspiration growing out of large gatherings. Dr. Ryerson hoped time would be taken to deliberate carefully before so important a change in the constitution of Wesleyanism should be made. He was in favor of ascertaining the views of the quarterly meetings first. Rev. E. H. Dewart could not accept the report without amendment. The appointment of three superintendents without any defined work was objectionable. If a division were carried out it should be into more than three Annual Conferences. Rev. J. Gemley objected to the part of the report which favored lay delegation. Dr. Green was not opposed to an amendment of the report. If it could be improved he should be glad to have it done. The resolution mentioned above was, after much more discussion, unanimously adopted. The resolution providing for lay representation, if it should be desired, was adopted. The telegraphic announcement from the New Connection Conference, announcing the adoption of the union resolution, was received with cheers. On the question of church government Rev. E. H. Dewart objected to the episcopal system of the United States, because the power of the bishops was not sufficiently limited. A resolution declaring that each General Conference should elect by ballot, from its ministerial members, without debate, a president to preside at the Conference and over the Conference committees, was adopted.

Books and Periodicals.

GONE BEFORE. By Henry Southgate. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co., 1873.

This beautiful volume purports to be "a manual of consolation for the bereaved, and a well of sympathy for the sorrowing, filled from many sources." The selections are in prose and verse, and from a wide range of authors. An excellent compilation it is, and well adapted to comfort those who mourn the death of friends and kindred.

WORK. A story of experience. By Louisa M. Alcott. Boston: Roberts Bros., 1873.

A work not fit to be read. Miss Alcott seems to be going crazy about the negro. This volume is full of sentimental nonsense and calculated to disgust people of good sense and true refinement. For sale by Kain & Co., New Orleans.

THROUGH Dr. W. G. Austin, of this city, we have received a pamphlet containing an account of Ocean Springs, Jackson county, Mississippi, with an analysis of the waters by Prof. J. Lawrence Smith in 1853, and by Prof. Joseph Jones, M. D., in 1872, with an account of their origin, attributes and the remarkable cures they have accomplished, with the testimony of distinguished physicians and eye-witnesses. Ocean Springs has come to be a pleasant and growing seashore town, with good society, a neat Methodist church, and the usual facilities of bathing, fish and oysters, and sailing. In addition to these recommendations are the medicinal waters, known, it seems, to the Indians long ago, and now celebrated and resorted to by the people far and near. If any doubt of the value of the waters, let them send for the pamphlet.

WE HAVE RECEIVED the first number, volume 1, of the New Orleans Medical and Surgical Journal. It is edited by S. M. Bemiss, M. D., and published bi-monthly, at $5 per annum in advance. James A. Gresham, the enterprising bookseller, 92 Camp street, New Orleans, is proprietor and publisher. It is handsomely printed, ably edited, and the July number contains one hundred and forty-four pages. We are glad to welcome and commend the New Orleans Medical and Surgical Journal. It is a necessity to the profession in the Southwest, and there is no reason why it should not merit and receive a large patronage. Non-professional readers who have a taste for science and useful information will find it a desirable publication.

WE HAVE RECEIVED the catalogue of Emory College, Oxford, Georgia, for 1872-3. The commencement exercises begin on Sunday, July 20, with the annual sermon by Rev. Dr. W. W. Hicks. Rev. Dr. W. P. Harrison delivers the oration before the literary societies, July 23. The number of students in attendance is one hundred and ninety-seven. The total number of alumni is four hundred and ninety-four. We believe that Emory is now about thirty-five years old, and she is second to none of our Southern colleges.

GOOD THINGS FOR THE YOUNG OF ALL AGES for June has reached us. Littell's Living Age of June 21 has: The State of English Painting; The Sons of Ham; The West Coast of Africa, besides other articles and some choice poetry. Of the July magazines we have received: The Southern Magazine, which has an unusually tempting table of contents. Lippincott's Magazine is handsomely illustrated, and contains a number of fresh and instructive articles. Scribner's Monthly has: The Great South, profusely illustrated, and other articles of interest. The Galaxy has: Views Abroad; Three Interviews with President Lincoln; Lafayette's Last Visit to America; Women as Idealists, and other articles. The Sanitarian, published by A. S. Barnes & Co., New York and Chicago, contains much useful matter, scientific, medical and hygienic.

WE ARE INDEBTED to Rev. Dr. Wines for a copy of the Report on the International Penitentiary Congress of London, held July, 1872; to which is appended the second annual report of the National Prison Association of the United States, containing the transactions of the National Prison Reform Congress, held at Baltimore, Maryland, January, 1873.

OLD AND NEW for July is peculiarly rich in educational literature, and one of the best numbers of the volume. We have noted Washington University; Coercion in the Later Stages of Education; The Specialties, and Traces in Print of Daniel Webster's Work in College.

THE CATAHOULA NEWS is an excellent weekly paper, recently started at Harrisonburg, Louisiana. John F. Marshall is editor, and S. D. S. Walker, publisher. We wish the News a prosperous and useful career.

THE Minutes of the General Conference of the Congregational Methodist Churches in the United States, held at Mount Jefferson, Alabama, May, 1873, has been received.

WOODS' HOUSEHOLD MAGAZINE, published in New York and Newburg, is an excellent periodical. We have received the July number.

GOOD WORDS and the Sunday Magazine for June have been received—both excellent numbers of these always superior monthlies.

LA MODE ELEGANTE for July contains the usual liberal supply of fashion plates and patterns.

THE ALDINE gives us fourteen handsome engravings, several of them very fine indeed.

Camp Meeting.

The trustees visited the Seashore camp ground on Thursday last by appointment. Several parties present and represented selected lots for building tents. The carpenters were actively at work upon the preaching-house, covering it with a good cypress-shingle roof, and others were busy clearing up the ground and getting ready for the erection of tents, for which large piles of lumber are already upon the ground. The trustees are at work as though they anticipated a large and successful camp meeting. May their highest hopes be realized. There is yet room for many who have not reported to do so, and erect their tents before the meeting. Lots can be furnished, of any size desired, to build tents upon. See notice of trustees on eighth page, and correspond with them.

WE KNOW several men and women, says the Independent, the excellence of whose character and intentions has little effect on the accuracy of their spelling; and therefore our allowance for slips of the pen and neglect of early opportunities permits us occasionally to admit into our columns contributions from well-known authors and translators who address their letters to the Independent. But we have found it necessary to draw a line somewhere; and so we give notice that no person who spells Bible with three Bs will hereafter be permitted to become one of our contributors. This rule has caused the rejection of at least one article during the past week, and we therefore print it for the guidance of the literary public.

PARTIES traveling in the North this summer will find the Erie railroad the most comfortable and desirable route. A train leaves Chicago for New York at nine A. M., having Pullman drawing-room cars to Detroit, then Pullman sleeping-coaches through to New York without change. The scenery is magnificent the whole route. Another train leaves Chicago for New York at a quarter-past five P. M. Pullman drawing-room coaches through to New York without change; crossing over the Suspension Bridge at noon, affording the best view of Niagara Falls, and arriving in New York at seven o'clock A. M. the second day.

BINGHAM HOUSE, PHILADELPHIA. Those contemplating a visit to Philadelphia this summer will find the above-named first-class in every respect. It is kept by a gentleman who has had long experience in the business, and knows how to cater to his guests. The office department is presided over by gentlemen fully alive to the comforts of those who are under their charge. The hotel is central, and is delightfully situated. We recommend those visiting the Quaker City to go to the Bingham.

THE SHERMAN HOUSE in Chicago, under the management of C. S. Munson, Esq., is one of the best-conducted hotels in the United States. We take pleasure in recommending it to our readers.

THE KENMORE UNIVERSITY HIGH SCHOOL.—We direct the attention of our readers to the advertisement of the above-named school, located near Amherst Courthouse, Virginia.

WE SEE that Procter & Gamble's EXTRA OLIVE SOAP is becoming very popular in our city. Its quality, we know, is superior, and, being nicely perfumed, we are not surprised that consumers prefer it, and find it has a large sale.

COLGATE & Co.'s new perfume for the handkerchief, "CASHMERE BOUQUET," will be appreciated by all who have enjoyed the delicate and peculiar fragrance of their toilet-soap of the same name, which is so universally popular. jel2 1y.

THE SYMPTOMS of Liver Complaint are a bitter or bad taste in the mouth; pain in the back, sides or joints, often mistaken for Rheumatism; sour stomach; loss of appetite; bowels alternately costive and lax; headache; loss of memory, with a painful sensation of having failed to do something which ought to have been done; debility; low spirits; a thick, yellow appearance of the skin and eyes; a dry cough, often mistaken for Consumption. Sometimes many of these symptoms attend the disease, at others very few; but the Liver, the largest organ in the body, is generally the seat of the disease, and, if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and death will ensue. ## The Child's Corner.

BLIND.

BY C. C. FRASER-TYTLER.

Rests upon his mother's knee,
Patient, with eyes that cannot see.
He hears the soughing of the trees,
He hears the humming of the bees
Among the myrtles and the thyme.

He knows when one has stayed his growth,
Its weeping through the sunny room.
Knows that its velvet body lies
Drawing the sweetness of its prize
Out of the slender lily's chime.

He knows the time for flowers to blow,
What time the first red rose should show,
When the first nest is lined, to hold
Its little eggs; and just how old
The startlings are, beneath the thatch.

But if the trees be green or not;
Or if the bumble-bee have spot
Upon his velvet legs or head;
Or if the eggs the sparrow laid
Be blue or brown, or all to match,

He cannot tell you. God has made
This Willy blind. He lives in shade
Far darker than the yew-trees throw
Over the garden. Yet there grow
Sweet flowers of heaven in his heart.

To us he cannot say: "I see."
Much that we know of, knows not he.
So Willy in a world alone
Keeps 'mid delights that are his own—
He has his garden set apart.

He talks to God, in angel's tongue,
And in his heart such songs are sung
As our dull ears can never hear.
He would not have us drop one tear,
Since he is happy, having God.

Willy in darkness is not sad.
We, who have sight, and all things glad,
Are we as patient as is he?
Father, oh, teach us so to be,
And in the end let Willy see!

Good Things.

I Thought Every One Loved the Bible.

There was once a very clever and learned gentleman, but an infidel—that is, one who did not believe the Scriptures—and he was traveling among the mountains and valleys of Wales. He came to a roadside cottage in a lonely, lovely spot, and, as he was very tired and thirsty, stopped to ask for a drink of water. It was a little girl he spoke to, sitting at the cottage door with a book on her knee. She instantly rose and said: "Will you have a cup of milk, sir? for you are hot, and the cold water would hurt you." He was very much pleased with her kindness, and thought he would like a little chat with her. So when she came out with the milk he said: "I see you are getting your lesson there, my dear." "No, sir," she answered; "I am only reading." "Why, what book?" "The Bible, sir." "What," said he, half smiling to himself, as he gave her back the cup, "do you like that book, then?" For a moment the little maiden did not answer for surprise; then, lifting her bright eyes to his face, she said: "Why, sir, I thought that everybody loved the Bible." And the gentleman bade the child good-by, and slowly rode along. I did not know what he was thinking of then; but years after, when he had become a true and humble Christian, he used to tell of the little Welsh girl, and say: "And I too, now that I understand what the Bible is, am almost as ready to wonder at my question as she was; for every one who really knows it must surely love it too."

WHICH.—"Yes, mother, I know; but then, you see, my good feelings only last half a jiffy."

So said my boy to me last evening, in answer to my appeal.

"I know it, Henry," said I; "but how long does it take to switch off a locomotive on to the wrong track? Once started on the wrong track, no matter how smoothly and swiftly it may run, it is running to destruction. On the other hand, a moment only, and the switch-tender will have put the locomotive on the right track, and the cars will go on safely.

"So with the heart. It takes only a moment to pray sincerely: 'Lord, save me.' It takes only a moment to say: 'Keep me from this sin, O Lord.' It takes only a moment to say from the heart: 'Lord, give me thy Holy Spirit; make me thy child; do not leave me; let me not leave thee.'

"On the other hand, it takes but a moment to say: 'Pshaw! what's the use? I don't care.' It takes but a moment to say: 'I'm not going to be laughed at for being a Christian, I know.' It takes but a moment to drive the Spirit of God away, by simply diverting the mind, which may be done in many ways.

"And so the soul may be switched on to the right track, or on to the wrong track in a moment of time, and either run safely to the end of life by God's grace, or run swiftly and surely to destruction."

Is my soul on the right or wrong track?—Morning Light.

THE BOY'S RESOLVE.—I would like to have ruddy cheeks and bright eyes and strong limbs. But they say that strong drink dims the eye and whitens the cheek and enfeebles the frame; therefore I will not drink at all.

I would like to have a clear mind, so that I may be able to think on great things, and serve God and do good to others, and prepare to die. But they say that strong drink clouds the mind and often destroys it; therefore I will not drink at all.

I would like to have a peaceful heart and a quiet conscience, so that I may be happy while I am here. But they say that strong drink fills many a heart with misery and implants in many a conscience a sting; therefore I will not drink at all.

I would like to have a quiet home and happy fireside, where I could rejoice with loving brothers and sisters and parents. But they say that strong drink makes ten thousand homes wretched and miserable; therefore I will not drink at all.

I would like to go to heaven when I die, that I may dwell with Jesus in glory forever. But they say that strong drink keeps many from entering into heaven, and casts them down to hell; therefore I will not drink at all.

HOW ALLEN PUNISHED ALLEN.—"Allen! Where is Allen?" A moment ago he was playing with his little cart in the yard, hauling dirt to the currant-bushes. I cannot tell how many cartfuls he carried. He was busy as a little man. But Allen is gone. Where is his cart?

"Allen! Allen!"

"I'se here!" at last said a small voice from the back parlor.

"What are you there for?" asked his mother, opening the door and looking in.

Allen did not answer at first. He was standing in the corner, with a pretty sober look on.

"Come out to your little cart," said his mother; "it is waiting for another run."

"I'se not been here long null," said the little boy.

"What are you here for at all?" asked his mother.

"I punishing my own self. I picked some green currants, and they went into my mouth," said Allen.

"Oh! when mother told you not to? Green currants will make my little boy sick," said his mother, in a sorry tone.

"You needn't punish me," said Allen; "I punish my own self."

His mother often put him in the back parlor alone when he had been a naughty boy, and, you see, he took the same way himself.

"Are you not sorry for disobeying mother?" she asked Allen.

"I sorry; but sorry is not 'nuff. I punish me. I stay here a good while and have thinks."

FAITH OF A LITTLE GIRL.—A poor woman, who had seen better days, was observed by her daughter weeping, one morning, very bitterly. "Don't cry, mother, don't cry," said the affectionate little child; "I know very well what makes you cry; it is because you have nothing for us to eat; but never mind, mother, God has never permitted a single day to pass yet without sending us one meal at least, and I am sure he will not forsake us now."

Scarcely were these words uttered when a neighbor called to say that a friend of hers wanted a person to do a little work for a couple of hours, and knowing the distress of this poor woman she made the offer to her. Of course it was gratefully and gladly accepted; and when she returned home to her hungry child with some food, purchased out of the produce of her labor, the affectionate little girl exclaimed, while a tear of gratitude started in her eye, and at the same time a smile of pleasure beamed in her little face: "There, mother, did I not say that God would send us one meal to-day? And you see he has been a great deal kinder to us than we expected."

A BRIGHT DOG.—A shepherd once, to prove the quickness of his dog, who was lying before the fire in the house in which we were talking, said to me, in the middle of a sentence concerning something else: "I'm thinking, sir, the cow is in the potatoes." Though he purposely laid no stress on these words, and said it in a quiet, unconcerned tone of voice, the dog, who appeared to be asleep, immediately jumped up, leaped through an open window, and scrambled up the turf roof of the house, from which he could see the potato-field. He then (not seeing the cow there) ran and looked into the barn where she was, and, finding that all was right, came back to the house. After a short time the shepherd said the same words again, and the dog repeated his look-out; but on the false alarm being a third time given, the dog got up, wagged his tail, and looked his master in the face with so comical an expression of interrogation we could not help laughing at him, on which, with a slight growl, he laid himself down in his own warm corner, with an offended air, as if determined not to be made a fool of again.

THE FORTUNE TELLER'S ALMANAC.—To dream of a millstone about your neck is a sign of what you may expect if you marry an extravagant woman.

It is very lucky to dream that you pay for a thing twice over, since ever after you will probably take care to have your bill receipted.

For a person in embarrassed circumstances to dream that he is arrested is very fortunate, for it is a warning to him on no account to accept a bill.

To dream of fire is a sign that, if you are wise, you will see that all the lights in your house are out before you go to bed.

To dream that your nose is red to the tip is an intimation that you had better leave brandy for water.

To dream of having a great number of servants is—madness.

To dream of a bear betokens mischief, which your vision shows you is a bruin.

If you dream of clothes it is a warning not to go to law, for, by the rule of contraries, you will be sure of a non-suit.

NEVER was a better answer made than a poor Irishman made to a Catholic priest while defending himself for reading the Bible. "But," said the priest, "the Bible is for the priests, and not for the likes o' you." "Ah! but, sir," he answered, "I was reading in my Bible, 'You shall read it to your children,' an' sure the priests have got no children." "But, Michael," says the priest, "you cannot understand the Bible. It is not o' you to understand it, my man." "Ah, very well, yer riverence, if I cannot understand it it will do me no harm, and what I can understand does me a heap o' good." "Very well, Mike," said the priest, "you must go to the church, and the church will teach you. The church will give you the milk of the word." "And where does the church get it from but out of the Bible? Ah! your riverence, I would rather keep the cow myself."

A BEAUTIFUL PRAYER.—We hope many little children will learn the following beautiful prayer:

Father, now the day is past,
On thy child this blessing cast;
Near my pillow, hand in hand,
Keep thy guardian angel band;
And throughout the darkling night
Bless me with a cheerful light;
Let me rise at morn again,
Free from every thought of pain;
Pressing through life's thorny way,
Keep me, Father, day by day!

IT IS SAID that short, dumpy people are more humorous than long, lank folks, on the ground that brevity is the soul of wit.

Whole Milk Butter Keeps Best.

All other circumstances being the same, butter made from whole milk will keep longer than that made from cream alone. When milk is set for cream to rise the peculiar smell emitted by freshly-drawn milk, and which is termed by dairymen "animal odor," is all the time escaping from the surface of the milk—rapidly at first and afterward more slowly.

This odor, in its influence upon cheese, has been proved to be a highly putrefactive agent, and it is equally so in butter. When the top of the milk becomes coated over with cream the odor in escaping becomes entangled in the cream, and remains in it, so that the cream will taste of it no more than any other part of the milk. When the cream only is churned, it does not all escape—a part of it remains in the butter, modifying its flavor and hastening its decomposition. But when the whole milk is churned the cream, by being agitated in so large a quantity of sour milk, the acid of which is a most effective neutralizer of bad odors, becomes completely cleansed, the odor being absorbed by the milk as it could not be by any other method. There are also volatile oils in milk that are so light as to escape at ordinary temperatures. These are detained in the cream in the same way as "animal odor." They contribute to the aroma and nutty flavor of butter. But, however desirable they may be for heightening the flavor, their presence is a detriment to keeping qualities, as these volatile oils in butter first become rancid, making it difficult to keep sound any butter that contains them.

These oils, like "animal odor," became absorbed by agitation in sour milk. So that while butter from whole milk has less flavor and color than that from cream, it has less tendency to rancidity, is more solid in texture, and has a uniformity and a purity of flavor obtained in no other way.—B. L. Arnold, in Live Stock, Farm and Fireside Journal.

Excessive Improvement in Fruits.

The further improved animals or plants are made to recede from the original type the more their organisms are weakened or rendered more delicate, and, of course, subject to more causes of disease. There must be in all such improvements a point at which it were wise to stop. Over-refinement is debilitating. It follows that more diseases take place—diseases of a more complicated character—in the highly refined products of man's skill. The exceptions do not infringe the rule. It is much the same with fruits and flowers. The most luscious apples, pears and peaches of the old catalogue have virtually died out, or have become so diseased and effete that there is no process of renovation short of reproducing by new seedlings. The bitter orange will withstand climatic influences which the edible orange cannot bear. The double Oleander perishes under circumstances where the common single variety keeps alive. So with all things. The potato-rot was undoubtedly another forcible example of that unerring law of nature. The vine probably owes its diseases to that same over-refinement of select varieties; and, what seems to be still a greater evil, those diseases, after some time, attack the more robust organisms of the original types. Artificial means, constant care and improved [illegible] are required to keep up the [illegible] of those products, and thus prevent the scourges of epidemics which often sweep over a district and destroy thousands of animals or plants.—Farmer and Gardener.

TO MAKE GREAT LAYING HENS. It is claimed that there is as much advantage gained in paying strict attention in selecting hens with prolific tendencies, from any breed, as in selecting good milkers to improve the dairy stock, and the hypothesis—perhaps established fact—is one that stands to reason. Every one who keeps fowls is well aware certain ones are greater egg-producers than others of the flock, and the eggs of only such as these should be saved for the purpose of increase.

One writer on this subject says that he is perfectly certain that the number of two hundred eggs per annum may be attained in a few years' time with perfect ease should the object be systematically sought. It is a matter within the means of all who feel interested in it, and one that can be easily tested, without any knowledge whatever as to fancy points. If the poultry flock of the farmer can be made to produce double the eggs usually obtained from a certain number of hens the improvement will be a paying one.—Ohio Farmer.

FEEDING HORSES.—The Arabs, the most careful of their horses of all people, do most of their horse-feeding at night. They say that feeding in the day-time does not impart so much vigor and elasticity to the animal as night mastication does. Their saying is that "barley at night goes to the buttock—in the morning to the manure." They afford water, too, very sparingly during the day-time.

TO CLEAR WATER.—A tablespoonful of pulverized alum sprinkled into a hogshead of water (the water stirred at the same time) will, after a few hours, by precipitating to the bottom the impure particles, so purify it that it will be found to possess nearly the freshness and clearness of the finest spring water. A pailful, containing four gallons, may be purified by a single teaspoonful of alum.

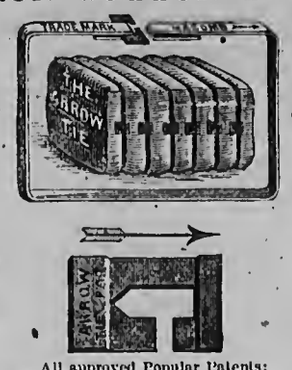
REMEDY FOR CROUP IN ONE MINUTE.—This remedy is simply alum. Take a knife or grater, and shave or grate off in small particles about a teaspoonful of alum; mix it with about twice its quantity of sugar, to make it palatable, and administer as quick as possible. Its effects will be truly magical, as almost instantaneous relief will be afforded.

MACHINERY, TIES, ETC.

THE DUBOIS FLANGE COTTON GIN.

By the Flange the Cotton is kept in contact with the teeth on each side, until the fiber is taken from the seed, without allowing them to be taken up by the return motion of the roll, as in other Gins.

The Flange prevents hulls, stems, sticks and hard substances from being cut, consequently making a better sample out of roughly-picked cotton than other Gins.



We have sold more from this point than any agency of any other Gin for the crop of 1872-73; consequently we can furnish more and better references, and they are warranted to come up to all that is said of them.

We keep constantly on hand all sizes, from 40 to 80-SAW STANDS, left or right. Price, $5 per Saw.

IMPROVED

EAGLE COTTON GINS.

The great popularity of the EAGLE COTTON GINS is established from the well-known fact that they are the most reliable, strongest and best built Cotton Gins ever made. The Eagle Cotton Gin runs lighter than any other gin, thus having a great advantage for planters who wish to run by horse power. All the numerous planters who use the Eagle Cotton Gin will certify to the fact that when their cotton is sent to market it always brings the highest market price, as no other gin can produce a finer or a better sample of cotton than the Eagle Cotton Gins. Over seventeen thousand of the Eagle Cotton Gins have been made and sold. During a period of twenty years the undersigned has had the agency of the Eagle Cotton Gin in New Orleans. He has never had a gin returned or rejected out of the immense number sold. The saw cylinders of all the Eagle Cotton Gins are twelve inches in diameter, which is two inches larger than most other kinds of gins, thus giving our forty-saw gin more teeth, and they are more than equal to the fifty-saw gins of other makers, who use only a ten-inch cylinder, and the same great advantage of the twelve-inch cylinder in larger-sized gins can be easily estimated. Planters who wish a reliable cotton gin, with an established reputation, can purchase an Eagle Cotton Gin with a certainty that they are not making an untried experiment, but will obtain a cotton gin which is indorsed by the oldest and largest planters in the country as the best in use. A large stock of the Eagle Cotton Gins are always kept on sale in New Orleans, ready for immediate shipment. Planters should be particular to state if they want right or left-hand motion gins.
